Mr. KENNA. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York a question. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] who is entitled to the floor is unwell, and that is the reason of the course which has been pursued. I now ask the gentleman from New York whether it will not be satisfactory to him and his side of the House that he may now move the previous question and let it be ordered, and by unanimous consent the hour of the gentleman from Kentucky be reserved till to-morrow morning.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Not to interfere with the hour after the previous question has been ordered, to which the chairman of the committee is entitled.

Mr. KENNA. Of course not.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I accept that, and, with the understanding as stated by the gentleman from West Virginia, I now demand the previous question on the bill and all pending amendments.

Mr. PAGE. Let us know what it is.

Mr. PRESCOTT. There is a suggestion it may not be in the power of the House to provide for two hours of debate after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CALKINS. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask, then, for that consent.

Mr. CANNON. I ask gentlemen to let it go this way: that at the end of an hour, by unanimous consent, the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. KENNA. I understand unanimous consent can control the whole thing.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I understand the agreement to be this: that the previous question shall, at the end of one hour's debate in the morning, be called——

Mr. KASSON. No; considered as ordered.

Mr. PRESCOTT. As now called, and will be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to that proposition?

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know from the gentleman whether the previous question, as he now proposes it, includes the bill with its two amendments and the substitute with its two amendments?

Mr. PRESCOTT. It includes the bill and all amendments and suggested substitutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. All printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Yes, under the agreement already made.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the gentleman willing to allow a vote to be taken in the House touching the method which shall be adopted?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Not the slightest; but I should prefer that to be done in the morning.

Mr. CALKINS. The method is reserved for to-morrow expressly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the understanding as stated?

Mr. HAZELTON. State it so there may be no question hereafter.

Mr. KENNA. I will repeat my suggestion. It is simply to leave everything as it is, and that to-morrow, after the gentleman from Kentucky has occupied his hour, the gentleman from New York shall submit his demand for the previous question, when, under the rule, the chairman of the committee will be entitled to an hour to close the debate.

Mr. CANNON. I shall be content if the power is reserved to offer additional amendments in the House to-morrow.

Mr. KENNA. I did not so intend it, nor did I intend my suggestion should affect pending amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The understanding can only be reached by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAZELTON. State the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands the matter——

Mr. BRIGGS. If there is going to be two hours' debate I want to know who is going to occupy the time? Other gentlemen desire to be heard on that subject; and although there has been a great deal of discussion, nearly every single moment of the time has been disposed of by this committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire object?

Mr. WASHBURN. Object to what?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the proposition: that the matter be left as it is now. The understanding is that the gentleman from Kentucky shall occupy his hour in the morning, and at the end of the hour the chairman of the Committee on the Census will move the previous question.

Mr. PRESCOTT. It will be considered as seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the expiration of the hour the previous question will be seconded, after which the gentleman moving the previous question will control an hour in his own right.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The understanding is that the previous question is considered now as seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Very well, then, if that is the understanding of the House, the previous question is considered now as seconded, but the gentleman from Kentucky will still have the right by this agreement to occupy his hour in the morning.

Mr. PRESCOTT. That is the understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And at the end of an hour, to be so occupied, the chairman of the committee will call the previous question, which it is now understood has been seconded, after which one hour for debate shall be given, to be controlled by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KASSON. Will the Chair permit me to state what my understanding is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. As I understand it, it has been agreed that at the end of one hour from the commencement of the debate to-morrow, which hour is to be occupied by, or to be at the disposal of, the gentleman from Kentucky, the previous question shall be considered as seconded. The rule takes care of the rest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that the understanding?

Mr. KENNA. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This requires unanimous consent.

Mr. BRIGGS. If this is to be under the control of the committee, I object.

Mr. KENNA. It is not under the control of the committee. I hope the gentleman from New Hampshire will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the understanding as it has been stated?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Before that agreement, I would like that the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, should be heard for a moment.

Mr. PRESCOTT. It is desired by certain members that the right shall be reserved in the morning to offer in some form for consideration and action by the House a proposition as to the method of apportionment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As to the method of voting?

Mr. PRESCOTT. No; as to the basis upon which the apportionment shall be made, whether by the old or new method.

Mr. KASSON. I now move that the House adjourn.

Mr. COX, of New York. Has there been any understanding about the old or the new method being adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that an arrangement has been arrived at which is satisfactory to all sides.

Mr. PAGE. With that understanding I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: The petition of Rev. Samuel S. Wylie and many others, citizens of Middle Spring, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, for the adoption of vigorous measures for the suppression and extermination of polygamy in the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CABELL: The petition of A. L. Burwell, praying that tobacco tax paid by him be refunded—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ERRETT: Papers relating to the pension claim of Thomas Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUNTER: Papers relating to the Indian depredation claim of James Whitehead—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: The petition of 320 citizens of Jersey City and of 440 citizens of Newark, New Jersey, embracing merchants, mechanics, manufacturers, and others, praying for the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and the two-cent stamp on checks and drafts—severally to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. B. W. HARRIS: Memorial of the American Public Health Association on the subject of color blindness—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HOOKER: Memorial of the city officers and citizens of Vicksburgh, Mississippi, relative to the improvement of the harbor and river channel at that place—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. G. W. JONES: The petition of citizens of Columbus, Gatesville, Helena, and many other towns and cities in Texas, praying for a deficiency appropriation, so as to render unnecessary a suspension of work for the improvement of Galveston Harbor—severally to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Galveston, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. JOYCE: The petition of citizens of Vermont, for the adoption of measures for the suppression of polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCOID: Papers relating to the pension claim of Peter Fisher—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY: The petition of W. F. Morrow and others, citizens of Columbiana County, Ohio, for legislation regulating international and interstate commerce, and against unjust discriminations in rates by railroad corporations—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of William M. Smith and others, late census supervisors, for additional compensation—to the Committee on the Census.

Also, the petition of citizens of Tennessee, praying for a revision of existing patent laws—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. URNER: Papers relating to the application to authorize a change of record in the case of Lewis Rodrick, a soldier of the war of 1812—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: The petition of citizens of Livingston County, New York, for legislation to regulate charges for railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WARD: The petition of ship-owners of Chicago, Buffalo, Detroit, Philadelphia, and Boston, in favor of the passage of the bill for testing anchors and chains—severally to the same committee.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 16, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I find myself on an unusually large number of committees; and as it is almost impossible for me to attend to the duties of them all I ask to be discharged from serving upon the Committee on Education and Labor and upon the Select Committee on the Census.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont requests the Senate to excuse him from service upon the Committee on Education and Labor and also upon the Committee on the Census. The question is on his motion. [Putting the question.] The motion is agreed to and the request is granted.

Mr. MORRILL. I may say that I shall still be on three committees after retiring from the two committees named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Chair shall fill the vacancies?

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress the report of the board of Indian commissioners for the year 1881, accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 9th instant, suggesting legislation regarding reports from said board. The report is sent with the message to the House of Representatives.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, dated the 8th instant, and accompanying copies of letters from Rear-Admiral John Rodgers, Superintendent of the Naval Observatory; Professor J. E. Nourse, United States Navy; and Hon. John Eaton, Commissioner of Education, suggesting the publication of a second edition of the Second Arctic Expedition made by Captain C. F. Hall.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a letter from the Secretary of War, dated the 11th instant, covering plans and estimates for completing the new barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and for the erection of additional quarters for officers thereat, in connection with the school of cavalry and infantry; also the correspondence accompanying the same.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a letter from the Commissioner of Education, in which the recommendation is made that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for the purpose of education in Alaska.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of D. C. McMillan, of New York, praying for the adoption of a proposed constitutional amendment in regard to the mode of electing President and Vice-President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of the mayor and 100 citizens of Columbia, South Carolina, praying for an appropriation for the deepening and improvement of the Georgetown Bar in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the mayor and 100 citizens of Columbia, South Carolina, praying for an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Santee River and Winyah Bay by way of Mosquito Creek; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of Baltimore, Maryland, in favor of additional appropriations in order to complete and perfect the work now being carried on in and around the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of citizens of Hinsdale and other places in Massachusetts, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. I present the memorial of C. M. Hovey & Co. and some 20 or 30 others, who are among the principal business and commercial houses in the city of Boston, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 630, which is the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] providing for a system which abolishes jury trial on questions as to the rates of duty under the tariff laws in appeals from the collector of customs to the Secretary of the Treasury. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of C. G. Hampton and others, citizens of Detroit, Michigan, interested in the manufacture of cider-vinegar, praying for the repeal of the existing law so as to permit the use of alcoholic vapors in manufacturing vinegar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the petition of J. T. Montgomery and 65 others, citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the joint resolution relating to the Harlem River improvement; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's National Suffrage Association, remonstrating against the admission of any new State into the Union which does not provide that equal political rights shall be guaranteed to both men and women; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a number of petitions very numerously signed, and, I am informed, by most respectable gentlemen of the various neighborhoods from which they come, praying the passage of what is commonly known as the civil-service-reform bill. These petitions are from R. S. Howard and other citizens of Louisiana, W. P. Ellis and other citizens of Kentucky, Elnathan Galpin and other citizens of Iowa, Charles J. Kinyard and other citizens of Wisconsin, Richard Webb and other citizens of California, Dr. E. H. Makk and other citizens of Colorado, E. Crowninshield and other citizens of Maine, Gustave Kooch and other citizens of Missouri, J. Wiesbach and other citizens of Kansas, Cuth. P. Conrad and other citizens of Arkansas, and John B. Brockenborough and other citizens of Virginia. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of the Cincinnati Cigar Manufacturers' Association, praying for a reduction of the tax on cigars from $6 to $4 per 1,000; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of citizens of Indiana, praying for the passage of a law regulating charges for railway transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of citizens of Ripley County, Missouri, praying for the erection of a public building at Jefferson City, in that State. I move that the petition lie upon the table, as a bill for that purpose has already been favorably reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of Thomas W. Howchin and 68 others, citizens of New York, praying for early action on the joint resolution relating to the Harlem River improvement; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WINDOM presented the petition of Hon. H. S. McGown and 56 others, citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the joint resolution relating to the Harlem River improvement; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of citizens of Florida, praying for the improvement of the Wacissa and Ancilla Rivers, in that State. I wish to say in presenting the petition that this subject is of very great importance to the people of that country. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and I ask the especial attention of that committee to it.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3251) authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 30) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 152) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Safe Deposit Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1867, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the bill just reported by the Senator from Minnesota be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. McDILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 41) for the relief of Alfred Richards, submitted an adverse report, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 884) for the relief of certain members and ex-members of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 18) directing copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina to be furnished to said State, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 468) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of Isaiah Walker, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAWLEY. By instruction of the Committee on Military Affairs, who were directed by a resolution to inquire what legislation, if any, is necessary to enable the widows and heirs of deceased soldiers to receive bounties in certain cases, I report back the information obtained from the War Department. It is an interesting and instructive paper, which might well be printed in the RECORD, but I ask that it be printed in the usual way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the report is not in the shape of a bill or resolution it cannot go on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not ask that it go on the Calendar; it is simply a response to the inquiry, giving the information sought for, and I ask that it be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be printed.

LINCOLN MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association, to report it with an amendment. It is a short bill of four lines, and it is important that it should be considered to-day. I hope the Senate will allow the bill to be considered now; it will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that hereafter five of the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association shall constitute a legal quorum, and may exercise all the powers conferred by law upon the association.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That each of said trustees shall be notified by the president or secretary twenty days in advance of any meeting of said trustees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the preamble? It will be read.

The preamble was read, as follows:

Whereas owing to the large number of trustees named in the "act to incorporate the Lincoln Monument Association," approved March 30, 1867, it proves to be impracticable for a majority of said trustees to meet for the transaction of the business of said association: Therefore,

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill, until I may look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont enters a motion to reconsider, which will be noted.

LUCY BURCH AND OTHERS.

Mr. PLATT. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom were referred a resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Lucy Burch, widow of the late John C. Burch, Secretary of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's salary as such Secretary, and the resolution offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] for the payment to Mrs. Virginia Banks, widow of the late A. D. Banks, a sum equal to one year's pay as stationery clerk of the Senate, to report a substitute resolution, which the committee recommend be passed.

The resolution was ordered to be placed on the Calendar, as follows:

Resolved, That the Acting Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Lucy Burch, widow of John C. Burch, deceased, late Secretary of the United States Senate, the sum of $3,048, being an amount equal to six months' salary as Secretary aforesaid.

Also, to Mrs. Virginia Banks, widow of Andrew D. Banks, deceased, late keeper of the stationery of the Senate, the sum of $1,051.20, being an amount equal to six months' salary as keeper of the stationery aforesaid.

Also, to Mrs. Mary E. Manly, mother of H. W. Manly, deceased, late page in the Senate, the sum of $360, being an amount equal to six months' salary as page aforesaid.

The above sums to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. PLATT. I give notice that I shall call up the substitute resolution to-morrow morning for action. I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1213) increasing the pension of Julia A. Chambers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1214) for the relief of Flora Skinner, widow of Gilbert A. Skinner, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS. At the request of Judge Hammond, of the district court of West Tennessee, I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1215) to establish courts of appeals in the circuits, to regulate the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McPHERSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1216) granting a pension to John Hogan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1217) to authorize and enable the Eastern band of the Cherokee Indians to institute and prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims against the Cherokee Nation and the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VANCE. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill has hitherto been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as it involves purely a question of legal rights and the propriety of authorizing the institution of suits to accomplish the ends that certain parties have in view. I can assure the Senator from North Carolina that the Committee on the Judiciary has more than it wishes to do already; but I only call the attention of the Senate to the circumstance.

Mr. VANCE. If that is the proper committee to which to refer the bill, let it take that reference of course. I had an idea, however, as the bill relates to the rights of the Cherokee Indians, that it would properly be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. I will state that the Committee on Indian Affairs have already a similar bill before them and are considering it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that reference. I only wished to call attention to the fact which I stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1218) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Federick A. Garlick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1219) for the relief of the heirs of Albert Towle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1220) for the relief of the heirs of Albert Towle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TELLER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1221) to construe section 17 of the Cherokee Treaty of 1835–'36, and to authorize the President to appoint commissioners to make final settlement of all matters pertaining to said treaty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1222) to restore the trust funds of the Eastern band of North Carolina Cherokees (commutation and subsistence) to their original state and purposes, as provided in the act of July 29, 1848, and to apply the interest of the same to the relief of said Indians, and to provide for their transportation and subsistence; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1223) to create a district for the inspection of hulls and boilers of steam-vessels; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PENDLETON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1224) for the relief of James H. Hamilton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1225) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1226) to provide for the extension of patents in special cases and subject to certain conditions to prevent the same from being a monopoly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1227) to authorize the President of the United States to release parties from liability on official bonds in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1228) to secure to certain meritorious soldiers of the late war an honorable discharge from the service, and to provide for the payment of the salary and bounty due to such soldiers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1229) for the relief of Arlington M. Harrington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 37) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply artillery and camp equipage to the soldiers and sailors' reunion at Topeka, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 38) to create an international commission upon marine signals; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4449) granting a pension to Lucretia R. Garfield; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions," the routine business of the morning hour is closed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After consultation with my friends who are to speak immediately on the unfinished business, we think it is more convenient to have a short executive session at this time in order to refer some messages and so on, rather than late to-night. I move, therefore, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PUNISHMENT OF BIGAMY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, according to the unanimous understanding had last night I ask the Senate to take up now the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. ANTHONY. The understanding applies after the routine business of the morning hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The routine business has been gone through with, resolutions and everything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was understood that there was to be no proceeding to-day under the Anthony rule.

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not so understand it. That is part of the routine business, it seems to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Evidently the Senate understood that the unfinished business would be taken up after the routine business, the ordinary morning business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not question the fact, but I did not so understand it.

Mr. HOAR. I am perfectly willing to take up the bill, as the Senator from Vermont requests, and shall consent to it, but I wish to say that I am not in the least bound by anything that happened when I was not here last night when there was no quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can you tell there was no quorum when you were not here?

Mr. HOAR. Because I read the statement of the Senator from Vermont in the RECORD this morning that there was not a quorum here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BROWN to the last amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, in line 14, after the word "Senate" to strike out "all;" in the same line, after the word "whom" to insert "not more than three;" and after the word "shall" to strike out "not;" so as to read:

> A board of five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of whom not more than three shall be members of one political party.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, yesterday I expressed a desire to assist as far as I could in the passage of some law for the purpose of suppressing the crimes of polygamy and bigamy in the Territory of Utah and in the other Territories of the United States. When I first looked over this bill, I became satisfied that it contained some very grave constitutional difficulties. When I came to consider how much the Government of the United States has to do in the matter of regulating offenses or crimes in the Territories in the future, I found that while it was proper that we should take every necessary step in our advance toward the accomplishment of this end, we ought to proceed with a great deal of caution.

In addition to the people of Utah, we have a population amounting to over 300,000 people in the United States subject to our jurisdiction who have grown up under the system of polygamous marriages, and in whose social organization polygamy is considered one of the essential features. I refer to the Indian tribes. We do not hold these people to the moral accountability to which we hold the people of Utah or the people of the other Territories or States of this Union, for the reason that we do not regard them as a Christian people. We have forborne to enact any laws for the punishment of polygamy among the Indian tribes; we have wisely done so, in fact, as a matter of necessity, because we found those tribes living under a system of social organization and social government which tolerated polygamy and which has attended their methods of government from the earliest history that we have of these races on this continent, and I believe elsewhere throughout this hemisphere. In the progress of our civilization, we shall be compelled to bring the Indians as well as the Mormons within reach of that system of law which is considered to lie at the foundation of our social institutions, and we shall be a great many years in executing our purposes.

We shall have a great deal of legislation to enact, a great many judicial decisions to make, a great many arrangements and contrivances to consummate, for the purpose of easing the yoke, I may call it, of our civilization upon the necks of these people so as to cause them to become satisfied with our system of government and to be coworkers with us in the advancement of all the beneficent ends that we think we are attaining in the course of our public administration.

It is therefore a question which is not to be treated in a spirit of madness. It is not to be looked at as a question which should invoke our sudden anger, and drive us into legislative excesses. We have been too long getting mad about this condition of things in Utah; we have forborne too much; we have too long tolerated the evil in this and other Territories now suddenly to institute very radical measures for its extirpation. Under any and all circumstances it becomes our duty, certainly with reference to the Indians who may become citizens of the United States in the future, and are under the protection and shelter of the Constitution of the United States to a large extent, to move cautiously, quietly, and often slowly in the arrangement of our system of laws, so that they can comprehend it, and we can adapt it to the changes we are constantly working in their social condition.

There is no occasion just at this moment of time for being unduly excited about this business. I think if it was ever becoming in the American Senate to proceed with coolness and quietness and deliberation, carefully searching every inch of the ground upon which we plant our feet, it is at this very moment of time when there is a great cry against polygamy in the Territory of Utah under Mormon influence. It is one of the highest duties of every government in moments of excitement to stem the current of the tide of fury, of rage, or of wrath, and to appeal to the Constitution; to place the people against whom an assault is made or against whom an accusation is brought upon the ground on which we place all other people in dealing with them, fearing lest we might, in an unguarded moment, do ourselves the wrong of violating the Constitution of the country in our attempt to inflict upon other people harsh and sudden legislation.

It was said by the honorable Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] yesterday that this was apparently harsh legislation. He said the reason for it was that the case needed a harsh remedy. If the case requires a harsh remedy, there is for that reason, if for no other, the greatest occasion why we should be very deliberate in approaching this matter with the true test of legislative enactments—so they conform to the Constitution!

It may be that the Committee on the Judiciary do not understand this bill as I do in the seventh and eighth sections as they are numbered in the print; but if they do understand it as I do, it seems to me to be easy of demonstration that the bill is unconstitutional in that particular. I notice that the language of the bill operates in presenti. It speaks of a certain existing condition of men and things. It speaks of a person who is a polygamist, of a person who is a bigamist, of a person who is cohabiting with more than one woman, and of a woman in the same condition. It speaks of persons who hold office as well as of those who are now eligible to office. From the moment that this enactment is signed by the President of the United States, after it has passed the two Houses of Congress, it will operate upon these classes of people, upon the people thus described, and what will be the effect of its operation? The seventh section provides:

> That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

I understand that section of the bill to mean that if a man now holds an office of honor, or a place of trust, or an office of emolument, under a Territorial government, or under the United States, in connection with a Territorial government, when this bill is signed it will operate eo instanti, to disqualify him from holding that office a moment longer, and deprive him instantly of it. Do I misunderstand the bill or not? Is that the meaning of the committee? That certainly is the meaning of the language of this section, there being no words to confine its operation to offenses hereafter to be committed or offices hereafter to be held, and none to suggest such an intention.

A gentleman is said to occupy a seat on the floor of the House of Representatives as a Delegate from Utah who is a Mormon. It has been frequently said that he is a polygamist, that he has a plurality of wives, and belongs to the Mormon Church. Would it be the effect of this bill if it should pass both Houses and be signed by the President of the United States, to disqualify him from holding the office that he now occupies? So I read the seventh section, and no member of the committee denies, I believe, that that is the proper construction. I shall accept the silence of the membership of that committee as an evidence that they construe this section of the bill as I do, that it would operate instantly upon its being signed to exclude that gentleman from the office he now holds on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As debate is now limited, I beg the Senator and everybody else to understand that no silence of any member of the Committee on the Judiciary is to be construed as having any effect, negative or affirmative.

Mr. MORGAN. Neither negative nor affirmative! Then we are left in a state of convenient doubt on this matter. I do not doubt the construction; and I ask the Senator from Vermont if he does not so construe this section that it would have the effect to oust every man from office, immediately upon the bill becoming a law, who now holds an office contrary to its provision?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will reply to that by and by, if I have the time.

Mr. MORGAN. I regret very much that the Senator from Vermont is disposed to treat this subject flippantly. It is rather too serious for that. He cannot disembarrass himself of the incumbrances of the Constitution of the United States; neither can I. The weight of the obligation that I hold to support that instrument would prevent me from voting for the bill when the chairman of the committee does not say whether it means to oust a man from office who now holds one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I beg him to understand that I neither intend to treat him nor to treat the disease this measure is intended to cure, flippantly at all. The committee will endeavor to speak for itself in its own time and in its own way; and if there be any doubt as to the meaning of the bill the committee will endeavor to explain it. The committee is not able so far to see any doubt as to the legal effect of the measure.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall then accept to myself the compliment of not being worthy of an answer to the question which I had the honor to address to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh no; we do not mean that at all.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Vermont does not use words incautiously. He does not use them without attributing to every word that he uses in every sentence its proper and full signification, and the words that have been used in this section of the bill mean, according to my judgment, and no member of the committee has yet denied it, that it is a bill to legislate out of office those men who now hold office who have been guilty of bigamy or polygamy or of cohabitation with more than one woman. If that be the nature of the bill, it is subject to some very serious constitutional objections, such as I think the Senate almost as a body would be prepared to sustain, especially since these questions have been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in several well-considered cases.

What is an office of honor, of public trust, and of emolument? What is the nature of the right that a man holds in an office of honor of public trust, and of emolument? I see a distinguished gentleman before me to-day who is the head of the Army of the United States. He holds an office of emolument, of honor, and of public trust. Would it be held for one moment that for any cause whatsoever the Congress of the United States would have the right to say in respect to that gentleman that he shall be ousted from his office? Would it be held for a moment that any civil tribunal, not being a judicial tribunal or a court of impeachment, would have the right to pronounce him guilty of any crime against the laws of the United States and deprive him of his office?

An office is, in one sense, property; the emolument is a matter of value, and is a legal right.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Does the Senator doubt the power of Congress at any time to abolish the whole Army and every officer in it?

Mr. MORGAN. That is a very different question from taking but one officer and abolishing him for a crime alleged against him by act of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to propound a question right there.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator cited the case of the Delegate from Utah, and said that the bill would disqualify him from holding office, by reason of his living in polygamy. I should like to ask the Senator if that gentleman or any other person living in the Territory of Utah may not put himself entirely beyond the reach of this act, if it has the construction which the Senator puts upon it, by ceasing to be a polygamist, and thus put himself entirely within the power of holding office and voting?

Mr. MORGAN. He might put himself beyond the reach of the act by ceasing to be a polygamist. At the same point of time, however, when this act takes effect, he is described as a bigamist; and he is defined in the seventh section as a "polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman." That is in the present tense; so that the living in polygamy, or living in bigamy, or living in any other improper association exists at the same moment of time that the law would take effect, the same instant the two acts concur. Instantly he loses his office under the proposed statute. What for? He loses it for an act of bigamy perpetrated before the statute takes effect.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not so understand it. If he continues to be a bigamist ten minutes after the passage of the act, as a matter of course the act would operate upon him; but if he ceases to be a polygamist or bigamist ten minutes before the act is approved by the President of the United States, I do not understand that he would be subject to it at all. It is a mere disqualification by reason of committing something which the law prohibits; that is all.

Mr. MORGAN. A man who committed murder ten years ago, until he has been acquitted of that offense is a murderer; and so you would describe him in speaking about him. He does not lose the character of a murderer because the offense was committed ten years before, any more than a man would lose the character of a polygamist or a bigamist if that offense had been committed ten days before. The suggestion made by the Senator from South Carolina would compel us to enter very minutely into particulars to ascertain whether a man had lost his office or not. It might depend upon his mere mental state. Having been a polygamist, and living as such up to the date of the enactment of the law, at what time would it be ascertained, and by what means would it be ascertained, that he had or had not changed his purpose? If you establish that he had been a polygamist, then it would devolve on him to prove the negative, that since that time he had not been a polygamist; and if he could not prove it, that would be a new offense committed under this act itself, I suppose? The act, it must be observed, defines a crime; it defines the crime of polygamy and several other kindred crimes in the same act, and in the very act in which you define the crime you make the punishment the loss of a man's office, and you remove him from his office by describing him as a polygamist or bigamist or person, in the present tense, engaged in such unlawful commerce.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, I should like to ask him to state how, if a man has been married by valid contract to two or three or more women, he can cease to be a polygamist until that tie is dissolved?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know, unless he gets himself convicted and gets a pardon.

Mr. PENDLETON. A change of opinion clearly would not affect the case.

Mr. MORGAN. That does not affect the case at all. Now, how easy it would be for the committee to place words in that section, if it desired to do so, to make its meaning entirely clear that this act shall not be held to operate on persons who have been heretofore guilty of polygamy, bigamy, or other kindred offenses, but shall apply to punish persons who may hereafter commit these offenses against the law—against this act. If the committee decline to receive suggestions of that kind, or to bring in an amendment to make it clear to the mind of the Senate that that is what it means, what can we suppose except that the purpose is to leave room for a construction which is entirely different from the text itself?

This, Mr. President, is to all intents and purposes an ex post facto law. If I have rightly construed the language in which the seventh section is couched, it undertakes to create a crime and punish a man for the commission of it at a time before the statute itself was enacted, certainly before this method of punishment was prescribed; and, if I understand anything in reference to constitutional law, it is that you cannot impose a new punishment upon one who has been guilty even of a crime against the law, so as to make it retroactive in its effect and in its operation.

When we read section number 7 in connection with section number 8, however, the intent of the legislator, as expressed in these two sections, becomes much more apparent, it seems to me, to enact a bill of attainder, a bill of pains and penalties, which is expressly prohibited in the Constitution of the United States. It is very true that the eighth section of this bill does not expressly give to the five commissioners provided for by it the power to reject the vote of a voter because he has lived in polygamy, or in bigamy, or in any other prohibited or unlawful commerce with the other sex, but it is the intent and purpose of the act that these five commissioners shall have the power to reject a man's vote from the ballot-box who has been found by them to be in this condition of guilt.

Now, Mr. President, I think I can safely affirm, upon judicial decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, that that feature of the statute is unconstitutional. It is not so perfectly apparent on the face of the text of the act as is the other proposition which is found in the seventh section, because the eighth section is very cautiously worded, and while it gives to the five commissioners power to reject a vote, it does not in express words say that they may do so for this cause. That is the substance of section 8, and that is the meaning of it; it is the whole purpose and intent of the appointment of commissioners, that they shall have power to enforce this law against a man by finding him guilty of polygamy or bigamy or unlawful cohabitation, and for that cause to deprive him of the right of suffrage, and to reject his vote from the ballot-box.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate first to the law organizing the Territory of Utah, enacted in 1850. That act prescribed, in section 5, the qualifications of voters, as follows:

> That every free white male inhabitant above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of said Territory at the time of the passage of this act, shall be entitled to vote at the first election, and shall be eligible to any office within the said Territory; but the qualifications of voters and of holding office, at all subsequent elections, shall be such as shall be prescribed by the legislative assembly: Provided, That the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States, including those recognized as citizens by the treaty with the Republic of Mexico, concluded February 2, 1848.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] yesterday construed this as a grant of privilege by an act of Congress to a citizen of the United States residing in the Territory of Utah, and he was entirely correct in his construction of it; but whether that is a privilege which cannot be modified by subsequent legislation is a different matter. I hold to the doctrine that the Congress of the United States can modify and qualify that privilege by additional legislation. I have no doubt upon that point. They can disqualify for any crime that they see proper to make the cause or ground of disqualification, because, as has been repeatedly said by various Senators on this floor, the power of legislation is reserved over the Territories in the hands of Congress.

It is very true that it is not a republican manner of dealing with such questions to deprive a man twenty-one years of age of his right of suffrage unless it is for a cause which makes him infamous; it is very true that the doctrine of equality in the exercise of suffrage prevails under our system as essentially in the Territories as it does in the States. Where we grant the right of suffrage in a Territory to the people thereof it is always understood to be granted upon terms of equality as between each other. It is that which makes the right valuable under the Constitution of the United States and makes republican institutions, in the sense in which I mention them, equally pervade all the communities of this country.

I do not take issue upon the question that the Congress of the United States have the power to impose additional disqualifications. I do, however, say that there is another feature of the law, another feature of constitutional law, the just rights and benefits of which belong to every man who is a citizen of the United States, irrespective of what part of the country he may be found, that protects him against a conviction for a crime, no matter what the punishment may be, unless after conviction had according to due course of law, and by the decision of the judicial department of the Government. You cannot place the citizens of the United States in any part of its domain where the laws of the United States obtain and where courts are organized for the purpose of enforcing those laws, and there deprive him of the rights which the Constitution guarantees to him—the rights that the Constitution has affirmed in his behalf. Whenever he is accused of crime, whatever the punishment of it may be, he has a right to be tried according to the forms of law and by judicial tribunals, except only in the cases excepted in the Constitution, of trials by courts-martial.

This bill deprives a citizen in the Territory of Utah of that right; this bill enables five commissioners appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, without any trial or hearing at all, without information, without indictment, without summoning a witness, to institute an inquiry and to arrive at a conclusion that a person, a citizen of the United States in the Territory of Utah, has violated this law, and that in consequence of his violation of it he must be disfranchised as a punishment. I think it will not be denied that the taking from a man the right to vote in consequence of an act which is denounced in the statute as being criminal is a punishment. You may lock him up in the penitentiary after you convict him before a court and jury, and that is punishment; you may fine him, and that is punishment. By your fine you take so much of his property for the public use in the nature of punishment. You may disqualify him for office, or remove him from office as a punishment. You can deny him the right to vote, and that is punishment. But who can do that, is the question. It must be done whenever a crime is alleged in the statute and the punishment is annexed to the offense by the statute, by the judicial tribunals of the country and according to the forms of law. That is a guarantee that is not given to the citizen of the United States by the Constitution; it is merely preserved in that instrument. That right belonged to American civilization and law long before the Constitution was adopted. It is like the right of bearing arms, like many other rights that might be mentioned here, which existed in behalf of the citizen in colonial times and existed in every State; and the provisions which were introduced in the Constitution by way of amendment, as well as those in the original instrument, which stand for the protection of these rights, were mere guarantees of an existing right and were not the creators of the right itself.

It has been a right of an American citizen during all the colonial period, and it is a right in every State also, and so it is a right in every part of the territory of the United States over which the Federal Government has exclusive jurisdiction, that the citizen, when he is confronted with a crime and punishment as the result of his guilt, if it is to be affixed upon him, has a constitutional right to trial by due process of law and by judicial authority. This bill takes that right away. Is it any answer to say that the right to vote is not property, that it is a mere privilege; or that the right to sit on a jury is not property, is only a privilege? Certainly not; because, even though it is a privilege—put it upon the lowest classification that you please—if a statute says that a man shall be deprived of it, if that is affixed as a punishment under the same law which prescribes the guilt, it is punishment for a crime. Then the very statute which characterizes the offense as a crime entitles the man to a trial according to the forms of law and before a judicial tribunal.

Whatever you may choose to declare a crime in this country, I do not care what it may be, the very moment that you declare it a crime by a statute of the United States, that moment the Constitution comes in and guarantees to that citizen that no punishment for that crime can be inflicted upon him of any character whatsoever unless it is done according to the due process of law and through the judicial tribunals of the country. That is my proposition. This bill pays no attention to this guarantee of the Constitution. These five commissioners have the right, as I interpret the proposed statute and as I have no doubt it was intended to be interpreted, to assemble themselves together as a board of review, as a returning board, a board of canvassers to examine the ballot-boxes in the Territory of Utah; and when they find, in their private judgment and upon such evidence as they may think proper to receive, without the presence of and without being confronted with the accused, without indictment or information, that a man is guilty of bigamy or polygamy, they will take his ballot from the box and destroy it, and thereby disfranchise him, depriving him of one of his rights of citizenship, and that, too, not merely for the purpose of rejecting the vote of a man who, under the statute, might not have had the right to vote, but to punish him for the crime of bigamy by taking from him the elective franchise.

That is a right which was guaranteed at the time we enacted the law organizing this Territory; for the moment we put the citizens in Utah in possession of the rights of American citizens within that Territory by the act of 1850, we gave them then the guarantees of the Constitution of the United States, which would follow them in all cases and in all places for the protection of their personal rights, secured to them under the law by the community at large, and to all men who are described in the fifth section of the act of 1850 as being citizens and settled in that Territory.

Two cases have come up in the Supreme Court of the United States in close succession, which I think clearly establish the doctrine for which I am contending now as against this section of the bill, and I will take the liberty of reading something from those decisions to show their applicability to the section upon which I have been remarking. The first was the case of Cummings vs. The State of Missouri. An attempt was made in the constitution of that State to deprive a number of persons of certain rights and privileges of a similar character because they refused to take what was called there the iron-clad oath, who refused to exculpate themselves for having participated in the then recent rebellion. It is not necessary to read all the statement of the case in order to get before the Senate the part of it which I think is applicable to this particular matter. The court say:

> Every person who is unable to take this oath is declared incapable of holding, in the State, "any office of honor, trust, or profit under its authority, or of being an officer, councilman, director, or trustee, or other manager of any corporation, public or private, now existing or hereafter established by its authority, or of acting as a professor or teacher in any educational institution, or in any common or other school, or of holding any real estate or other property in trust for the use of any church, religious society, or congregation.
> And every person holding, at the time the constitution takes effect, any of the offices, trusts, or positions mentioned, is required, within sixty days thereafter, to take the oath; and, if he fail to comply with this requirement, it is declared that his office, trust, or position shall ipso facto become vacant.
> No person, after the expiration of sixty days, is permitted, without taking the oath, "to practice as an attorney or counselor at law, nor after that period can any person be competent, as a bishop, priest, deacon, minister, elder, or other clergyman, of any religious persuasion, sect, or denomination, to teach, or preach, or solemnize marriages."
> Fine and imprisonment are prescribed as a punishment for holding or exercising any of "the offices, positions, trusts, professions, or functions" specified, without having taken the oath; and false swearing or affirmation in taking it is declared to be perjury, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

After commenting further upon the nature of the oath that was required under that constitution, the court proceed to say:

> We admit the propositions of the counsel of Missouri that the States which existed previous to the adoption of the Federal Constitution possessed originally all the attributes of sovereignty; that they still retain those attributes, except as they have been surrendered by the formation of the Constitution, and the amendments thereto; that the new States, upon their admission into the Union, became invested with equal rights, and were thereafter subject only to similar restrictions, and that among the rights reserved to the States is the right of each State to determine the qualifications for office and the conditions upon which its citizens may exercise their various callings and pursuits within its jurisdiction.
> These are general propositions and involve principles of the highest moment. But it by no means follows that, under the form of creating a qualification or attaching a condition, the States can in effect inflict a punishment for a past act which was not punishable at the time it was committed. The question is not as to the existence of the power of the State over matters of internal police, but whether that power has been made in the present case an instrument for the infliction of punishment against the inhibition of the Constitution.
> Qualifications relate to the fitness or capacity of the party for a particular pursuit or profession. Webster defines the term to mean "any natural endowment or any acquirement which fits a person for a place, office, or employment, or enables him to sustain any character, with success." It is evident from the nature of the pursuits and professions of the parties, placed under disabilities by the constitution of Missouri, that many of the acts, from the taint of which they must purge themselves, have no possible relation to their fitness for those pursuits and professions.

And here is what fits this case. A man who has been guilty of polygamy or bigamy may still have a large proprietory interest in the country; he may have and ought to have a very numerous family to protect by his ballot; he has a great interest in the enactments of laws for the preservation of the rights of human beings considered by themselves. It is scarcely to be supposed that a man by a course of conduct of this character has disqualified himself in any essential way from casting an intelligent vote, or that he has lost his interest in the community to that extent that he is not expected to feel any responsibility in connection with his vote. So that the disconnection between the punishment inflicted and the causes of disqualification and the purposes and offices of the ballot were not more obvious under the constitution of Missouri than they are in the case before the Senate to-day. There can be but one interpretation given to this statute as it stands reported by the committee, and that is that the deprivation of the right of suffrage is intended only as a punishment. So I think the Supreme Court justly would be bound to hold that this law would not be valid.

> There can be no connection between the fact that Mr. Cummings entered or left the State of Missouri to avoid enrollment or draft in the military service of the United States and his fitness to teach the doctrines or administer the sacraments of his church; nor can a fact of this kind or the expression of words of sympathy with some of the persons drawn into the rebellion constitute any evidence of the unfitness of the attorney or counselor to practice his profession, or of the professor to teach the ordinary branches of education, or of the want of business knowledge or business capacity in the manager of a corporation, or in any director or trustee. It is manifest upon the simple statement of many of the acts and of the professions and pursuits, that there is no such relation between them as to render a denial of the commission of the acts at all appropriate as a condition of allowing the exercise of the professions and pursuits. The oath could not, therefore, have been required as a means of ascertaining whether parties were qualified or not for their respective callings or the trusts with which they were charged. It was required in order to reach the person, not the calling. It was exacted, not from any notion that the several acts designated indicated unfitness for the callings, but because it was thought that the several acts deserved punishment, and that for many of them there was no way to inflict punishment except by depriving the parties who had committed them of some of the rights and privileges of the citizen.

I care not what right or privilege of a citizen it may be that you deprive him of, whether it is the right of holding office or whether it is the right to vote, or whether it is any other right that may be named, the right of property or what not, if the purpose is to deprive him of any right or privilege as a punishment for crime, then you must bring in the judiciary and have the man tried for the crime before the right can be forfeited under the Constitution of the United States.

> The disabilities created by the constitution of Missouri must be regarded as penalties—they constitute punishment. We do not agree with the counsel of Missouri that "to punish one is to deprive him of life, liberty, or property, and that to take from him anything less than these is no punishment at all." The learned counsel does not use these terms—life, liberty, and property—as comprehending every right known to the law. He does not include under liberty, freedom from outrage on the feelings as well as restraints on the person. He does not include under property, those estates which one may acquire in professions, though they are often the source of the highest emoluments and honors. The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, previously enjoyed, may be punishment, the circumstances attending and the causes of the deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment. Disqualification from the pursuits of a lawful avocation or from positions of trust, or from the privilege of appearing in the courts, or acting as an executor, administrator, or guardian, may also, and often has been, imposed as punishment.

The court then proceed to make a citation of authorities of great value, some from other countries in which bills of this character were passed under which it was held that inflictions of the character to which I now refer were punishments for crime. Speaking of the state of feeling in this country at the close of the late war, of the great exacerbation that existed among the people—some communities were enraged against others, some people against others, some sections against others—the court proceeded to say:

> It was against the excited action of the States, under such influences as these, that the framers of the Federal Constitution intended to guard. In Fletcher vs. Peck, Mr. Chief-Justice Marshall, speaking of such action, uses this language:
> "Whatever respect might have been felt for the State sovereignties, it is not to be disguised that the framers of the Constitution viewed with some apprehension the violent acts which might grow out of the feelings of the moment, and that the people of the United States in adopting that instrument have manifested a determination to shield themselves and their property from the effects of those sudden and strong passions to which men are exposed. The restrictions on the legislative power of the States are obviously founded in this sentiment, and the Constitution of the United States contains what may be deemed a bill of rights for the people of each State."

After having considered the ex post facto nature of this enactment, its operation on existing rights, emoluments, honors, privileges, and trusts, the court proceeded to discuss the other feature to which I now desire to call the special attention of the Senate:

> No State shall pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts.

It will be observed, of course, that that language is made applicable by this section of the Constitution to States, but not to States alone. The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that these restrictions are just as obligatory upon the Congress of the United States as they are upon the States themselves.

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial.

There is the brief definition of a bill of attainder, a legislative act, which inflicts punishment without judicial process. A more perfect definition could not be given. You can neither contract it, nor can you enlarge it, without depriving it of its proper force. But is this bill before us to-day a bill which by legislation inflicts punishment without judicial process? What is the object of disfranchising a man because he is a polygamist or a bigamist? It is not to preserve the purity of the ballot-box, but it is to inflict a punishment upon him for that crime which the Congress feels may be at work destroying the foundations of society.

If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes, in the language of the text-books, judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or otherwise; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense.

Mr. President, it is not only a transgression of constitutional law in its spirit, it is a direct transgression of the very letter of the law.

"Bills of this sort," says Mr. Justice Story, "have been most usually passed in England in times of rebellion, or gross subserviency to the Crown, or of violent political excitements; periods in which all nations are most liable (as well the free as the enslaved) to forget their duties, and to trample upon the rights and liberties of others."

Mr. President, I venture to say that there is no gentleman on this floor who has a more profound abhorrence of that Mormon hierarchy that exists in Utah and some of the neighboring Territories, and no one who feels greater anxiety for its being trodden down, than I do. No one has considered the necessity as more imminent than I do that we should take all proper and legitimate steps for the purpose of crushing out this bane of all civil society in those Territories, this growing evil, which it seems to me if tolerated much longer must overwhelm that western country, beautiful as it is, with the pall of destruction and despair. But, sir, I am not willing to persecute a Mormon at the expense of the Constitution of the United States. I am not willing to go to the Indian tribes where polygamy is practiced and take up those men and inform them that they shall not have the right to life or liberty because they are polygamists; and we have just the same right to tell an Indian that he shall not live because he is a polygamist as we have to tell a Mormon that he shall not vote because he is a polygamist, provided we make that the penalty of the crime and give the power to a legislative tribunal to declare his crime and punish it. We must be cautious in times like these how we employ our power. It is the power of a people who have a written constitution, but they should be careful when the circumstances arouse them to anger, as in that time we are apt to do something that may sap the foundations of our liberties. This is not the time for us to permit transgressions of the Constitution of the United States; it is a time when we should hold up the standard of the Constitution and ask all men to respect it.

In a succeeding case in the same volume of reports, where the honorable Senator from Arkansas himself came forward to assert his rights against an act of Congress to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States, an act of Congress had been passed which was intended to disqualify him and all such persons who had in any way engaged in or aided or supported the cause of the rebellion from the right of practicing law, as well as from a number of other rights which are mentioned in the act. Two acts indeed were passed. The first was not considered to be radical enough at the time, and afterward it was extended so as to include lawyers. In that case the oath that was prescribed by the act of Congress was in substance, as stated by the court:

First, that the deponent has never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since he has been a citizen thereof;
Second, that he has not voluntarily given aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto;
Third, that he has never sought, accepted, or attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatsoever, under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States;
Fourth, that he has not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution, within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto; and,
Fifth, that he will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and will bear true faith and allegiance to the same.

The honorable Senator was not in a condition to take that oath, because he had been a member of the senate of the Confederate States and had otherwise participated in the rebellion. The Supreme Court, in commenting on this statute, say:

The statute is directed against parties who have offended in any of the particulars embraced by these clauses. And its object is to exclude them from the profession of the law, or at least from its practice in the courts of the United States. As the oath prescribed cannot be taken by these parties, the act, as against them, operates as a legislative decree of perpetual exclusion. And exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct. The exaction of the oath is the mode provided for ascertaining the parties upon whom the act is intended to operate, and instead of lessening increases its objectionable character. All enactments of this kind partake of the nature of bills of pains and penalties, and are subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder, under which general designation they are included.

In the exclusion which the statute adjudges it imposes a punishment for some of the acts specified which were not punishable at the time they were committed; and for other of the acts it adds a new punishment to that before prescribed, and it is thus brought within the further inhibition of the Constitution against the passage of an ex post facto law. In the case of Cummings against the State of Missouri, just decided, we have had occasion to consider at length the meaning of a bill of attainder and of an ex post facto law in the clause of the Constitution forbidding their passage by the States, and it is unnecessary to repeat here what we there said. A like prohibition is contained in the Constitution against enactments of this kind by Congress; and the argument presented in that case against certain clauses of the constitution of Missouri is equally applicable to the act of Congress under consideration in this case.

I have read that decision only to show that these prohibitions of the Constitution of the United States are just as obligatory upon Congress as they are upon the States, and the court so held and set aside the act under which the Senator from Arkansas was excluded from practicing law in the Supreme Court of the United States, or indeed in any court of the United States.

Now we have the entire case under the Constitution. I submit to the honorable committee and to the Senate that this bill is amenable to two constitutional objections in the particulars I have named. First, it is an ex post facto law, punishing men for crimes heretofore committed, and to which the punishment now sought to be annexed was not annexed at the time of their commission. The next is that it is a bill of attainder, a bill of pains and penalties, whereby the legislative department of the Government usurps the functions of the judicial, and puts a man under condemnation without trial and without even the due observance of the forms of law. As the act stands on its face, and as the purposes of it are entirely apparent from its whole tenor, I think there could not be a more flagrant violation of the Constitution.

If I am mistaken in the construction of this act, it is easy enough for the committee to strike out so much of it as enables five commissioners to adjudge a man guilty of bigamy or polygamy and punish him by depriving him of the right to vote. It is also easy enough for them to say in the bill that this act shall not have effect upon any person who now holds an office, and who, before the passage of this act, might have been guilty of the crime of bigamy or polygamy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Do I understand the Senator to take the ground in his argument that the right of a person to vote at an election in any of the Territories of this Union rests upon the same ground as the right of a citizen to exercise a profession or calling necessary to his sustenance and support?

Mr. MORGAN. They are not the same right; they are very distinct rights. Indeed one is a privilege conferred by law upon a man who is a citizen of the United States and twenty-one years of age. However, it is a privilege of our republican system which is considered essential, a privilege that is essential to the existence of republican government whether in a State or in a Territory; yet it is a mere privilege conferred by law, by an act of Congress in the Territories or by an act of the Territorial legislature as the case may be, whereas the right to hold property is a right that belongs to every man from time immemorial, and has always belonged to him under all governments, whether monarchies or despotisms or republics. They are entirely different rights. So the right to practice the legal profession is a privilege given by the decree of a court, and cannot, therefore, be taken away by an act of the Legislature. But while the Congress of the United States have the right to annex new qualifications to the right of suffrage, which I do not dispute, I do dispute that when you make a new disqualification the breach of a criminal statute, and then say that five men not belonging to the judicial tribunals of the country may punish him without due form of law, you violate the Constitution in the very act of forbidding him the right under such circumstances or allowing other persons to deprive him of it who are not judicial officers and who do not proceed according to law.

You give to a man the right to vote; you qualify him by saying, "You must not be guilty of bigamy or polygamy;" this is a crime so denounced in the statute, and made punishable by fine and imprisonment. If you vote there are five men selected to do what? To find you guilty of that crime, and in consequence of it to render you so infamous that you are not entitled to vote. In many statutes of the States and in many constitutions of the States men are deprived of the right of suffrage because they have been guilty of grand larceny or petit larceny or arson or burglary or some violation of the voting law; but in none of them has the Legislature ever attempted, so far as I have been advised at least, to create a tribunal entirely non-judicial in character which should pass on a man's guilt, and disqualify him from directly casting his vote at the ballot-box. It is an honorable privilege to cast a vote in this country. As I have had occasion before to observe, every man in the United States who casts a vote must represent at least five persons; he acts in a representative capacity, and has a right to be heard by the people, depending on the manner in which he casts the suffrage, itself a high American privilege, one boasted of by our people, and I hope it ever will be. If a man can disqualify himself by crime so that he cannot exercise that privilege, you say to him, "You shall not vote because you have been guilty of crime;" and then to deprive him of the right of trial according to due process of law and before a judicial tribunal is something that violates the whole tenor and spirit as well as the plain letter of the Constitution.

I am not objecting to your qualifying the suffrage, if you wish to do it, but I say that when you put a disqualification upon suffrage for the commission of crime, you cannot, unless you decitizenize the person, convict him and put him in the legal category of having violated that statute otherwise than by a judicial investigation, and that according to due form of law. No board can be organized outside of the judiciary that can have the constitutional power finally to deprive a man of the privilege of voting at elections in this country, and to cast that particular shame upon him under which he must be disfranchised as for crime. It would be the extremest cruelty to place in the hands of political partisans, a set of men that go into office for the mere purpose of controlling elections, the power to cast the stigma of crime on a whole community or on any individual, no matter how humble he might be, and allow them to condemn men without accusation and without hearing witnesses. There is no man in a Territory or elsewhere where this law may prevail that would have the slightest chance for his character under such a procedure; and all the guarantees of the Constitution of the United States for the preservation of the rights of the individual man are swept down by this broad, this radical statute proposed by this honorable committee.

I know perfectly well that in antagonizing this bill of the Committee on the Judiciary I encounter great risk; and I looked this ground over very carefully before I ventured to take this line of action; but I have not been able to reconcile my conscience to the support of these two sections in the form in which they are presented by the bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I propose in the fifth line of the eighth section, after the word "shall," to insert "after conviction first duly had for the offenses hereinafter mentioned in a court of competent jurisdiction."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that there is now pending an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. VEST. Let my proposed amendment be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be read for information, though not now in order. When the amendment pending shall have been acted upon, it will be in order.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 8, line 5, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert:

After conviction first duly had for the offenses hereinafter mentioned in a court of competent jurisdiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary as the ninth section of the bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words. I shall detain the Senate but a few moments.

I desire to take notice of the position taken yesterday by gentlemen who criticised the remarks I then made. My idea is embodied in the amendment which I have just offered. I shall not undertake to add anything to the authorities and the able argument made by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.] If this be not a bill of attainder under the theory of the Constitution of the United States, there never has been a bill of attainder proposed in all history. Never in the darkest days of the Stuarts or the Tudors, never in any of the darkest days of despotism, I undertake to say here, weighing my words deliberately, was there ever enacted a statute more exactly within the meaning of a bill of attainder than the seventh and eighth sections of this bill.

The first question which meets us, in limine, is, does the Constitution of the United States apply to the Territories, or are those Territories completely at the mercy of Congress, as asserted here yesterday by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES?] I quote that Senator's remarks, not trusting to memory. The Senator said:

It merely shows that a Territory in that position was outside of the fundamental law and was in a position to be legislated for at the will and discretion of Congress without any limitation.

Why, Mr. President, with all respect to the Senator from Florida, what a monstrous doctrine is this, that any portion of the territory of these United States inhabited by the people of the United States are at the mercy of Congress without any limitation! Chief-Justice Taney did not think so when he declared that the citizen and the national Constitution went into the Territories side by side under the Constitution of the country, and he said in illustrating the proposition that there was a constitutional limitation on the power of Congress with reference to the Territories as well as with reference to States. He said:

For example, no one, we presume, will contend that Congress can make any law in a Territory respecting the establishment of religion, or the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people of the Territory peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for the redress of grievances.

Nor can Congress deny to the people the right to keep and bear arms, nor the right to trial by jury, nor compel any one to be a witness against himself in a criminal proceeding.

These powers, and others, in relation to rights of person, which it is not necessary here to enumerate, are, in express and positive terms, denied to the General Government; and the rights of private property have been guarded with equal care.

So he goes on for page after page announcing the proposition, which I hold to be self-evident, that under the Constitution the limitations upon the power of Congress must be applied to the people of the Territories as well as to the people of the States. And then the further question arises, which seems to be mathematical in its demonstration, can the Congress of the United States pass such a bill as this for the Territories, it being in the nature of an ex post facto law? The Constitution says in so many words Congress shall not pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law either in the States or the Territories anywhere within the Territorial domain and jurisdiction of this Government. Then what is a bill of attainder? The Supreme Court of the United States has stated it in language so distinct that there can be no question about it. After quoting the clause of the Constitution to which I have referred, Judge Field said:

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial.

Senators, what do you propose to do? Do you give these people in the Territory of Utah a judicial trial? Do you give them the forms of trial or the right to prove that they are guiltless of the charge made against them? I know it is said that this applies to future transactions or future punishments. It applies to no such thing. A bill of attainder inflicts punishment without a judicial trial, and in this bill the seventh and eighth sections prohibit a judicial trial. You destroy the courts, you destroy the functions of every Territorial officer, and you put in lieu and stead thereof a commission of five men responsible to their own passions and prejudices alone.

As the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] said, I know the feeling against any Senator who stands here and criticises even the language of the bill. Inter arma silent leges; and if there be not flagrant war in this domain of ours to-day, all the passions which evoke war are instinct with life and instinct with feeling. I am not here to defend polygamy; I would resent the imputation as a personal insult from any man at any time or in any place; but while I abhor polygamy, while I have denounced it, while I have introduced the two first bills introduced in this Senate against it, I revere the Constitution of my country and the rights of personal liberty guaranteed to every American citizen. I tell you now, Senators of the United States, pass this bill and you establish a precedent that will come home to plague you for all time to come. The feeling that to-day exists against polygamy may exist to-morrow against any Church, against any class in this broad land, and then what this Constitution meant to guard against, the waves of passion mounting high, we shall be told that the Constitution of the United States enabled Congress to pass this act which in its every feature is a bill of attainder denounced by that instrument as against public policy and absolutely void.

Mr. President, the Supreme Court, in the case of Cummings vs. The State of Missouri, from which the Senator from Alabama has quoted, said:

If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge.

What we are doing here. We are acting as a judiciary; we declare that every person who is a polygamist, without trial, without invoking the aid of the judiciary at all, shall be punished in a certain manner. Ah, but we are told that there is no punishment in this bill. We are told that taking away the right of suffrage is no punishment. Mr. President, we in this bill take away the right to hold office, and the Supreme Court has decided in totidem verbis that that is a punishment as much as if a man be convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary.

The disabilities created by the constitution of Missouri must be regarded as penalties—

What were they? That you should not vote or hold office. I know them very well, and understand them very fully—they constitute punishment.

Any gentleman who had lived under that constitution for five years would come to the conclusion that it was slightly of a punitory nature.

We do not agree with the counsel of Missouri, that "to punish one is to deprive him of life, liberty, or property"—

The same argument we hear now—

"and that to take from him anything less than these is no punishment at all." The learned counsel does not use these terms—life, liberty, and property—as comprehending every right known to the law. He does not include under liberty freedom from outrage on the feelings as well as restraints on the person. He does not include under property those estates which one may acquire in professions, though they are often the source of the highest emoluments and honors.

Mr. President, we are told that the doctrine I have evoked is true as to taking away from a man the right to practice his profession, but that it does not apply to the right to vote or to hold office. Let me ask gentlemen to listen while I proceed with this opinion:

The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, previously enjoyed, may be punishment, the circumstances attending and the causes of the deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment. Disqualification from the pursuits of a lawful avocation, or from positions of trust, or from the privilege of appearing in the courts, or acting as an executor, administrator, or guardian, may also, and often has been, imposed as punishment.

Then Judge Field proceeds with historical examples to show that deprivation of office has been in all civilized countries a punishment. In this bill you propose that no man shall hold office who has been guilty of the offenses denounced in this act, and you propose that without any trial before any judicial tribunal whatever. If that would not be a bill of attainder or a bill of pains and penalties in any country on the globe, I should like to know what could be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to know upon the principle he is now announcing, how the Senator can defend the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States which declared by a sheer act of the will of the State that a certain class of persons who had been engaged in war against the United States should not be entitled to hold office, although before that time under the constitutions and laws of their own States as well as of the United States they were entitled to the right to hold office?

Mr. VEST. With all respect to the Senator from Vermont, that question is hardly worthy of serious consideration. That is a portion of the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution can be amended under its own provisions at any time and in any respect. But here is an act under the Constitution, here is a law professing to be passed under the limitations of the Constitution which it violates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But my friend will not forget—he is a Missourian himself—that the inhibition against holding office in the State of Missouri was by a constitutional provision of that sovereign State; and if that will not stand, then how can this stand?

Mr. VEST. But the Supreme Court of the United States declared that that constitutional provision of Missouri violated the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I differ from my learned friend as regards the exercise of any political function.

Mr. VEST. In regard to holding office this decision is clear.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senator will certainly remember that the question there was whether a particular person had a right to carry on his function as a minister of the gospel, which is not supposed in my part of the country to be a political right.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I know very well the Cummings case came up on the right of Cummings to exercise a clerical vocation; in other words, he was a Roman Catholic priest. Judge Field went further and defined what a bill of attainder was under the Constitution; and what was it? Shall I read it again? What is a bill of attainder? It is taking away an office of trust or honor from a man without a judicial trial. He held so in that opinion, and when the Senator from Vermont can overturn that decision, then he can defend the seventh and eighth sections of this bill, and not before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask my friend another question, for we are both desirous of getting at the real point?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then on his principle how can Congress pass—it has not yet passed, to be sure, and therefore it is not a case in point so far—the bill that is now pending on our Calendar, to terminate the official functions of all the internal-revenue collectors of the United States, who now by law hold during good behavior? How can we vacate all those offices?

Mr. VEST. When that question is under discussion I will meet it. I presume Congress can abolish any office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it does not propose to abolish the office of internal-revenue collector.

Mr. VEST. I do not know the provisions of the bill in regard to internal-revenue collectors; but I undertake to say that if there is a provision in that bill which assumes to take his office away from an internal-revenue collector as a punishment for crime, by act of Congress, without trial before a court, it is unconstitutional. That is all I have to say in regard to that bill, which I do not recollect ever to have read.

I declare here that the Supreme Court of the United States has over and over proclaimed that whenever you undertake to deprive a man of a position of honor, trust, or profit, without a trial before a judicial tribunal, by an act of Congress, that act of Congress becomes a bill of attainder and is unconstitutional and void; and the only question now before us is, does this bill do that thing? Its words are plain, distinct, and exact. Not only does it so provide, but it goes further, and provides that on a judicial trial no man shall sit on a jury whose heart entertains one single prejudice in favor of polygamy. With a jury so constituted, with a judge appointed by the Executive of the United States to try all offenders, we are still told that this bill will be inoperative and useless unless we violate the Constitution and say further that there shall be no trial except before these five commissioners. In other words, you strike down what these gentlemen are pleased to term, and what I term, too, an anti-republican Territorial government, and you propose to set up an anti-republican star-chamber in the Territory of Utah. Gentlemen proclaim, and justly proclaim, that the hierarchy which, within the dark chamber inaugurated by Brigham Young and Joe Smith, carry out their ecclesiastical theory to the destruction of both body and soul is monstrous, and so it is; but here we propose to inaugurate another star-chamber of five men, responsible to nobody, governed alone by their own prejudices, or passions, or feelings, or opinions; who can say who shall be elected; who can say who shall vote, and who can pass upon all laws; who can say to the people of the United States "We order this thing." Never in the days of the inquisition was there any more questionable mode of punishment. What is the limitation on their power? Is there any appeal from them? Mr. President, the principle is wrong, unconstitutional, and against every principle that the American people heretofore have been accustomed to revere.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I interrupt my friend again? May I call his attention to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the juror part of this legislation, in the case of Reynolds, even without the provisions of this bill? The Supreme Court of the United States held upon the principles of the common law that the fact of jurors who were called living in polygamy, and that appearing, and they being challenged by the Government, it was a good ground of challenge on a trial for polygamy already. So I suggest to my friend, without intending to interrupt the course of his remarks, that all this bill provides in that regard is really to put into convenient statutory form the essential principle held by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont whether that decision of the Supreme Court was not a decision made by the court when the juror was disqualified?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course it was; that was what I said.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose that decision had been made by a board of Federal officers not in a court-house, would that be a judicial decision?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be a competent decision when it was a question of the right of voting, I have no doubt; but I am speaking to the point that my friend from Missouri made as to the juror challenge clause in this bill; and that was that he thought it was violative of the principles of the Constitution. I only called the decision to his attention to show, what I supposed everybody knew before, that this provision in the bill is merely putting into form what is the substance of the law already.

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask further, does the honorable Senator from Vermont by this bill mean that five commissioners can try a man for bigamy or polygamy, and exclude him from voting because he is guilty of it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Vermont hold that the five commissioners provided for in the eighth section of this bill can try a man for bigamy or polygamy, and on the ground of his guilt exclude him from going to the ballot-box?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The buzz in the Chamber is such that I do not even now hear what the Senator from Alabama is saying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please suspend until there is order in the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. I was asking the Senator from Vermont whether with the eighth section of his bill he holds that the five commissioners who are appointed a board of canvassers have the right to convict a man of bigamy or polygamy under this act, and therefore exclude his vote from the ballot-box?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I most certainly do not. I do not hold that the five commissioners have a right to convict anybody of anything, whether stealing a chicken, or taking a glass of whisky, or chewing tobacco, or violating the Sabbath, or doing anything that may be prohibited by law in any case whatever. They are to do precisely what the constitution of Vermont and I think of Alabama provides that the political officials of those States may do,—pass upon the qualifications for the time being of a voter, those qualifications being fixed by law.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator then holds that if one of these disqualifications is the violation of a criminal statute of Alabama or Vermont, these five commissioners can ascertain the guilt of the party and therefore exclude his vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not of the slightest consequence whether the supposed disqualification violates a statute or whether it does not. It does not make it any better or worse. There may be a disqualification fixed by law for a perfectly praiseworthy act. The political power has a right to say that no man shall be a voter who gives alms, if you please; no man shall be a voter who is not fifty-five years of age, and that would exclude my friend from Alabama and myself both. The political power has a right to say that, and it is not necessary to send it to a court to try our age in advance. The political function goes on of determining through the agencies provided by the political law, whether we come within the qualification; and the nature of the qualification is of no possible consequence to the principle of the political right of determining the status of the man who offers to vote.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont must excuse me when he says I attacked the constitutionality of the provision in regard to jurors in this bill. I did not discuss the effect of that provision. I merely mentioned it in passing, to show that the Judiciary Committee should be willing to say that persons should be convicted of the crime here denounced before the disqualification for office attached, because of the machinery of the law here provided for trying such offenses. They have their own judge, their own jury, their own witnesses, and yet forsooth we are told that with all that there must be an additional provision that, without trial, this punishment shall follow.

A great deal has been said here about the power of Congress over the Territories. I shall not go over that thrice-told tale in regard to the clause of the Constitution which provides that Congress may make all needful rules and regulations in regard to the territory and other property of the United States. I assent to the propositions of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] that the Congress of the United States can under the Constitution impose conditions and limitations upon the people of any Territory. I agree that the statute exists which the Senator from Arkansas invokes in favor of this bill, by which the acts of territorial legislatures must be submitted to the Congress of the United States. What has that to do with the question before us now?

The Senator from Delaware was pleased to speak of my putting up a man of straw and then demolishing him. Why, sir, there are regiments of men of straw already invoked in favor of this extraordinary bill. Who said anything about the power of Congress over the Territories except under the Constitution? What I object to in this bill is that it is a bill of attainder, unconstitutional in the Territories, unconstitutional in the States, unconstitutional wherever the flag of the Republic waves to-day in supremacy. It is a bill of attainder because it inflicts a punishment, in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, without trial by a judicial tribunal. Who gainsays it? Who has a doubt about it? He who says it is not a punishment to deprive a man of office, gainsays and contradicts the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I have read, and contradicts what is known of all men. If an office is taken from me of honor, of trust, of profit, I am disgraced and degraded; and yet I am told it is no punishment! No punishment to take bread from my family! No punishment to stamp my name with infamy! No punishment to exclude me from the ranks of honorable association with my fellow men! It is an outrage to tell me that in this country of constitutional guarantees. What is this, if it is not a bill of attainder?

Mr. President, as I said before, I am prepared for the abuse and calumny that will follow any man who dares to oppose any bill here against polygamy; and yet, so help me God, if my official life should terminate to-morrow, I would not give my vote for the principles contained in this measure.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am very well aware that there is great popular clamor for the passage of this bill or some very rigorous and severe bill for the suppression of Mormonism. I do not wish my position to be misunderstood in reference to that institution. I am no advocate of polygamy. I deprecate and denounce it as one of the greatest social evils. I do not believe it should be practiced anywhere. I am ready to unite in imposing such penalties as we can constitutionally impose within the United States upon those who do practice it, because of its immorality. And yet I am obliged to admit, and we are all obliged to admit, that it is practiced and popular sentiment sustains it among three-fourths of the whole population of the globe.

England has had this same question to deal with. When she assumed the dominion of India she found polygamy there, and it has been there from time immemorial. They did not do what popular sentiment seeks to compel us now to do. The English people did not attempt to crush it out by law, but the British Parliament and the British courts recognized it in India on assuming control and recognize it to-day. Indeed they dare not do otherwise. They can enforce no law in India that proposes to exterminate polygamy.

On that subject I propose to read a paragraph from Allen's India, a book which I now hold in my hand. On page 551 I find this language:

> Polygamy is practiced in India among the Hindus, the Mohammedans, the Zoroastrians, and the Jews. It is allowed and recognized by the institutes of Menu, by the Koran, by the Zendavesta, and the Jews believe by their Scriptures—the Old Testament. It is recognized by all the courts in India—native and English. The laws of the British Parliament recognize polygamy among all these classes, when the marriage connection has been formed according to the principles of their religion and to their established laws and usages. The marriage of a Hindu or a Mohammedan with his second or his third wife is just as valid, and as legally binding on all parties, as his marriage with his first wife; just as valid as the marriage of any Christian in the Church of England.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator if the same book contains a statement of the laws of Thibet, where one woman may lawfully marry several husbands, and all of them be bound to the marital relation?

Mr. BROWN. I am not able to answer that, for I have not read all the book. A Senator handed it to me this morning, but I have not had the opportunity to peruse it except sufficiently for my purpose on the point above mentioned. I will say to the Senator from Vermont, however, that the English Government has recognized polygamy in India by her courts and by her Parliament, and she recognizes it to-day. I say I deprecate the institution, and I am ready to do everything I can constitutionally and legally do to exterminate it where we have the power; but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that it exists, as already stated, among the greater portion of the population of the whole globe.

Not only do the British Parliament and the British courts recognize it, but the missionaries of all Christian churches in India recognize it, and do not attempt to overthrow it where the marriage has already been solemnized. I will read from the same book, Allen's India, page 601:

> The Calcutta missionary conference, consisting of the missionaries of the different societies which have missionaries in that city and its vicinity, after frequent consultations and much consideration on the subject of polygamy as it exists in India, were unanimous in the following opinions:
> 1. It is in accordance with the spirit of the Bible and the practice of the Protestant Church to consider the state as the proper fountain of legislation in all civil questions affecting marriage and divorce.
> 2. The Bible being the true standard of morals, ought to be consulted in everything which it contains on the subject of marriage and divorce, and nothing determined contrary to its general principles.
> 3. Married persons being both Christians, should not be divorced for any other cause than adultery. But if one of the parties be an unbeliever, and though not an adulterer, willfully depart from and desert the other, a divorce may be properly sued for. They were of the opinion, however, that such liberty is allowable only in extreme cases, and where all known means of reconciliation after a trial of not less than one year have failed.
> 4. Heathen and Mohammedan marriages and divorces, recognized by the laws of the country, are to be held valid. But it is strongly recommended that if either party before conversion have put away the other on slight ground, the divorced party should in all practicable and desirable cases be taken back again.
> 5. If a convert before becoming a Christian has married more wives than one, in accordance with the practice of the Jewish and primitive Christian churches, he shall be permitted to keep them all; but such a person is not eligible to any office in the church. In no other case is polygamy to be tolerated among Christians.

Thus it appears that the conference of the missionaries of the Christian churches in Calcutta recognizes this institution. They do not permit their members in the future, or after their conversion and their connection with the church, to marry more than one wife; but they do not attempt to dissolve marriages in existence at the time of the conversion, but they hold that a man who becomes a Christian, who has more than one wife at the time, is to continue to cohabit with his wives. I presume this arises out of the very necessity of the case, as polygamy is so firmly established in those countries that it would be impossible to plant Christianity there without recognizing the existing institutions of the country, at least so far as the family relations of the convert are concerned at the time of his union with the church.

Again, it cannot be denied that polygamy was tolerated by the Old Testament, and many persons believe it is not prohibited by the New, except in case of a bishop, or a deacon, who it is said shall be the husband of one wife. Some reason subtly on that by saying that we should apply to it the Latin maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, and they say the fact that the expression that the deacon or the bishop shall be the husband of one wife only, carries with it the implication that others may have more than one. I think this is a very far-fetched and strained construction; I do not agree with it, for the whole teachings of the New Testament, it seems to me, are very clear and positive that the husband shall have but one wife. I remember no instance where husband and wife are mentioned in the New Testament where anything is said about more than one wife, and while there is no positive inhibition, except in the instance mentioned of officers of the churches, it is very clearly to be inferred that polygamy was not intended from the fact that there is no instance of more than one wife mentioned as connected with any one man, or that any man is justified in having more than one. But there are those, I say, who entertain a different opinion on this subject, and they must have their opinion. I have no right to fly in their teeth about it.

But, Mr. President, there are those in the Mormon territory who believe that there is a divine revelation later than the New Testament which authorizes a member of the Mormon Church to have more wives than one. They believe in the revelation, as they term it, made by God himself to their prophet, Joseph Smith. I do not believe in it, but they religiously believe it. Many of them are as earnest and honest in their faith as I am in the Baptist faith, or as other Senators are in the Methodist or Presbyterian faith. I think they are greatly in error; but I have no more right, if they do not practice it, to disfranchise them on account of that belief than I have to disfranchise any Senator in this Chamber or any man out of it who believes that the New Testament does not forbid polygamy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I suggest to the Senator that there is nothing whatever in this bill that disfranchises any man or woman on account of any opinion or belief he or she may have.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I assert that there is. I take issue squarely with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator kindly point it out?

Mr. BROWN. I will. I find in section 7 of this bill this language:

> That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Now to the first part of the section again:

> No polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, * * * shall be entitled to vote.

Who is a polygamist? I hold in my hand Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, which is very good authority, I believe:

Polygamist: a person who practices polygamy, or maintains its lawfulness.

There is scarcely a man, woman, or child in Utah belonging to the Mormon Church who does not maintain the lawfulness of polygamy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken about that, but that is not any part of the argument.

Mr. BROWN. There may be a few——

Mr. EDMUNDS. There may be a great number, and there are.

Mr. BROWN. There are very few, if any, who doubt it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can tell you just how many there are, in a minute.

Mr. BROWN. I will thank the Senator. I suppose there are some in every country connected with every faith who do not believe in all that their particular church or sect holds. I have been among the Mormons, however; I have seen something of their society; and I know the great prevailing opinion there is that God by a divine revelation made known to the prophet, Joseph Smith, that a man in the Mormon Church may have more than one wife, that he may practice polygamy. Only a small number of them do practice it, I admit; but it is almost, if not quite, the universal belief that they have the right to do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course we cannot have a judicial trial to-day to find out, as my brother from Alabama wishes to do on this political question, how the fact is; but according to the returns obtained by the census people (not always under the act of Congress, because they go beyond that) of what are called Apostate Mormons, who do not hold up to the polygamy doctrine, there are 6,988 in the Territory, and of what are called Josephite Mormons who hold up to all the doctrines except that one thing—but I do not know precisely the distinction between the Apostate and Josephite Mormons—there are 820. So it would seem there are more than 7,000 of the Mormons, besides certain ones put down as doubtful whom I leave out, who do not appear to believe in this revelation of polygamy which occurred about twenty or thirty years after the finding of the astonishing gold tablets and so on. That is the Book of the Covenant.

Mr. BROWN. I think they were brass, not gold.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps they had most to do with brass.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think they were pure gold.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I have been reading the Book of Covenants of the Mormon Church lately with assiduity, I think they were gold, but at any rate the polygamous thing came in more than twenty years after its supposed discovery and came in under circumstances that if my friend would read the very book itself to show how it came and why and so on, I think he would be satisfied that it would take a pretty stout-hearted man among the Mormons to think that that was of divine revelation, for it absolutely reversed the previous revelation from the invisible world. I did not want to interrupt the Senator, however.

Mr. BROWN. It is no interruption. I do not presume I am as well posted in Mormon literature as the honorable Senator from Vermont, though I have read some of it. I agree with him that in the commencement Mormonism did not tolerate or practice polygamy. You may read the Book of Mormon and you will nowhere find in that book that polygamy is tolerated; but the Mormons believe that subsequently to the discovery of that book, which the Senator says was on gold plates—I think they were brass——

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will compound it and call it silver which is a popular thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. Anywhere along between. [Laughter.] They say that since that discovery God revealed to Joseph Smith under circumstances, as the Senator says, that do not carry conviction to my mind, though they do to theirs, that a man might have more than one wife. And now just in that connection let us say a little more about the Mormon faith.

As I understand the Mormon doctrine and the Mormon people, they profess to believe as firmly as we do in the Old Testament, but they say much of the Old Testament is repealed by the New. Then they profess to believe in all the New that has not been repealed by later inspirations and revelations; but they believe that there are certain things in the New Testament which have been repealed by later revelations from Heaven. I am speaking of their faith, so far as I could learn it among them during the short stay I made there some two or three years since. I could hear of no one connected with the Mormon Church who disbelieved this doctrine. At any rate, out of the one hundred and forty-odd thousand population in that Territory, or connected with that church, according to the estimate of the Senator from Vermont, (if that is a correct census return,) there are only about six or seven thousand who do not believe in polygamy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The whole population is 143,963, according to the census.

Mr. BROWN. Then it would leave 137,000 in round numbers who do believe in it against 6,000 who do not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh no, the Senator is mistaken. I only speak of the Mormon population, the total Mormon population.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is confining himself to the Territory of Utah. [Addressing Mr. EDMUNDS.] Do you not know that the Mormons have very strong church relations with, and have planted colonies in, other Territories?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know any thing about that. I was speaking of Utah alone.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, they are as unanimous on this question as any church or any people anywhere are on any question. There may be some dissenters; doubtless there are some. They maintain, in other words, the lawfulness of polygamy. Then, according to the definition given by Webster, they are polygamists; and then, according to this bill, they are every one disfranchised. It is a sweeping disfranchisement of almost the entire people of a Territory. And in order to carry out that disfranchisement we must resort here to a practice better known in the South than it has been in the North. Whenever it is necessary to make a Republican State out of a Democratic State, or a Republican State out of a Democratic Territory, the most convenient machinery for that purpose is a returning board, and it has worked admirably in the South. By fraud, perjury, forgery, and villainy, the returning-board system cheated the people of these United States out of a legal election for President. It does not therefore specially commend itself to the American people. It stinks in the nostrils of honest men.

We propose now to deal with this question by constituting a returning board of five persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate, all of whom, says the bill, as brought forth by the Committee on the Judiciary, shall not be members of the same political party. I proposed to amend it by saying not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, so as to compel the appointment of two Democrats in place of one; and on the other side of the Chamber that proposition is stoutly met and resisted. Why is it that it is necessary to have four of the five members of this board Republicans, and only one Democrat? Will not a majority do this job as well as a minority? Cannot three carry out the object? If the Democrats have two, it seems it is feared it might not work; and it is safer not to trust it to them, lest, to the great disappointment of some very patriotic gentlemen, it might turn up a Democratic State.

In my opinion the people of Utah have at least one good quality, and that is, that an overwhelming majority of them are Democrats. If we ever reach a point where they are to be admitted into the Union, they have a right to come in as a Democratic State; but under this returning board legerdemain, it is very fair to presume that they will not be permitted so to come. If not even two out of the five who are to manipulate the returns are to be Democrats, there can be but little hope of a Democratic State. And there may be a very good political reason just there, why the whole population, almost en masse, should be disfranchised. If they are permitted to vote, there is no chance for a Republican State. If a returning board manipulates the election, and the population of Utah, or a vast majority of them, are driven from the polls, then there is a prospect of a Republican State there.

Not only does this bill, as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, propose to disfranchise and drive from the polls almost the entire population of Utah, but it proposes in the very teeth of the Constitution of the United States to disfranchise them from the right to hold office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Georgia mind if in connection with that remark of his I should read the legal definition of a bigamist and polygamist as distinguished from his Webster definition?

Mr. BROWN. Go on, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Turning from the land of literature to the region of law, with which statutes are supposed to have something to do, I will read out of the first book I sent for at random—Burrill's Law Dictionary, supposed to be pretty correct, this clause:

BIGAMUS.—In old English law. One who has been twice married, or has married more than one wife; a bigamist. Applied originally in the canon law, to clerks or ecclesiastical persons, who were forbidden to marry a second time. * * * Bigamus is he that either hath married two or more wives, or that hath married a widow.

Under the old law a man who married a widow was a bigamist. I do not think under the modern law this statute would prevent a man marrying a widow. Now I come to what is more to the point I am speaking to:

A polygamist is he who has had two or more wives at the same time.—3 Inst., 88.

So that I beg to assure my distinguished friend from Georgia that the Judiciary Committee thought—very likely it was mistaken after what he and Webster have said—that the legal definition of "bigamist" and "polygamist" was perfectly understood everywhere, not a matter of opinion, but a matter of fact. I thank my friend for allowing me to state this.

Mr. BROWN. I much prefer that my friend from Vermont should state all his points as we go along.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would not do it to interrupt the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Vermont has produced a book which defines a bigamist to be a man who has married a widow, and a polygamist a man who has had two or more wives at the same time. He himself repudiates the first definition; and the last does not embrace a man who now has two wives. I am certainly content if the Senator is. And I am willing to put Webster against Burrill as an authority on the definition of words, or the meaning of the English language.

No matter what Burrill may say, it will be very convenient for this Republican returning board, when they go to Utah, to take Webster in their hands and drive from the polls every voter who proposes to cast a ballot, if he is a member of the Mormon Church, on the ground that he is a polygamist. I would not like to leave it in the hands of such a board, with such an authority as Webster to sustain them, to determine whether a Democrat who believes in the lawfulness of polygamy, though he does not practice it, should be entitled to vote. It would be like leaving the lamb in the inclosure with the wolf. There would be no prospect of his vote being received.

But at the time I was interrupted by the honorable Senator from Vermont I had stated that I would proceed to show that this bill if passed disfranchises Mormons from holding office on account of their religious opinions, in the teeth of the Constitution of the United States. I read from article 6, section 3, of the Constitution of the United States:

> But no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

It has been argued here that the Congress of the United States has absolute power over the Territories and over the District of Columbia; that we can give to the Territories and the District such government as we think proper. It is outside of my purpose to controvert that; it is not necessary that I should. But nothing can give to Congress the right, in the teeth of the Constitution, to prescribe a religious test for a person living in the District or in the Territories that excludes him from holding office. I maintain that that is just what is done in this case. I know it is said sometimes that the action of the Mormons in practicing polygamy is an immorality, that there is no religion in it, and that we do not interfere with the constitutional rights of a Mormon when we prescribe the test that he shall not hold office if he believes in the lawfulness of polygamy. What is a religious test? To ascertain that it is necessary to inquire what is religion? Webster defines it thus:

> 1. The recognition of God as an object of worship, love, and obedience; right feelings toward God as rightly apprehended; piety.
> 2. Any system of faith and worship; as, the religion of the Turks, of Hindoos, of Christians; true and false religion.

That is the definition of Webster, and I still think he is pretty good authority. I repeat it:

> Any system of faith and worship; as, the religion of the Turks, of Hindoos, of Christians; true and false religion.

That is Webster's definition of religion. Then, a religious test would be a test pertaining to religion as defined, or a law prescribing that a person should not hold office because he professed or practiced a particular religion, no matter whether we believe it to be a true or a false religion. According to Webster, it would be a violation of the Constitution if you say that a man shall not hold office because he believes and practices the Turkish religion, or the Hindoo religion, (for he mentions both,) or the Christian religion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would the Senator really object to a law, supposing it were not unconstitutional, (which is another question,) which said that no man should be entitled to participate in the government of the State of Georgia that was in the practice of having all his father's wives, one or more, burned, Hindoo fashion, when his father died? There is some difference between facts and faith in the minds of most people, I submit to my friend, and it comes down (to state the point) to this essential distinction, that all political society has recognized between regulating political rights—and I may say, for that matter, civil rights in a large degree, but I need not go into that now—depending upon certain conditions of fact, as the Supreme Court of the United States decided in the Reynolds case on this pretense of its being a religious faith to have four or five wives, and therefore you could not interfere with it. It comes down to a fact. There are many men in the State of Vermont who believe that they have an inherent right to sell liquor although it is prohibited, that it is a natural right that belongs to every man. The State says: "If you do that thing, you cannot do certain other things." Is it possible that my friend from Georgia really means to maintain the proposition that in a republican country, a government of the people, it does not belong to a majority of the people to say that certain acts, certain conditions of bodily existence, shall not be made the test of participating in the government of that State? That is the point. You may call it religion or what you will.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator might have saved himself a discourse of some length, which must be printed in my speech, if he had noticed a little more carefully what I was saying, or if he had waited till I was through on that point. I do not deny the right of a State to punish any sort of immorality.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not speaking of punishment; I am talking about political rights.

Mr. BROWN. I will answer the question if you will keep quiet only a short time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will keep quiet entirely.

Mr. BROWN. I do not ask that; but when I am replying to the Senator's long questions I prefer to be heard myself. I do not deny the power of the State to inflict punishment for immorality. I am willing to vote for a law to punish persons, not for what they have done in the past, when there was no law prohibiting such acts, but for what they may do in the future that is criminal, in the Territory of Utah or any other Territory. I believe that bigamy, or the double-wife system, if I may so term it, is immoral; and I am therefore willing to inflict penalties, or to vote for a law that does inflict them upon those who are legally convicted of that offense, committed after the passage of a law prohibiting it. But I am not willing to put it in the hands of Returning Boards, to drive from the polls in Utah every man who believes that he or any other man has a right to practice polygamy, if he does not practice it. I would only consent to punish him for his criminal conduct, not for his belief or his faith or his religious opinions.

Again, as to the instance put by the Senator from Vermont in my State, if it were possible for there to be such an instance there; if any man there believed it was right to burn his father's wives—we do not allow them to have but one wife there—upon the funeral pile I would inflict penalties upon him for practicing it; but if he really believes it is right I have no right to exclude him from holding office because he says he believes it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So say I; so say we all.

Mr. BROWN. Then it turns out that there would have been but little reason for the interruption by the Senator, had he heard me through.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it turns out that there was.

Mr. BROWN. That is a difference of opinion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is liberal.

Mr. BROWN. Then I hope you are content. I say you have a right to punish a Mormon for adultery or fornication or bigamy. I make no issue with you there. But you have no right to punish him for it till you have legally convicted him of the crime; the court having a right to inflict the penalty by the proper officers, and I shall always approve it when so done; but I am not ready to place a whole community under the ban because a few persons there practice this immoral habit. I am informed that there are comparatively few Mormons who have more than one wife, yet almost the entire Mormon population believe it is legal for a man to have a plurality of wives. Let us be careful that we do not establish precedents that may lead to the destruction of freedom of opinion and the subversion of constitutional liberty and religious toleration in this country.

When we come down to this matter of persecution or prosecution for opinion's sake and go beyond punishment for crime committed, we tread upon very dangerous ground. If we look back over the history of the past we have abundant evidence to justify this assertion. The time was when the Catholic Church tolerated no dissenters and punished in an exemplary manner those who denied the infallibility of the Pope and the authority of the church. That day has passed, at least it is so in this country, and to their honor be it said, to the Catholics and Baptists of the United States the glory is due of having been the first two denominations—the Baptists a little in the lead—to establish on this continent full, unqualified religious freedom. But even then differences of opinion could not be tolerated by those in power, and the early settlers of New England, who held another faith, persecuted both Baptists and Catholics alike for dissenting from their view. Such is the weakness of human nature; such is the danger of persecution for opinion's sake.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish you would leave out the State of Vermont when you speak of New England, because it is not true as to it, but the reverse.

Mr. BROWN. I said New England, and I was right; but I am very willing to except the State of Vermont, as requested by the Senator. No instance at this time occurs to me in relation to that State. I believe the Senator is right in asking that she be exempted. I wish I could say as much for all the other States of New England, and for all the states of the world. I am not mentioning this to be offensive to New England, but I mention it to warn Senators of the dangers of a spirit of religious persecution, and to ask them also to reflect on the danger of political persecution for opinion's sake. The dominant church in New England at the early settlement persecuted the Catholics and the Baptists. The historian says they made acquiescence in their own church practices and beliefs a test of citizenship. (2 Elliott's History of New England, page 206.) The Quakers were whipped at the cart tail from town to town, because they practiced their own religious opinions. Men and women were hung because they were convicted by New England tribunals of being witches. The Baptists were taxed for a long period to support the clergy of the established denomination there, and Roger Williams, their great leader, was banished from Massachusetts on account of his religious opinions. Quakers were driven out of New England under a severe penalty if they returned. And one unfortunate man was banished under penalty of death if he returned, for asserting that he was free from original sin, and had not committed a sin in six months. This was the intolerance in a past century.

I have referred to the Catholics. Coming down still later within the present century, within the present half century, it has not been fifty years ago that the Catholic Church established at Charlestown, in Massachusetts, an Ursuline convent or college, and it was so offensive to the good people of that State that a mob was raised to burn it, and it was burnt under circumstances of the utmost aggravation. Helpless women were driven out of it. They fled to save their lives, and the death of one or two and the insanity of another resulted. The Attorney-General, in summing up the enormity of the crime to the jury, uses the following language: "A murder thus crowned the perpetration of burglary, incendiarism, sacrilege, and plunder." (For a full account of this great outrage see fifth volume of Bishop England's Works.) So strong was religious intolerance then, that that good old State, which usually punishes crimes exemplarily, was unable to punish the perpetrators of this offense. A former penitentiary convict was the leader of the mob, and he was put upon trial for it. The jury acquitted him under circumstances the most extraordinary, and the verdict was loudly applauded by the populace. Handbills had been stuck upon the bridge crossing the river, threatening the assassination of any one who gave information in reference to the deed.

That was forty-eight years ago. If religious intolerance in this most enlightened and intelligent State was so great forty-eight years ago as to incite men to burn and desecrate the convents of the Catholic Church, and the riot was permitted with impunity, how can we trust ourselves forty-eight years later to make indiscriminate warfare upon the people of any Territory of these United States on account of any opinion of theirs, religious or otherwise? It is a dangerous experiment. Enact your laws to punish crime; I will vote with you. Make your penalties as severe as you will; when the culprit has been convicted I will say let him suffer; but do not proscribe a whole community because they differ with us in opinion.

Even in the old State of Connecticut, in the year 1834, in Windham County, a Miss Crandall opened a school for young colored girls, and the indignation of the people grew so high that they determined to break it up. They went to the Legislature and got an act passed on the subject; they carried it to the judiciary; they resorted to every means possible to suppress it legally; but failing, they took their iron crowbars, after it had been once set on fire, and went and broke out the windows of the house and drove the teacher away, as they could not bear the outrage of a school there to teach young colored girls. (See Larned's History of Windham County.)

Mr. HOAR. How was it in Georgia?

Mr. BROWN. Georgia may have done wrong in some instances, but I am not now defending her wrongs; I am speaking of the danger of yielding to these popular clamors and proscribing or putting down people because we differ with them in opinion. Connecticut would not now do what she then did. She now stands by the rights of colored people, and, to their honor be it said, I believe both her Senators favor appropriations to educate the colored people everywhere in the United States. I thank them for it; it is right; but I mention the instance not to reflect on the people of Connecticut, but to show the danger of yielding to popular clamor, where any institution does not meet with popular favor.

In 1855 this country was convulsed with one of the bitterest political campaigns we have ever had, the corner-stone of the platform of one of the political parties being that Catholics should not hold office, and proscribing them for opinion's sake. It was said that the Catholic believed in the infallibility of the Pope, and believing this he could not be a true citizen of any civil government; that his primary allegiance was due to the Pope, and therefore he could not be trusted with office. This erroneous opinion found followers by the thousands and hundreds of thousands in the United States at that time.

Let me give another illustration. It is only within the last few years, if I am correctly informed, that the constitution of New Hampshire permits a Catholic to be a member of the Legislature of that State.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to correct the Senator to a certain extent in regard to a popular impression that Catholics have not been permitted to hold office in the State of New Hampshire until a very recent alteration in the constitution. The matter of the religious test did survive nominally in our constitution until its last change, some three years since; but as a matter of fact the provision was obsolete. I think it must have been obsolete for the last half century. Nearly twenty years ago I myself sat side by side in the Legislature of New Hampshire with an Irish Catholic who represented the city of Manchester. It was an obsolete provision; and our people, who have been very conservative in regard to holding conventions for the purpose of altering their fundamental law, allowed it to remain, knowing that it was not acted upon, until at last it becoming necessary to modify the constitution in other particulars, this provision was changed with the rest.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator was right when he asked to correct me to a "certain extent" only. According to his own statement he sat in the Legislature of his own State by the side of a Catholic, who sat there in open violation of the constitution of New Hampshire.

I have no disposition to misrepresent New Hampshire, but the Senator's statement does not much better the case. He admits that until three years ago if a Catholic occupied a seat in the Legislature of New Hampshire he had to do it in violation of the constitution of New Hampshire, which I presume each member was sworn to support. Popular opinion did not enforce the constitution, the Senator says, but still the constitution forbade that a Catholic be a member. I am glad it does not now forbid it.

While I think we are becoming more liberal as members of the different churches, and as citizens of States, I fear yet to trust too much to excited legislation under the lash of popular clamor.

A few years ago in my own State we all stood by slavery. No one then questioned that it was right. That the institution may in some cases have been abused, as every institution is abused, cannot be denied; but it was as little abused as any other could be. Slavery has been abolished; none of us desire to restore it. We stand now by the liberty and the rights of the former slave. Still there is an incident that I cannot help remembering during that transition stage. After the end of the war the reconstruction measures were passed. I had then a little taste of the rule that we now propose to apply to Utah. I stood by the polls, disfranchised and not permitted to vote, while my former slaves, emancipated, walked up and deposited their ballots. I made no issue. I accepted it. Why? Because I had no power to do anything; and I held that Georgia had seceded from the Union, and having seceded, and having been conquered, the conquering power had the right to dictate the terms. But the Mormons have not seceded from the Union. The Federal authorities might in my case possibly have made a religious test, and said that I should not hold any office because of my opinions. If my theory was right they could, because I believed we were out of the Union when we passed the ordinance of secession. But if their theory was correct, they had no right to proscribe such a religious test. I did not, however, make any point about the political test, because I believed we were obliged to acquiesce in the dictates of the conqueror. I mention these matters not to stir up unkind feelings, but because they are part of the history, and point the danger of legislation of the character we are now proposing to apply to Utah.

This bill proposes to apply a religious test to the Mormons. I do not mean the part of it that would punish them for immorality, but in so far as it punishes the Mormon for his religious opinions it is a religious test applied. He believes that Joe Smith was a prophet as much as I believe that Jeremiah was a prophet; and while I think he is in an egregious error, I have no right to proscribe him because of his belief as long as he does not practice immorality. And I have no right to do more as a legislator than to prescribe rules to punish him for his immoralities and leave him to the full enjoyment of his religious opinions, just as I claim the right to enjoy my own opinions. If we commence striking down any sect, however despised, or however unpopular, on account of opinion's sake, we do not know how soon the fires of Smithfield may be rekindled or the gallows of New England for witches again be erected, or when another Catholic convent will be burned down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or another colored school burned down.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, I accept the amendment. As the Senator from Vermont says, "or another colored school burned down," I trust it may not be. We do not know how long it will be before the clamor will be raised by the religious denominations of this country that no member of a church who holds the infallibility of the Pope or the doctrine of transubstantiation should hold office or vote. We do not know how long it may be before it would be said that no member of a church who believes in close communion and baptism by immersion as the only mode should vote or hold office in this country. You are treading on dangerous ground when you open this flood-gate anew. We have passed the period where there is for the present any clamor against any particular sect except as against the Mormons; but it seems there must be some periodical outcry against some denomination. Popular vengeance is now turned against the Mormons. When we are done with them I know not who will next be considered the proper subject of it.

Mr. President, I believe I have made about all the remarks that I care to make on this subject. In conclusion, I have to state that I cannot vote for the bill in its present shape. I cannot vote for any bill that will leave it with any Returning Board in Utah, with the pretext that they will have in this case, to proscribe any class of people there on account of their political or religious opinions. I am ready to vote for any bill that is necessary to punish the people of that Territory or any other for the practice of immorality, leaving it to the courts to decide whether they are guilty or not.

I therefore insist upon the amendment that I have already introduced. I was not in at the moment when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] offered his amendment. I wish to offer two amendments more. Before I take my seat I will read them for information. In section 7——

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean section 7 as it is in the print?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir, as it is in print.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be now section 8.

Mr. BROWN. In section 7, [8,] line 1, after the word "bigamist," I shall move to insert the words "who has been legally convicted of practicing the same;" and after the word "woman" in line 2 to insert "and legally convicted of the same;" and after the word "section" in line 4 to insert "who has been legally convicted;" so that that part of the section would read:

> That no polygamist, bigamist, who has been legally convicted of practicing the same, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and legally convicted of the same, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, who has been legally convicted, in any Territory, &c.

With those amendments, and one other which I shall prepare, much of the objection that I have to the bill would be removed, though I think there are other very serious objections to it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I listened with much pleasure as I always do to the Senator who has just taken his seat, and I have but one word to say in reply to a portion of his argument. I regret very much as one member of the Senate that he has brought into this discussion so much extraneous matter. I do not think really there is any religious question involved here. For the life of me I can see nothing in the provisions of the bill before us of a religious character, and I can hardly think that he believes so, for the amendment which he has just proposed would seem to indicate that this was no religious question.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that the amendment shows exactly the reverse. The point I make on the seventh section is that it provides for the punishment by disfranchisement of any polygamist, bigamist, &c., whereas I propose to say "who has been legally convicted of practicing the same"—not those who hold the opinion, but those who are convicted of the practice.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understand that. The Senator's amendment would seem to indicate that there was really no religious question involved in this debate, for surely if the people in whose behalf he has so warmly spoken because of their peculiar relations in regard to polygamy are to be put down as religionists, his amendment would be nugatory, because no man or set of men could be convicted of crime for entertaining a religious belief on any subject.

Mr. BROWN. My amendment, if the Senator will permit me, does not propose to convict the person of his belief. The amendment says that he shall be convicted "for the practice of the same," for the practice of polygamy or bigamy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is what the bill says.

Mr. BROWN. I take issue there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the very point of it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is not the word "belief" in the bill, it only speaks of acts. The Senator proposes an amendment now which in case of conviction of the same thing will lead to penal consequences. This is testing the question by, I suppose, the legitimate rules of logic. I could not for the life of me see where the religious aspect of the question was, and when I heard the Senator propose the amendment which authorizes disfranchisement in the case of conviction for the very same thing that this proposed bill makes simply a ground of challenge, I thought the lines of this debate had been narrowed very greatly. I do not propose to go into that question at all; I leave it to other Senators.

I wish to say one word in reply to my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in regard to the few remarks which I addressed to the Senate last evening upon this question. I have looked at it from a very impartial stand-point. I think those who know me know very well that I am the last man in the world to enter into a crusade against the rights of anybody upon account of any kind of belief, either religious or political. If I thought that this bill was of the character the Senator suggests, I would be the last man in this body to support it; but I honestly differ with him about that. I do not think it is a bill of pains and penalties; I think it is the exercise of a proper and legitimate power on the part of the Congress of the United States. It is true that he read from the Dred Scott decision to show that the Congress of the United States has not quite the power in the Territories that some jurists have laid down. I do not want to bring into the debate that decision. It is very well known that it led to political differences of opinion in this country which are past. No man ever sat on that bench for whom I have more respect than the Chief-Justice who rendered that decision. I can read a decision, which I think was rendered under circumstances of not quite so much excitement, that will bear me out in the views I entertain on this subject; and that is that the Congress of the United States in legislating for the Territories is not hampered by constitutional restrictions or limitations; that the preamble of the Constitution tells us it was made for States and not for Territories. It is very true that the preamble of an act is not always regarded as an index to its true meaning, but a great deal of importance has been attached to the preamble of the Constitution of the United States. It reads:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution—

For what?

> For the United States of America.

Not the United States as embracing every foot of territory lying within our jurisdiction. No jurist has ever held that.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him, if it will not inconvenience him?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I should like to know what the Senator does with section 1891 of the Revised Statutes, which has been in force for a number of years. I do not think myself it was necessary ever to enact it, but in order to put the matter beyond any question it provides that—

> The Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within all the organized Territories, and in every Territory hereafter organized, as elsewhere within the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That only bears out my argument. It not only shows that my position is true, but constitutionally true. If the other position was true the act of Congress was not necessary, and the moment we acquired any territory from a foreign or sovereign power the laws of the United States and the Constitution operated over it eo instanti without any action of Congress. As was well said, I think, by Webster in his argument in the American Insurance Company vs. Canter in 1 Peters, if the Government with the acquisition of Florida operated upon that Territory without any act of Congress to extend it there, why was it found necessary to designate the particular laws that should have force and effect within that Territory? If upon coming within our jurisdiction it came in under all the conditions that attended the other States in the Union, how came it to be necessary to pass any legislation in order to give effect to the general laws there? No, sir; that has not been the doctrine. Chief-Justice Marshall, in the case of the American Insurance Company vs. Canter, spoke of the lodgment of the judicial power. It was argued in that case that the judicial power of the United States extended to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and that no court except a court of the United States under the Constitution could exercise any part of the admiralty or maritime jurisdiction of the United States. A local court of Florida, created by a local law, while in its territorial condition condemned a vessel under a salvage claim under the admiralty power, which the Constitution of the United States declared could only be lodged in a judicial tribunal of the United States. The point was made in the Supreme Court that the condemnation of that ship was void because no local tribunal had authority to exercise admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, which by the express words of the Constitution could only be vested in the judicial tribunals of the nation. What did the Chief Justice say? He said that this was no part of the judicial power of the United States; that a court sitting under a territorial law was not a court of the United States, and that the judicial power lodged by the Constitution did not extend to the Territory of Florida. Chief Justice Marshall said:

> It has been contended that by the Constitution the judicial power of the United States extends to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and that the whole of this judicial power must be vested "in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress shall from time to time ordain and establish." Hence it has been argued that Congress cannot vest admiralty jurisdiction in courts created by the Territorial Legislature.
> We have only to pursue this subject one step further to perceive that this provision of the Constitution does not apply to it.—1 Peters's Reports, 546.

Upon that ground the case was decided. On what other ground could the act of Congress which I cited last evening be upheld? The act vested, as I showed by its reading, all civil and military powers over that Territory in two or three men, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The people had no voice at all in the government for years. This was an exercise of the governing power conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress of the United States over the Territories.

I am not here to say that Congress could pass an ex post facto law, a law prescribing a religious test for office, a law authorizing an attainder, or anything of that kind, because there is an absolute prohibition in the Constitution against the exercise of that kind of legislative power; but I do deny that this is that kind of legislation; I do say that the power proposed to be exerted here on the part of Congress to provide rules for the wholesome government of a Territory, prescribing conditions upon which its inhabitants shall vote or shall hold office, is in no sense the exercise of the power of legislative attainder; that the power to legislate for the Territories is absolutely conclusive and without limit in that direction. Nothing that I said, nothing that I shall hereafter say, will justify any legislative attainder; but I say it is in the power of Congress to take away the whole power of voting from this population. Who can deny it? What rights have they there to-day or have the people of any Territory in this Union except what they get from Congress? When it comes to the rights of property no man would be so unreasonable as to contend that we could pass any bill taking away a vested right of property in any people there. But I speak of the governing power. I speak of that class of rights which affect the public as distinct from those which appertain to the individual.

I remember that some years ago the Legislature of my State, in the exercise of what I thought to be a very arbitrary power, passed a law in which they declared that no person, unless a natural born citizen of the United States, could exercise the humble vocation of stevedore at the place at which I lived. I happened to be employed as counsel by a class of men who were affected by that legislation; and I had no difficulty in getting the supreme court of my State to pronounce it void on general principles, because the calling of a stevedore was no office. The act required a bond to be given, and all those things, in the exercise of a purely individual pursuit, a thing that appertained to the man in his individual character, independent of his relation to society. The Government had no right to interfere with that matter.

What were the cases that have been cited by my distinguished friend from Missouri—the case of Cummings, and the case in which my friend from Arkansas was involved? They were cases involving the right of individual men to pursue their individual callings; that was all. But has any man an absolute right to hold office? Has he an inherent right to vote? We find in many of the States, to-day, statutes providing that a person who refuses to pay his poll tax shall not be permitted to vote. By the law of many States of the Union the right to vote depends upon conditions which the majority of the society in which the voter lives may prescribe, but neither the right to vote nor the right to hold office belongs to that class of inherent rights which neither Government nor Congress nor legislatures can take away.

The Constitution declares that new States may be admitted into the Union. It first prescribes an organic law for the States, and then it goes on to say that new States may be admitted into the Union, a power which has been exercised from time to time, showing that States only when they become connected with the Union are subject to the Constitution of the United States. I can conceive very well how there may be a difference of opinion in regard to this question, but as respects the constitutional power of Congress to make rules and regulations of a public character, at its discretion, for the Territories of the United States, I have no doubt in my mind whatever.

I do not believe that this question involves any considerations of religious views, as stated by my friend from Georgia, in the speech which he has just delivered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not intend to make any speech upon this bill. There are some features of the bill that I would be very glad to see modified in some respects. I desire to vote for all proper legislation of a repressive character to reach the great end sought to be obtained by the bill. I am willing to go as far as I can possibly go consistently with what I believe to be the rights of the people to be affected by it, in order to suppress an evil which the good sense of the American people everywhere desires to see extirpated.

There are some features of the bill which seem to be so harsh as to be in conflict with that spirit of liberality and freedom which pervades the American mind. The first section of the bill provides that any person having a wife or husband who hereafter marries another person shall be guilty of polygamy, and prescribes the penalty for it. The second section provides for another class of persons who shall be liable to the pains and penalties of the bill:

> That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman, &c.

I prefer that that should be amended so as to take effect not upon the passage of the act, but at some future period, say the 1st of July, so that those persons who are now thus cohabiting together may adjust their relations in some shape, and the men may make such provisions for the maintenance of the women who are married in this way that they will not be cast out immediately upon society. I would not subject the man who continues to live with his two or three wives to the pains and penalties of this bill without giving him some opportunity to make proper provision for those with whom he is connected. I would prefer, therefore, to see a modification of that feature of the bill. Where two or more women have married a man, under the operation of this bill the man would be subject to the pains and penalties of the bill if for one hour he continues to maintain relations with his two or three wives, but he must absolutely discharge them and separate himself from them in every possible way, otherwise he will fall under the prohibitions of the law. It seems to me that such a modification as I suggest might be made without any detriment to the bill itself by providing that it shall go into effect at a future day, so that these parties may have a proper time to arrange their relations with each other.

The next section of the bill puts in operation the machinery for trying parties found guilty of the misdemeanor complained of in the first and second sections of the bill. There is one feature in that which I do not admire, and yet perhaps I shall vote for it; and that is, that a mere belief that polygamy is right is made a disqualification of jurors. I do not question the right to make such a disqualification; but it seems to me it is carrying disqualifications to a very great extent to apply them to a man simply because he entertains a particular belief, while he may not practice upon that belief. A man might entertain a belief that it was proper and right, if a man so desired, to have two wives, or if a woman so desired to have two husbands, and yet not be at all affected in his judgment thereby as to testimony upon which he was required to pass as a juror. While I do not question that it is perfectly competent to provide such a disqualification for a juror, I question very much whether we ought to carry it to that extent.

My chief objections to the bill, however, are to the seventh and eighth sections. I shall not enter into the constitutional arguments that have been raised here; but admitting that there is a constitutional power to pass the seventh section, and to make polygamy, and bigamy, and cohabitation with more than one woman a cause of disfranchisement, a cause of prohibition against holding office, I think we should not rest that upon a provision of the bill, but should provide, as proposed by the Senator from Georgia, that that fact should be judicially ascertained by conviction. While there is no constitutional objection to that measure, still as a matter of policy we ought to provide that a man shall be judicially ascertained to fall within the provisions of the bill.

So far as the provision of the seventh section affects existing officeholders, I believe there ought to be a saving clause in reference to persons now in position, whether by appointment or by election, until the expiration of the term of office for which they have been appointed or elected. It would not militate against the policy of the bill to insert such a provision as that in it. The section should provide that it shall not apply to a person now holding any office or position of public trust, honor, or emolument, whether by election or by appointment, during the term for which he was elected or appointed. It would not affect the scope of the bill except so far as it applied to the persons holding the offices, and it seems to me that would be a wise provision to insert.

There is a gentleman who has been already referred to in this debate who was elected to the other House of Congress. Why should we attempt to legislate him out of the position to which he has been elected? Why not let him fill the office until the expiration of the term of the office to which the people of that Territory have elected him? It seems to me to be proper that we should do so, and I shall vote for an amendment, if offered, or shall myself offer an amendment, to the seventh section of the bill, of the nature which I have indicated.

In reference to the machinery provided by the eighth section for carrying into effect the harsh features, if I may be allowed to say so, of the seventh section, I think it would be very similar in all its operations to the returning board of Louisiana. The provision is that the President shall appoint five persons, not all of one political party, who shall constitute a board. That board shall send out to the different precincts of Utah other men, for the purpose of making a registration, for the purpose of holding the election. The men so sent out by the board are to pass upon the right of persons to vote. I am opposed to that provision. There is no provision by which that board, or even the appointees of the board, shall be required to take any oath of office whatever. It is simply an authority to the men selected by the President to appoint A, B, C, and D to go out in that Territory and register whom they please and disqualify whom they please without a single requirement, so far as the provisions of this bill are concerned that I have discovered, that they shall take an oath to perform faithfully, and with fidelity, the functions assigned to them.

Mr. BUTLER. If my friend will pardon me for a moment, I should like to call his attention to the language of the eighth section. Lines 7, 8, and 9 of that section read:

> Until other provision be made by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory as is hereinafter by this section provided, be performed under the existing laws of the United States and of said Territory by proper persons.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That may be; but at the same time there is no law of Utah that I know of, and no law of the United States now in existence, authorizing such a board of registration or authorizing the appointment of persons by a board to be selected by the President. So far as I can see, there is nothing in the provisions of the bill that either requires the board appointed by the President or the appointees of that board to take any oath whatever to perform the duties imposed upon them faithfully and impartially.

I should be glad to vote for the bill, but I desire to see some modifications made of sections 7 and 8, which I think are harsh, and would operate very injuriously to the people of that Territory. There is no necessity to deal with this matter in a manner of questionable propriety even, because there must be some measure which could be devised free from all constitutional objections, free from all question of propriety, which would have the effect to remedy the evil complained of. I hope the bill will be modified, especially in the particulars of which I have spoken.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the bill now under consideration by the Senate is in my judgment the most extraordinary bill that has ever been presented in the history of this country. Whether it is regarded in the whole or in its details, it is a bill, I think, that will long stand as a monument of the invasion upon the Constitution, of the disregard of personal rights, of the violation of every essential principle contained in our form of government and in our institutions.

The bill proposes to be a bill for the punishment of bigamy in the Territories of the United States and in places where it has exclusive jurisdiction. It destroys one government and organizes another for the avowed purpose of giving efficiency to provisions for punishing this crime. It does not stop there; it constitutes tribunals which are partial, and in which it expressly and deliberately provides that the person charged with crime shall not have an impartial trial. It imposes a religious test upon the jurors which is in violation of that cardinal provision of the Constitution of the United States, that when a man is charged with crime he shall have a fair and impartial trial. It imposes a religious test by which persons entertaining that opinion are excluded from the juries who are to try individuals charged with this crime. If there be anything sacred in the history of American jurisprudence and American liberty it is that a person charged with crime shall have a fair and an impartial trial by a jury of his peers, and not by a packed jury selected of men known to be opposed to him and prejudiced against him, and a religious test imposed upon them for their qualification as jurors.

Mr. President, while the bill avows itself to be a bill for the punishment of bigamy, it is avowed in the argument here and is known in the current history of the country to be a bill in which the population of a particular Territory, by a large majority entertaining particular views and opinions, which they regard as religious and others believe in practice are criminal, in which a whole population, 130,000 or more of people, declared by our form of government in its most essential principles to have the right of self-government, are by the organization of a government against their wishes sought to be deprived of all political power and subjected to trial by partial courts and by partial juries. That is the bill in its true purpose and its true object. It actually constitutes a court unfriendly to them, avowedly so, for their trial and conviction as a means of suppressing their religion; and that is justified in the argument and discussion here. It is a court carefully prepared to give a partial verdict, and composed of men selected because of their unfriendliness to that population of 130,000 people, be they criminals or not. They are citizens of the United States by express declaration of our Constitution, subject to our jurisdiction; they have a right to the equal protection of our laws.

That is not the character of American jurisprudence. That is not the Constitution of the United States. That is not the theory of government of gentlemen who claim manhood suffrage, the right of man to have free opinion, who claim that every man is a brother, and who have reconstructed one-half of this country with millions of white intelligent and civilized people, upon the theory that they should be deprived of the control of their States, because every man should be equal before the law, and as a man had a right to suffrage.

Let us see what warrant there is in the Constitution of this country for this proceeding. Let us go into its details. My learned and distinguished colleague, for whose opinions I have very great respect, cited yesterday the act by which the Territory of Florida was first organized as a government, or, as he was pleased to term it, by which arbitrary power was conferred by Congress upon the authorities in that Territory, authorizing the President to govern those people and continuing the executive, legislative, and judicial power therein to such persons as he appointed, and he conceived from that fact that the act created an arbitrary power. There is no place in the Constitution of the United States for arbitrary power. There is no logical proposition which can sustain it. The act by which the Territory of Florida was constituted only authorized the officers designated by the President to execute the legislative and judicial authority according to the powers and the limitation of power contained in the Constitution of the United States, and not otherwise. To say that Congress can confer power upon the President or a creature, which it is prohibited from exercising; to say that the creature of Congress can deprive the citizens of that guaranteed liberty and those individual rights which it was the object of the Constitution to create and secure, because he is upon land that is property of the United States; to affirm that a Government whose powers concern the people and are declared to be so limited that they cannot deprive them of certain personal rights, becomes an arbitrary and unlimited power when the citizen enters upon the land, or comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government, is certainly without the sanction of either reason or authority.

There is nothing in the decisions in the case cited by my colleague that can contemplate a proposition such as that. That under a constitution made to secure personal rights, made by the people, for the people, forbidding Congress from invading by any law these personal rights, securing an impartial trial to every man charged with crime, investing the citizens with absolute immunity in these personal rights, because territory is acquired by the Government, which is the creature of and subject to that Constitution, when the citizen walks upon that territory he loses the guarantee of these rights, is entirely without foundation. No government manifestly can constitutionally be created in the Territories of this country except a government which guarantees to the citizen the rights which Congress is forbidden from exercising any power to deprive him of. Whether this government be that of one man chosen by Congress or of many men chosen by the people of the Territory, the power and the rights remain the same.

It is said that the clause that Congress may make "needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories of the United States" gives an unlimited power. What argument is that? What are "needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories of the United States" in the sense of the Constitution? Will any man say that the Constitution regards that as "needful" for the people of the Territories of the United States which the Constitution says is not needful but is hurtful and destructive to the people out of the Territories? Will any one say that the limitation of the grants of power in the Constitution are confined to the States of the country when they are universal, and relate to the immunities and rights of the citizen everywhere? Senators are strangely unmindful of the first section of fourteenth article of the Constitution, the words of which are:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities, &c.

Here is a bill, and we are told that it is a proper bill. What does it do? Will the Senator from Vermont, who is its special champion, undertake upon this floor or elsewhere to say that he will vote for a law giving to the governor of the State of Vermont the power to designate five men who shall say to him and to every other man in Vermont, "you shall not be eligible to office because we choose without trial, without notice, without a jury, without evidence, to say that you have been guilty of a single impropriety in your relations with the other sex?" Will he undertake to say that the people of Vermont shall be disfranchised, and that a law would be competent in that State authorizing the governor to create an ex parte board to say that no man should vote and no man should hold office in Vermont who in the opinion of those five men, be they Democrats or Republicans, had been guilty of a single act of impropriety, without notice to the individual and without proof? Will he undertake to affirm here that the people of Vermont would regard a State government fastened upon them by the arbitrary exclusion from the franchise and from eligibility to office of three-fourths of her people by a board of five persons as a republican government?

Will any man undertake to say that it is republican government to constitute a board of that description? Are we to be told that it is necessary to create a packed and a partial court and jury, to deny to men the right of a fair and impartial jury, to deny to men the right of being heard before the consequences of crime are imputed to them, and that it can be justified by the proposition that it is only an electoral qualification? True it is a crime, they say, but it is not treated here as a crime. That is a subterfuge.

The bill proposes to disfranchise and deny under specious and false pretenses the right of 130,000 people in Utah to create a government, but it creates one for them by five men; and it is a false assertion in the bill which asserts that these five men are intended to canvass and decide fairly the electoral qualifications of that people. It is intended to create a government by a minority over the large majority. It so avows itself. It is so justified by its author and friends. It is not a question whether Congress has power to repeal all laws in the Territories and intrust the executive, judicial, and legislative power to whom it pleases, whether one or many; all concede this; but whether it can violate the personal rights guaranteed in the Constitution either to punish polygamy or to establish a despotism for some other purpose.

Mr. President, while I concur with every word of the able and unanswerable argument of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] upon the subject of a religious test, and with every word of the equally unanswerable demonstration of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that this is unquestionably and by the decision of the courts a bill of attainder, I am willing to vote to withdraw all powers of Government from the people of this polygamous Territory and let that power be exercised by the Congress of the United States through a legislative council or otherwise, convicting under fair and just modes of proceeding people engaged in improper practices; but I am not willing to destroy the very safeguards which rest around every individual in the country, to deny the limitations of powers contained in the Constitution of the United States upon Congress, which are twofold: first, as respects the grant, to be construed unquestionably in the light of the objects of the Government, of its own mode of government by the people; and, second, in respect to the citizen and the immunities and rights which it guarantees to him.

With all this argument and discussion, here is the Constitution of the United States, and here is the fourteenth amendment which the honorable Senator from Vermont was himself largely instrumental in passing, which declares that every person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States is a citizen and entitled to the equal protection of the laws. What equal protection of the laws is it between those men in Utah when five men say that "We believe, without evidence, without trial, without notice, without hearing, that you have been guilty of an act of impropriety with a female, and we deny you the right to that franchise that eligibility to office which you now possess. We deny you the right to a trial by a jury of your peers. We require you to be tried by men who are unfriendly to you, and we believe that your religious faith is an enemy of the country and ought to be suppressed with fire and the sword." Your faith, says the Senator from Vermont, is a shame to Christianity and therefore must be destroyed by these cruel methods. Mr. President, I have not so learned the precepts of our Christianity—I have not so learned our Constitution. I have been taught that the Christian religion was one of peace and good-will, and that "no religious test" for office in the Constitution forbids the exclusion of Jew or Gentile because of his belief. Mr. President, it is useless to attempt to govern and control this question in this way. The honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] (whose fidelity to the Constitution has been distinguished and for which I honor him, and I have no animadversions to make upon his arguments upon this bill) speaks of the Mormons as a theocratic government. Why? What right is there for that allegation here? What is the argument? Because the organization of the Mormon Church rests in religious matters, and in social, an absolute power in the head of the Church. Does not another Church do that? Does not our Christian Church in one of its leading bodies, which is not to be spoken of anywhere except with the profoundest veneration, the ecclesiastical body that witnessed the beginning of Christianity, that certainly contributed no small part to its early history and its struggles with paganism and maintained it all through the generations of the past, assert the absolute infallibility of the head of the Church upon all religious and social matters, and, when it speaks ex cathedrâ, command the absolute obedience of its millions of votaries?

There is nothing theocratic in the government of the Mormon Church that is exhibited to the world. It does not claim to govern the Territory of Utah. It acknowledges the authority of the Government of the United States. You cannot assail it by declaring as a matter of opinion on the part of the American Congress that for a man to worship God according to his belief, as Mormons do, (however contrary to our opinions and our wishes,) is a theocracy to be suppressed with fire and sword. But if you will make war upon it, let it not be by striking down the liberties of your people and doing violence to your own holy faith; but assail it with the red right hand of war, with the sword to stab it out, and say to them: "Proclaim your heresies and conduct your rites beyond the limits of this territory of the United States." Sir, this is worse than open, flagrant war. This is asserting to the people that what our fathers, acting under the teachings of the Christian religion, fought for more than a hundred years to accomplish, shall be thrown away. This is an assertion by the Congress of the United States that there may be a trial by a packed and prejudiced court, by partial jurors, by a man's enemies, and not his friends; that a government shall be constructed in which the vast majority—nine-tenths of the people—in defiance of the principles which control our whole political system, a government of a minority shall be constructed through penal provisions and through verdicts of courts selected and organized to try and convict?

Mr. President, I would go to any constitutional extent necessary to suppress polygamy, and believe that the way is open and easy to suppress this evil. I think that the women of the country, having a right, as I believe they have, to every occupation and every employment consistent with their health and their strength, and having a free and vigorous thought that is quite equal to that possessed by our own sex, when protected by the laws, will assert for themselves freedom and right without the use of unconstitutional and I think wicked processes for the accomplishment of public objects.

I give them the aid of the laws and the protection of the courts and juries fairly constituted. Enact your law declaring what shall be crime, and if necessary change your place of trial in conformity to established law wherever and whenever proof is made before your court that the state of public feeling is such that a fair trial cannot be had. Make the way to the writ of habeas corpus easy and sure; make provision for the support of those women who with their children desire to leave the polygamous relation.

If the situation is so grave as to require extraordinary methods, these would seem to be the proper ones. Protect individuals in their freedom and choice in leaving this state of polygamy; provide for their support, and, above all, educate them and their children, and send among them ministers of the Gospel. Why seek to build up a local despotism in the name and under the false pretense of law to accomplish objects which are easily accomplished by lawful means?

For these reasons, Mr. President, I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I heard the President of the Senate say to a Senator that an amendment is not in order in the present stage of the bill, because there is already pending an amendment to an amendment. Observing the admonition of the Chair, I shall at the proper time move to amend the fifth line of the fourth section, at present the fifth section of the bill, by striking out the words "or has been," before "living;" and also the seventh line by striking out the words "or has been," before "guilty;" so as to read:

That he is living in the practice of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman, or that he is guilty of an offense punishable by either of the foregoing sections, &c.

I shall also move to amend by inserting after the word "woman" the words "or any woman with whom he is not married."

In the first line of the seventh, now the eighth section, I shall move to strike out the words "polygamist, bigamist" and insert the words "persons now practicing polygamy or bigamy;" and after the word "woman," in the second line, I shall move to insert "or any woman with whom he is not married."

Mr. President, I have listened to this debate to-day, and I have read with great care the debate which took place yesterday, when I was not present in the Senate. I read with interest the remarks made by the honorable Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] and the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I was pleased to see the statement made by one, or I think both of those Senators, that while they had finally come to the conclusion that they would support this bill they did it nevertheless with many misgivings as to several of its provisions, and with a great doubt as to whether it would finally secure the purpose which they intended to accomplish. I do not find it necessary in what I have to say upon the bill or the vote that I may finally give to controvert any of the legal positions which either of them has taken.

I have had great difficulty, not only upon this occasion but heretofore, in defining to myself exactly the provision of the Constitution upon which the power of the Government of the United States over the Territories rests. I heard a Senator whose memory was so fitly decorated here the other day, after a most elaborate argument, come to the conclusion that the idea that the power of government as distinguished from power of ownership of Congress over the Territories resides in the second clause of the third section of the fourth article, the one quoted by the Senator from Arkansas yesterday—the clause that Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States—is entirely without foundation, and that the whole power of the Government in the matter is to be derived from that clause of the Constitution which provides for the admission of new States. It is not a new question; it is not a question easy of solution. I do not undertake to say that even in my own mind I have come to a satisfactory conclusion upon it; but I think it is absolutely certain that by whatever clause the power is given to the Congress of the United States to control and govern the Territories of the United States, Congress is always, in all circumstances, under all conditions, limited by the prohibitions in the Constitution. I do not believe that it is in the power of the Congress of the United States, in its exercise of authority over the Territories of the United States, to violate any of the guards which the Constitution of the United States has provided for personal liberty. Congress has no power except that which is granted. Lest powers may be assumed under general and indefinite grants, the Constitution has provided certain guarantees of personal freedom and has prohibited the exercise of certain powers. Congress cannot under any pretense, at any time, for any purpose, violate these guarantees of personal rights or exercise the powers thus prohibited.

Mr. GARLAND. May I interrupt the Senator one moment?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. GARLAND. Under article 3, section 1, of the Constitution:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior.

In section 1864 of the Revised Statutes we have the following provision:

The supreme court of every Territory shall consist of a chief-justice and two associate justices, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, and they shall hold their offices for four years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified.

The tenure by the Constitution of all inferior judges is "during good behavior." Here is a section of the law which provides that in the Territories they shall hold for four years, which the Supreme Court has held, after elaborate argument, to be within the power of the Congress of the United States under their power over the Territories.

Mr. PENDLETON. I understand that perfectly. These Territorial courts, to be found in every law organizing the Territories of the United States or exercising control over them after they are organized, do not belong to the judicial system of the United States. They are organized under the general power of Congress to provide governments for the Territories. I admit that Congress has the power to establish governments over those Territories, to organize legislatures, to organize courts, to enable the people through their own action to perform all the functions of civil government. I deny that there is any power in the Congress of the United States under the Constitution or anywhere else to establish a despotism over the Territories. I deny that Congress can in any of the Territories violate any of those provisions of the Constitution which protect the life and liberty of the citizens of the United States. I deny that Congress can establish a government in the Territories of the United States anywhere which shall try and execute a man without giving him the benefit of a trial by jury under an indictment according to the forms of law which the Constitution has prescribed.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to ask my friend a question in connection with that part of his argument. Does he believe that Congress under the Constitution may or may not impose a qualification for voters in the Territories?

Mr. PENDLETON. I believe Congress may impose some qualifications, but no qualification inconsistent with the fifteenth amendment; and I shall direct some remarks I have to make directly to that very subject.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish in that connection to ask the Senator from Ohio if he considers the act which I cited yesterday for the government of the Territory of Florida unconstitutional, which vested the entire powers of government in one or more persons to be designated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, including the judicial and legislative powers of the Territory?

Mr. PENDLETON. I have not had the opportunity of examining closely that statute; I do not know exactly what it provided; but I am prepared to say that if it vested in two or two hundred people the right to control and govern the Territory of Florida in any way inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States guaranteeing the rights of life and personal liberty and property to the citizens, it was unconstitutional.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. PENDLETON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask him if he believes that Congress might constitutionally take away from the inhabitants of any Territory of the United States all power of self-government whatever, and might make all the laws, civil and criminal, and appoint officers to execute them, giving the inhabitants of the Territory no voice whatever? Is not that exactly what we have done in a Territory acquired? Is it not what we do in this District? If that be true, how can the Senator complain if Congress may constitutionally exercise all the powers of government for a Territory and not allow any voting at all, when instead of doing that it allows the citizens to vote on certain conditions?

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I have not yet complained of anything; I have not yet reached the point where I am disposed to complain at all of this bill, or of any of the provisions of it. I was defining what I considered to be the extreme limits of the powers of Congress over the Territories. I am not prepared to say that I could fix the exact limit where I think Congress ought to allow to the people of a Territory the right of governing themselves. It has been done in some cases where those people reached perhaps six or eight or ten thousand; it has been denied in other cases until they reached thirty or forty thousand. This I say: that the Congress of the United States is bound to afford to the people of a Territory the opportunity of self-government within certain ranges, as soon as it becomes safe and proper that they shall exercise that right, in order to prepare the Territories to be admitted as new States; and until such admission, as long as it assumes to control and govern them, it is bound by the grants and the prohibitions of the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. But are not all the Territories to-day subject to the veto power of the governors in whose selection the people have no part and the veto power of Congress?

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not know that all of them are. Some of them are; perhaps all of them, but that suggestion, I submit, would not in any degree affect the argument that I am making as to the power of Congress at all times, and the duty of Congress at some time, to remit to these people the rights of self-government. I do not find myself bound in any way at all to antagonize the position gentlemen have taken in relation to the powers of Congress over the Territories. I might differ with them. I do differ with them essentially, but it is not necessary for my argument that I should enter into any discussion with them upon that subject.

Now, what is the bill before us? It is a crimes act. The title defines it to be a bill to amend a clause of the crimes act. This whole title of the Revised Statutes of the United States, of which section 5352 is a part, is the crimes act of the United States. This bill provides an amendment to a clause of the crimes act, and the only amendment that I see in the first section of this bill is simply the introduction of the words "and any man who hereafter simultaneously or on the same day marries more than one woman."

I do not know whether it is found necessary in the practice of this Territory to be so particular as to the time when the act of the second marriage takes place. It may have been. It may be that they have held that the day was but an instant of time, and if the marriages took place on the same day it was not a subsequent or a prior marriage, and therefore it was necessary to introduce this provision of the bill. I do not know how that is, and I therefore take no exception to it. At all events this is an addition to the crimes defined in section 5352 of the Revised Statutes, which is part of the crimes act of the United States.

Then section 2 of this bill as originally reported, but now section 3, is another addition to the crimes act, for it provides—

That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

I do not know the exact state of the law on this subject, but I suppose that the crime heretofore defined is cohabiting with any other woman than his wife, and that this section of the bill is intended to meet the case where with or without marriage he shall be guilty of this cohabitation. When we come to the fourth section of the bill what do we find? In defining the qualifications of jurors who shall sit in cases of this kind, we find that it shall be a cause of challenge that a man "is now, or ever has been living in the practice of bigamy or polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman, or that he is or ever has been guilty of an offense punished by either of the foregoing sections" of this bill. "Is or ever has been."

Mr. President, your experience on judicial tribunals and in construing and observing laws is very great. Did you ever know a jury law which went back to the whole course of a man's life and disqualified him for sitting upon a jury unless he would swear that he is not now, and never has been guilty of any of the acts defined as crimes in the laws? He may have been a bigamist; he may have been a polygamist; he may have abandoned all those beliefs; he may have abandoned all those practices; he may have, either by death or divorce or otherwise, been entirely freed from the obligation which the marital relations imposed upon him, and yet according to this bill he is forever deprived of the right of sitting upon a jury in these cases. Where is the justice of that? Where is the propriety of it? You take away the locus pœnitentiæ; you deprive him of the inducement to abandon that which you define as a crime; you say that if he has abandoned what you have now for the first time defined to be a crime, or at least now do define to be a crime, he shall not sit upon a jury. Do you do that in relation to any other man? A man goes into the penitentiary after conviction of crime, and in some States he is disqualified from sitting on a jury, but if he comes out upon a pardon he is competent to sit upon the jury; but he would not be competent under the provisions of a statute like this. The pardon, while it may wash away his sins so that he shall become as white as snow, cannot override a provision of the statute that prescribes that he shall not thereafter sit on a jury.

Now, sir, I do not think this extremely important; I am perfectly ready to admit that, but I do think it shows the animus and spirit with which this bill is pressed upon the Senate to-day, and in that I mean no reflection upon honorable Senators who sit upon the Judiciary Committee. I think it is the outgrowth of a spirit which is abroad in the land which means to stigmatize these people as criminals, as outlaws, as beyond the borders not only of civilization, but of the protection of the Constitution of the United States.

I am not to be misunderstood. I will coincide with any gentleman who endeavors to go the farthest, within proper limits, to crush out this crime of polygamy. I believe that the home is the fountain of the purest civilization; that it presents the safeguards by which society is to be secured; that the sweet charities of conjugal and parental and filial love are those which guide and guard our civilization. I will do what I can properly to relieve all our people from influences so deleterious as I believe these polygamous marriages to be. I am now striving to perfect not to defeat this bill. But, sir, I believe still more that the great guards of personal right, which the Constitution has provided, the great provisions securing to every man the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that he shall not be punished, except after indictment and trial by jury and conviction, after being confronted with witnesses; I believe these are more important to be preserved through all the ages and under all conditions than that we shall crush out in a day any evil practices prevailing in a neighborhood and community, however evil those practices may be.

But I find here, Mr. President, in the eighteenth line of this section, that among the causes of challenge shall be the belief that a man can rightfully "have more than one living and undivorced wife," or "live in the practice of cohabiting with more than one woman;" that is to say, if being married to a woman according to our monogamous institutions, a man deserts her, abandons her and lives with a prostitute in daily cohabitation, he shall be a proper juryman to sit in cases of this kind; but if he believes and faithfully lives up to the doctrine of purity in his relations with the wives with whom he has been married, he shall be utterly incompetent. You pay a premium upon vice which parades itself as vice throughout all the country, and you put a prohibition upon that which pretends to be virtue.

Mr. HOAR. I think, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. He will see that this criticism on the bill is hardly a just one.

Mr. PENDLETON. I shall be very glad to correct it if it is not true.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says that the bill leaves men who are in the open practice of immorality in the method he has described to sit upon a jury. The bill does not prevent the ordinary method of filling up a jury list which prevails everywhere, which secures the selection from the body of the community of men of high character and standing. It does not prevent the Territorial law making the method or the Territorial marshal exercising his discretion.

Mr. PENDLETON. I understand very well, Mr. President, that this bill does not prevent the doing of other things than that which it prescribes shall be done; but here you press this bill and you undertake to define the causes of challenge against jurors who are to sit in these particular cases; you prescribe just this, that the professedly immoral and licentious may sit on the jury, but the professedly virtuous may not——

Mr. HOAR. That is my precise criticism on the Senator's statement, which he so courteously permitted me to make. This bill does not undertake to define the causes of challenge, leaving the ordinary causes of challenge to be settled in the ordinary manner. It simply adds this one. The bill does not say that a man indicted for murder shall not sit on the jury that tries him; that is left to the ordinary action of the law. So in the case the Senator refers to.

Mr. PENDLETON. This does not pretend to be a general law defining the qualification of jurors who are to be called at all times and upon all cases, but it undertakes to define the qualification of those who shall sit in these particular cases, and it includes the man who lives in open and corrupt and acknowledged vice as one of those whose competency to a seat upon a jury is maintained, and it excludes the man who does not. I propose an amendment that shall exclude both. I have no fault to find with the provision of the bill upon that subject, but I want an additional provision in it which shall also exclude the man who, having one wife, is living in open and notorious adultery with another woman.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask my friend from Ohio a question?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Assuming that the theory of a jury is impartiality, that impartiality must be in respect of the precise offense that is attributed to the accused. I assume everybody will agree to that. Therefore I ask my friend from Ohio whether it is quite in point to say that no man should sit on a jury in an indictment for forgery who had been guilty of having two wives or living in a state of open adultery? The question is whether that vice would affect the impartiality of his mind as it regarded the question of forgery. Now, the question is, if a man is accused of bigamy, whether one who lives in open adultery has a particular prejudice on the side of two wives. I think there is where the point of the thing really comes as between the two cases. I do not mean to say that my friend from Ohio would be able to answer the question from any special point of information.

Mr. PENDLETON. Whether or not the law should go to the extent of saying that a man guilty of forgery or not guilty of it or suspected of it should sit upon this jury, I agree might be outside of this bill; but in this bill you provide that a man who is indicted for the crime of bigamy or polygamy may not be tried by one who is living in polygamous relations, but may be tried by one who having one wife is living in adulterous relations. I submit that they are at least so sufficiently connected as that they ought to be provided for in this bill or else the rule alluded to by my friend from Georgia, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, will apply.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But, if my friend from Ohio will allow me, I think he will agree that the whole course of political jurisprudence as to jurors is to exclude those from the jury-box who have a bias upon the particular point that is to be tried, and no others. That is the theory of this bill exactly; the theory of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decision of every State court, indeed, for that matter, upon analogous questions.

Mr. BUTLER. Those questions, the Senator will pardon me, are always propounded to a juryman.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly. It is the law now really. We only put it into a statute and allow the court to try the question instead of having it done by triers.

Mr. PENDLETON. The Senator from Georgia suggests to me that I shall ask the Senator from Vermont this question: Why, if you exclude a man who is prejudiced in favor of a crime, you should not exclude a man notoriously prejudiced against it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a very proper question and one that all human institutions outside of the State and the Church, (and I will say there, too, because I will not make a joke at the expense of my friend,) have always recognized. Every juror in every political community is supposed to believe in the law, in the government that he is living under, and therefore the idea is that you are not to carry on a government by putting it in the hands of its enemies; and so it is that in every case of a juror, you exclude him for bias and so on and so on; and therefore in the sense in which some people talk about it every jury that is challenged at all is packed; that is to say it must be a jury that believes that the law that it is executing is a law that it has a right to execute and ought to execute. That is the distinction.

Mr. PENDLETON. Now, Mr. President, this bill being a crimes act and in amendment to a crimes act, and defining still more rigidly than heretofore the various crimes named in the crimes act, and defining also the qualifications of jurors who are to try the crimes mentioned in this act, goes on to say:

> That any polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, shall not be competent to vote or to hold office.

These are the very crimes defined in this act; they are the very crimes which are now to be punished. The bill provides that men who are guilty of these things, now made crimes for the first time, shall be disqualified from voting and from holding office. When I find a provision of this kind in a crimes act—not in an act regulating Territories, not in an act establishing governments for Territories, but in a crimes act following upon the definition of new crimes, following upon the prescription of punishments, following upon the clauses which provide the qualification of jurors for the trying of these crimes—a provision of the bill which disqualifies as voters and as office-holders, the very men whom it has defined as criminals in the earlier sections, I cannot resist the conclusion that it has at its foundation an intention to punish by this disqualification the men who are guilty of these crimes, I cannot resist the conclusion that the foundation of this bill, the idea that lies at its groundwork, is that these are crimes now to be defined, and to be punished not only by imprisonment and fine, but by deprivation of the right of voting and the right of holding office. I say when that is to be done it is an essential principle of our justice that this punishment shall be inflicted only after conviction.

It is nothing to say that originally Congress might define the qualifications of voters; they did so. It is nothing to say that if they were establishing a new government now, they might define the qualifications of voters. They might. That is not descriptive of this bill; that is not the provision of this bill. I find, as I said, that it is an amendment to a crimes act, pursuing the provisions of a crimes act, defining crimes, providing their punishment, providing jurors by which they shall be tried. It provides that the punishment shall be by fine, by imprisonment, and by disfranchisement. Confessedly under the Constitution of the United States, specifically under the provisions of this bill, the punishment of fine and imprisonment can be inflicted only after indictment, trial, and conviction, by a court of competent jurisdiction, and after the accused shall have had the benefit of the process of the court, of confronting witnesses, of cross-examination, of an impartial jury—shall have had the benefit of all the safeguards which an enlightened jurisprudence throws around him who is charged with crime. Why should the punishment of disfranchisement be imposed under less stringent conditions? These men are citizens of the United States. The mantle of the Constitution enfolds them. They are entitled under the law to vote; to hold office. They have always voted and held office. They do so now. You define a crime; you charge them with it. You say, if guilty they shall be fined, imprisoned, deprived of these rights which they have enjoyed and do still enjoy. You say—this bill says—they shall be fined and imprisoned only after conviction, under the guardianship of the law and its courts; but they shall be disfranchised on the finding of a political returning board—a board organized, as this bill clearly shows, for the express purpose of disfranchising as many of these people as it can. I do not think, Mr. President, that that can stand for one moment. No ingenuity, however acute, can make us believe that this was intended to appear on its face to be a bill for the reorganization of the political government of any one Territory or all the Territories of the United States, and the declaration of the fundamental law upon which these new civil communities are to be built up. On the other hand, no ingenuity can make us believe that this bill will not, in effect, if carried out, under the guise of providing punishment for a crime, overturn the political system of a Territory.

I would not introduce political considerations into this discussion, but I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that this bill, if it becomes a law, will transfer the political power of the Territory to the Republican party—a party which has 1,500 votes out of 15,000, and its friends know that fact full well.

The Senator from Missouri has pursued the discussion of this violation of private right so far that I do not intend to enter upon ground so well occupied by him. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Vermont, who has charge of this bill, to the answer that he made to the Senator from Georgia when he quoted from Burrill's law dictionary the definition of a polygamist or bigamist. The definition there is: "a man who has had"—not who has, but who "has had—two wives or more wives." That is bigamy or polygamy. His law dictionary, cited by himself as authority approvingly, defines a polygamist as one who at any time in his life has had more than two wives living at the same time. I think this section is therefore not only liable to the criticism that was made upon it by the Senator from Georgia, but it is liable to a further criticism which was originally made by the Senator from Missouri early this morning, that if a man has been once guilty of the crime of polygamy or bigamy he can thereafter never be entitled to sit upon a jury or vote or hold office. If the Senator from Vermont will do me the favor to look at his own definition, the definition that he read with approval from Burrill's law dictionary, he will find that it does not relate to the present condition of the man, but does relate to his antecedent condition at any time of his life. It is therefore that I shall propose the amendment that I have suggested I would propose at the right time to this bill.

The Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Arkansas defend this bill because it is an attack on a theocratic government which has grown up in this Territory. I submit it does not attack that government. It attacks neither those who believe in nor those who uphold that government. It attacks only the polygamists, when it is perfectly notorious that there are many Mormons who neither believe in the doctrine nor practice polygamy, but who most sedulously uphold the authority, the power, the divine inspiration of the Latter Day Saints Church.

Mr. President, I repeat that I am not to be misinterpreted in this matter. I desire to crush out this great crime, I desire to produce all over the United States that condition of society which I believe is necessary to the enduring excellence and the perfecting of our civilization. I believe in home, I believe in the family, I believe in the tender influences of wife and mother, and parent and children, and I do not believe that they can be found in polygamous households at all; but because I do not believe in these things, I am not willing to vote for these provisions of the bill which, as I say with all modesty, and with all respect, I do consider to be ill-judged and, possibly I might say, ill-considered by so able a committee as has reported it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe in five or ten minutes from this time the debate closes by agreement. I desire to say a few words in regard to this bill, and the time allotted will be sufficient for that purpose.

I am in favor of the general objects of the bill and of its provisions; but I wish to record, before the bill passes, my convictions, from some observation and study of the question of polygamy in Utah, that the bill will be ineffective to cure the great evil complained of. I believe that if any one is convicted under either of the first six sections of this bill, it will only make him a martyr, make him more influential in the Territory of Utah. That has been the effect thus far. For thirty-two years this institution of polygamy has existed in Utah; various efforts have been made to convict persons guilty of practicing it, under the law; but it has been very difficult. Still there have been some convictions, and no doubt under the first six sections of this bill there will be many convictions, because the offenses are more clearly defined, the proof is made much more simple. The exclusion of a person known to be a polygamist from the jury is a very important provision, and I do not see any objection to it; but in my judgment these prosecutions against individuals will only excite sympathy for them, and will not lead to the end hoped for.

In respect to the seventh section it is a pretty harsh provision, and it will be very difficult to put it in practice. How many polygamists are there in Utah? How can these five men tell who is a polygmist? In many cases the men offering to register and vote may not be known; in many cases it will be impossible to prove that they are polygamists. How can you tell whether they are polygamists or bigamists? According to the statistics as I learned there, there were about twenty-five hundred all told who were supposed to be polygamists, to have more than one wife, out of probably ten times as many Mormons who have but one wife or have no wife at all. There are really more men in Utah than there are women. It is said, according to statistics I have seen, that 7 per cent. are polygamists in the sense the term is used in this seventh section, and 70 per cent. of the whole population is Mormon, and the remainder are Gentiles. It does seem to me that to exclude this 7 per cent. from holding office, to deny them the right to hold office and to vote, will only make them more influential. We tried the experiment on the passage of the fourteenth constitutional amendment of excluding the leading men who had participated in the late rebellion. It only made them more prominent; it did not prevent them from coming back here and making laws and taking a conspicuous part. I am strongly inclined to think that the singling out of two thousand or twenty-five hundred persons will only make them more conspicuous. They will rule the rest; there will be enough Mormons left to elect the Legislature, and these leading men, who hold the property, who are the men of intelligence, many of them men of education, of great power, and great wealth there, will rule and govern the Mormons who will elect the Legislature.

The machinery here will answer very well. No doubt the five men selected by the President of the United States will secure a fair election; but what assurance have you that the rest of the Mormons, after you exclude 2,500 of them, will not elect every member of the Legislature of Utah? Will not these Mormons then, by their superior wealth, information, and intelligence, control the other Mormons? And this Legislature so elected by the majority of Mormons will come in and then the whole of your machinery is ended; your five commissioners are functus officio, they are out of office, and then the Legislature assumes the powers that you give to the five. That is the provision of the bill.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the bill because I have no doubt it has been carefully conned over, and I hope it will tend to promote the object in view, but I must confess that I do not see much ground for that hope. I believe yet that the majority of the Mormons there will elect the Legislature of Utah; that prosecutions will be very difficult and convictions almost impossible, although easier under this bill than under the previous law, and that the whole system will be ineffective. I believe myself that the only remedy for this evil, which the people of the United States will grapple with and will end some of these days, is to place in power there a government that is not controlled by Mormon votes, a just, fair, honest, strong government that will administer justice and do what is right without respect to the will of a people who defy a fundamental law of Christian civilization. That is my conviction. You cannot deal with it by the machinery of law when you leave the power in the hands of the majority of the people of that Territory who are Mormons, and none the less Mormons because only one-tenth of them practice polygamy. I know it is hoped that some of these persons will turn against the idea of polygamy; that the non-polygamous Mormons will finally overcome the others and disregard their wishes, but at present and from the beginning the few polygamists have controlled and governed that Territory, and will control it, in my judgment, in the future.

Now, sir, I have no trouble such as moves my colleague and my friend from Alabama in regard to these great powers. No doubt Congress can say who shall vote in the Territories. It says in this District that nobody shall vote except the President who appoints the commissioners and the Senate that confirms them. Nobody here votes or has any power over the government of the District except Congress which passes the laws, and the President who appoints, and the Senate which confirms the commissioners. There is no more doubt, in my mind, of the power of Congress to govern the people of Utah as it sees proper, exercising its discretion with its accountability only to the people whom we represent, the people of the States. Therefore there is no trouble about this matter in my mind. I do not see any legal difficulty in the way. There is not a single provision here which, in my judgment, contravenes the Constitution of the United States. It may not be judicious to have such harsh and severe laws; it may not be wise to exercise such powers; but that Congress is vested with the right to do it I think there is no doubt. Therefore, while I will vote for the bill just as it stands and for all its provisions, I must confess my doubt as to whether it will be effective to cure the great evil which we are seeking to deal with.

I have been twice in that Territory, spending two or three days at a time; I have read a good many of their books and papers, and am myself pretty well advised of the political and religious questions that have been involved there; and in my judgment the evil can only be dealt with by some power extraneous to the Territory; some power outside of Utah that will give them a just government and a strong government for a while until this system of polygamy may be abandoned by the common consent of the apostles themselves. I believe the time will come, and I hope it is not far distant, when some authority there will have a revelation from a higher source that they will recognize, and in that way get rid of this bad, injurious, unchristian, and disgraceful institution of our age and time, and of our country.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, I am not in any physical condition to address the Senate on this bill, and I shall not attempt to do so. I was not able to attend the deliberations of the Judiciary Committee while this bill was undergoing discussion and preparation. I regret very much that I had not the benefit of consultation with my colleagues on that committee, nor have I had the benefit of the discussion which has taken place here. I would have stated to them what I now wish to state to the Senate, that this bill does not meet the approval of my judgment. I am not only opposed to the provisions which have already been discussed so ably by gentlemen, but to the policy of the legislation which the committee propose.

In my opinion, sir, it is a cruel measure, and will inflict unspeakable sufferings upon large masses, many of whom are the innocent victims of a system. I do not think that the bill has been sufficiently considered in view of the importance of its provisions.

With this simple declaration, I shall not detain the Senate longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past five has arrived, and the Chair understands that the agreement was that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee should have a few minutes to reply to the various matters which have been submitted in debate before the vote is taken.

Mr. BROWN. Before the Senator from Vermont proceeds, I want to give notice of another amendment that I will propose, to come in after the word "assembly," in line 30 of the last section:

Provided, That said board of five persons shall not exclude any person otherwise eligible to vote from the polls on account of any opinions such person may entertain on the subject of polygamy, nor shall they refuse to count any such vote on account of the opinion of the person casting it on the subject of bigamy or polygamy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it would have been agreeable to me to have occupied an hour it may be in stating to the Senate all that has led me and the Committee on the Judiciary to report this bill; but I only have ten minutes, which is enough for any condensed purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Twenty minutes was suggested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN,] I suspect, is quite right in what he has said that this measure is very likely not to accomplish all that some people might suppose it would accomplish. It may be that the domination of this autocracy, hierarchy, theocracy—I use all the terms—will still control the political action of the Territory of Utah; but we try the mildest of measures first. We take out by this bill from the present government of Utah all of its essential powers, because the statistics and the information that we have demonstrate that the government of the Territory of Utah from top to bottom now is and has been for a long time—I do not know but all the time—including both houses of its Territorial Assembly, in the hands of the polygamists. Every member of its council but one is a polygamist glorying in from two to six wives. Every one but two or three of the twenty-six members of its house of representatives is also adorned with that distinction. And when you go into the executive offices of that Territory much the same thing exists.

Now this act, if it has no other effect, will have the effect of displacing from political supremacy all the persons whom the laws of the United States for twenty years have said were people who ought not to be allowed to carry on a government. It will have that effect provided the President of the United States and the Senate of the United States, his constitutional advisers, select for the administrative and judicial offices of that Territory men who are wise enough and able enough to enforce the laws; and that, I may say, has been the great difficulty for the last twenty years that the Government of the United States is far from being free from criticism upon that point. It will do so much.

Now if there be in this Mormon Church a body of people, as we believe there are, who have no more faith in this idea of polygamy than any Senator who hears me has, as a fact, and who wish to discourage it and who wish to emancipate themselves from the tyranny of this hierarchy that now has its foot on their necks, there will be a chance for them to assert themselves.

It is true that this is something like what the Senator from Georgia and some other people have alluded to indirectly; it is one of the "twin relics of barbarism;" and it is true that it may seem to people who still have failed to forget, as I hope most of us have forgotten, that political differences have led to what appeared to be harsh measures, that they are committing themselves to a principle that they had denied before in saying that they will not allow people who practice this unchristian, unrepublican, destructive thing, to carry on a government over which we have control; and they may think this involves them in a contradiction about something that is past. I do not think it does; but I cannot fail to see, nobody can fail to see from what some Senators have said, that the chief opposition to this bill has grown out of a sentiment of co-ordination, if I may use that phrase, with something that has gone by and that had existed and that led to particular events.

There was the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States that excluded from office-holding a large number of citizens of the United States. Those citizens or most of them undoubtedly felt, and those who have not forgotten (as I wish they had and as I have until I am spurred up to remember it) how it arose, feel that this is just like that sort of thing; and that while we excluded by the fourteenth amendment from holding office people who engaged in what was called a rebellion—and I use that phrase industriously because I will offend no man's opinions and do not wish to—we are doing something contradictory to the resistance to that idea. It is not so at all, Mr. President. No man, North or South, who believes in the Christian religion, who believes in a republican government, can maintain or has maintained in this body that this institution of polygamy is one that can exist consistently with our universal idea of the true theory of a republican government. Nobody has pretended such a thing.

Then may I not assume that we wish to get rid of it? Everybody says we do. How are you going to do it? You say you do not like what we have proposed. Will you propose something else? Oh, no. It is always some other day, some other measure that is not now defined, that is not now brought forward. It is some other day, some other time, some other measure, than the one that is proposed.

Now I come back to the precise point that we have before us, the essential substance of this bill—and I cannot waste my ten minutes in talking about constitutional considerations—is that the distinction between the power of the people to regulate political rights and their power to deny civil rights is as plain as anything can be. In the case of the constitution of every State in this Union almost, there has always been the provision that no man who is an idiot, a pauper, or a lunatic, shall be entitled to vote; and that question of whether he is entitled to vote is not submitted to a judicial tribunal to decide whether he is a pauper or an idiot; but it is decided in the first instance (subject, as in every case, and as it is here, to an appeal to a judicial tribunal) by the political authority of the State in which the question arises. That has existed in I presume every State constitution. Upon what principle does it stand? It stands upon the principle that the body of the people—and that for the Territories is the Congress of the United States and nobody else, for we might abolish them to-morrow—have the right to determine who shall exercise a political franchise as distinct from a private or civil right.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the woman suffrage case have recognized and affirmed exactly the same proposition that the right to vote or to hold office is not an inherent right of a citizen, but it is a conventional right dependent upon the will of the majority of the community in which the right is claimed to exist. That is just what this does.

Now we come to the practical point. The government of the Territory of Utah in every one of its practical administrative and political aspects is a government of polygamists—not a government of faith or opinion, but a government of fact. The men who practice that thing are in possession of that government; they are in possession of it in defiance of the statutes of the United States punishing that thing; they are in possession of it in defiance of all civilized, Christian, modern understanding of what it is right to do, not what it is right to think.

The Committee on the Judiciary recognize to the fullest extent all that has been said touching the right of every man and every woman to believe precisely what he or she likes. He may be an infidel and believe in nothing; he may be of any sect; he may believe that a hundred wives or no wives are right; he may believe in horse-stealing or whatever he likes. So long as he believes merely he has a right to his opinion; but when it comes to what he has to do in the government of the country it is a different thing. The horse-thief may not sit on the jury where a horse-thief is on trial, if he says on being asked that he thinks horse-stealing is a Christian duty; and yet some people have talked to us the idea that if you exclude horse-thieves from a jury that is to try a horse-thief you have packed the jury. That is not the case unless it be that every jury is packed in a sense. As I said some time ago, each jury, like every other agency of government, must believe in the law that they are called upon to enforce; otherwise the law itself becomes a mere mockery, and trial by jury a sham. You must in that sense pack it upon one side or the other; and upon which side? If you are to have a government at all, you must pack it on the side of the people who believe in the law that they are sworn when they take their places in the jury-box that they will faithfully and impartially execute. That has existed without statute at the common law; it is the common law now; it is the law of the United States in Utah now, and this jury clause that we have in this bill only puts into form and provides convenient methods of carrying out exactly what the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the law now is.

Then you come to the practical point, whether you are willing to deal with this question, not as a question of faith at all—for there is no clause in the bill that can be tortured into dealing with or affecting any man's faith; but there are clauses in the bill that deal with his conduct, and if his conduct, be it a conduct of faith or conduct of practice without faith, falls within the very principle of every organized community of being subject to be dealt with by the authority of that community. Nobody questions that; and when you deprive the pauper in Illinois or Georgia or Vermont of the right to vote, you do not say that he must be convicted of pauperism by a judicial trial in advance. You say that the political authority must decide in the first instance whether he is a pauper or not. If that political authority decides wrongfully against him, and his vote turns the question of how that election is to go, the judicial authorities come into play and put the right man in his place. That is exactly the effect of this bill.

So then, sir, we come back to the question of whether the Congress of the United States is willing to deal with the fact of a polygamous government in a Territory of the United States over which I assume—because I cannot go into this constitutional or so-called constitutional argument—the United States has supreme control as to its political character. That is all there is to it. If we have that control which I assume, then the question is whether, saying all of us that we are against the practice of polygamy and do not believe that a polygamous community ought to be entitled to carry on the government as a polygamous government, we shall put the offices of that community into the hands of those who are not polygamists. That is all there is to it, and there is nothing more to it that can be stated. If you do not want to do it, if you wish things to go on as they are, let them go. It is for the Senate to determine.

More than that and beyond that, it is not the mere practice of polygamy, bad as it is, but that happens to be an inherent and controlling force in the most intense and anti-republican hierarchy, theocracy, as an organized and systematic government that, so far as my small reading has gone, has ever existed on the face of the earth. The Church of Latter-day Saints, a corporation organized under the authority of law, controls in every respect every step in the Territorial operations of that community. The three presidents by step after step, the three first presidents, as they are called, but I believe that the last one of those is the absolute ruler in point of fact—you may disguise it and gloss it as you please—of the destiny and the fate of that people, polygamists, Mormons who are not polygamists, and Gentiles. Is that republican? Can you tolerate in the heart of this continent of republics the building up of a State of that character? That is the question. If you cannot tolerate it, and have the power to dispose of it, are you willing to exert that power? That is the question. This bill is one step, only one step to that end. The Committee on the Judiciary have under consideration other and further measures, which I hope we shall report in due time, which will make up and supplement this measure, to eradicate, as far as just government may, not any man's faith or opinion, but to bring the political community that exists within the boundaries of that Territory into its republican relations with the great Republic that surrounds it. That is all.

You can always find reasons and flaws and difficulties for not doing a thing if you do not wish to do it, and the Committee on the Judiciary do not suppose that this measure alone is sure to have the effect that some people imagine it is to have; but we hope that this Senate, before it is through with this business, will do all—and that will be sufficient—that the absolute political power of this Government has within its reach to accomplish the purpose, not of breaking down any man's faith or his opinions, but making the practice of the government of the Territory of Utah and of its inhabitants conformable to what is essential to the republican safety of every one of the States of this Union and the republican safety of them all under the Union of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator just one moment? I wish to say to him in advance that I intend to vote for the bill; but referring to the remark made by the Senator from Mississippi as to the cruel and harsh features of this bill, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont if in the measures now before the Committee on the Judiciary they contemplate providing for the women, for instance, who are required to abandon their polygamous practices, and such measures as those which, in my judgment, will relieve this measure of its harsh and cruel effects.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on the Judiciary have under consideration precisely those questions, although it is due to say, that this bill does not leave any polygamous woman in any worse condition in point of law than she is at this moment, but it leaves her children in an infinitely better condition, because it makes them legitimate.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Vermont indulge me for a second? If the committee have such measures before them, and have not had opportunity to bring them to the attention of the Senate by report, would it not be better to postpone the consideration of this bill until we receive the committee's entire programme?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee is not of that opinion. The committee proposes here one single thing. Aside from the rectification of an old statute about polygamy which nobody has seemed essentially to object to, it is to take the political power in that Territory out of the hands of this body of tyrants which, in spite of the laws of the United States, and against every republican idea that anybody believes in, they have held for so many years. It proposes to do that thing now, and it proposes at the same time to authorize the President of the United States, if authority be needed, (and I need not go into that question,) to forgive all that is past. It proposes to make the children of all these illegal and unlawful and mischievous connections, legitimate and capable of inheriting both from their fathers and their mothers. What further it is desirable to do in other aspects of the question, is reserved for further consideration.

That is the whole of the question, Mr. President——

I have not the time under the indulgence of the Senate to go into the constitutional argument. The simple statement of the position of the committee is that under the Constitution of the United States it has been often decided that the Congress of the United States has complete power over the Territories. It may abolish all government there; it may determine all franchises, and we think it has not lost that power by the fact that it once exercised it.

Mr. PENDLETON. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me, merely for the purpose of getting information, to interrupt him before he takes his seat? The Senator has said that at all times it is the habit of gentlemen to say, "Not this bill, not this measure; some other time, some future time, some other measure. If measures can be introduced to meet our approbation we will be ready to cope with this subject." I desire to say that I am ready to cope with it now; and for my part, while I should do it most reluctantly, nevertheless, if the Senator from Vermont will incorporate in the seventh section the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, I shall very gladly vote for the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, but that has the effect of emasculating so far as its political aspects go, the whole value of the bill. There is no use of disguising that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to the last amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, in line 14 of the committee's amendment, after the word "Senate," to strike out "all" and insert "not more than three," and after the word "shall," in the same line, to strike out "not;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That all the registration and election offices of every description in the Territory of Utah are hereby declared vacant, and each and every duty relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, the receiving or rejection of votes, and the canvassing and returning of the same, and the issuing of certificates or other evidence of election in said Territory, shall, until other provision be made by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory as is hereinafter by this section provided, be performed under the existing laws of the United States and of said Territory by proper persons, who shall be appointed to execute such offices and perform such duties by a board of five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of one political party.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS, (when Mr. BECK's name was called.) I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) Upon all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] This may, perhaps, be considered by some as of that nature. I shall therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CALL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE, (when Mr. HALE's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. HALE] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.]

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) On this amendment I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.] I should vote against it if he were present.

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KELLOGG. On this particular amendment I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. GEORGE,] who would, if present, have voted for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this vote——

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Chair would withhold the announcement. There is evidently a mistake about one of the pairs.

Mr. JACKSON. There is some misapprehension as to the pair of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. GEORGE.] I understood he was paired with Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, but the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] announced a pair with him. Now, it would be right for the Senator from Louisiana to vote, I think.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] said to me some time since that he was paired on the bill with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] or some other Senator.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. KELLOGG. Probably it was Mr. CAMERON he said, and I did not notice whether it was the Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from Wisconsin. He said he was paired with that Senator on the bill, and that he desired to pair with me on this amendment. Perhaps my colleague can state how the Senator from Mississippi is paired.

Mr. JONAS. I was present when the Senator from Mississippi paired with my colleague.

Mr. HAMPTON. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] requested me to announce that pair; that he is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN.]

Mr. ROLLINS. Senator CAMERON, of Wisconsin, is paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. GEORGE,] as he announced to me.

Mr. HAMPTON. That is upon the bill itself.

Mr. ROLLINS. Upon political questions. This vote has been a political division, but I will transfer the pair to the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONE,] which will make it all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] desire to vote or not?

Mr. KELLOGG. Now, not being paired, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jonas,	Vance,
Brown,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Vest,
Camden,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Groome,	Maxey,	Walker,
Coke,	Hampton,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Davis of Illinois,	Harris,	Pugh,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jackson,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Allison,	Harrison,	McDill,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Blair,	Hill of Colorado,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Teller.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morrill,

ABSENT—27.

Beck,	Frye,	Lapham,	Ransom,
Butler,	George,	Logan,	Sewell,
Call,	Grover,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Mahone,	Slater,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Georgia,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Fair,	Johnston,	Morgan,	Windom.
Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Now I move in line 30 of the same section to insert the following words after "assembly:"

Provided, That said board of five persons shall not exclude any person, otherwise eligible to vote, from the polls on account of any opinion such person may entertain on the subject of bigamy or polygamy; nor shall they refuse to count any such vote on account of the opinion of the person casting it on the subject of bigamy or polygamy.

On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that amendment. It is exactly what the bill is now. If the Senator wants it, let it go in.

Mr. BROWN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the last amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary as amended, proposed as section 9.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is an amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments to the text of the bill are in order. The amendments of the committee have all been disposed of. In the opinion of the Chair, inasmuch as section 8 has been adopted as an amendment of the committee, it cannot be amended until the bill is reported to the Senate. That is the section the Senator from Delaware proposes to amend, the Chair understands.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to offer an amendment to the second section, and also to the seventh section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the seventh section of the print?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Of the print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "That the issue of bigamous or polygamous marriages," &c.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; "that no polygamist," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a committee amendment and was adopted yesterday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be amended by adding to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendment by way of addition is in order; but it cannot be amended now by striking out.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Can I move to amend that section in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be amended here by the mere addition of words.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is what I propose to do. Then I offer this amendment:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to any person now holding any office or position of public trust, honor, or emolument, whether by election or appointment, during the time for which he was elected or appointed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays. We might as well strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] If he were here, I would vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] I announce it now as applicable to the entire bill.

Mr. VANCE, (when Mr. RANSOM's name was called.) I rise to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 13, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Brown,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,	Williams.
Camden,	Jonas,	Vance,
Coke,	Lamar,	Vest,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Would an amendment be in order now to the second section, for I have not been noticing the progress of the bill? The second section has not been passed on, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second section is a new section, "that the foregoing provisions shall not affect," &c. Or does the Senator refer to the second section as printed in italics?

Mr. SAULSBURY. On page 2, "that if any male person in a Territory or other place," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is now section 3.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I propose in the third line of that section, after the word "jurisdiction," to insert "after the 1st day of July, 1883." It will then read:

That if any male person in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, after the 1st day of July, 1883, cohabits," &c.

I move to strike out the word "hereafter" and insert what I have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, who of course is not as familiar with parliamentary law as most Senators present, that section being a committee amendment which has been adopted by the Committee of the Whole already, cannot now be amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot strike out any words adopted; but if the amendment is merely to put in additional words it is in order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I will offer the amendment in the Senate if it is not now in order.

Mr. BROWN. I move in section 7 as printed, now the eighth section, I believe, to insert, after the word "bigamist," in line 1, "who has been legally convicted of practicing the same."

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. That is striking out the enacting clause of the political part of this bill.

Mr. BROWN. It would then read:

That no polygamist, bigamist, who has been legally convicted of practicing the same, or any person cohabiting, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the Committee of the Whole having agreed to the section in this form, it is not competent now to amend it in this stage. It can be amended in the Senate after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it due to the Senator from Georgia, and with great respect to the Chair, to say that I think he is entitled to move to add any words, not striking out any.

Mr. BROWN. I am not moving to strike out any.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He is entitled to do that, which is like the amendment we did receive and vote upon a little while ago. I think it is in order to add words.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair permit me to read a sentence from Jefferson's Manual? On the two hundred and ninetieth page, speaking of amendments, the Manual says:

If it be received it cannot be amended afterward, in the same stage—

Speaking of the successive stages of a bill—

because the House has on a vote agreed to it in that form.

Now a distinct amendment, coming separately as another section to the bill, may be moved in committee, but where the committee have in a particular form adopted as an amendment a section, that section cannot be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the opinion of the Chair, and the Chair will adhere to it, being supported by the Senator from Massachusetts. The amendment is out of order. It can be offered again in the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I should like to understand this matter. I offered an amendment which the Chair said was not in order at that time, but would be taken up when the section was reached.

Mr. BROWN. I withdraw my amendment, as I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri better covers the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is liable to the same objection as the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. It can be offered in the Senate, but after the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has agreed upon an amendment, the form of it and the substance of it, it cannot be again amended in committee; it can be amended in the Senate. The Senator can offer his amendment in the Senate. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. VEST. I will offer it in the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate take a separate vote on each amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve the amendment put in on motion of the Senator from Georgia about allowing the President of the United States to appoint two people of some particular political party.

Mr. BROWN. Then let us have each separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be considered separately. The first amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In section 1, line 7, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "has" and inserted "have."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 1, line 11, to strike out "has" and insert "have."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in line 12 of section 1, to strike out "bigamy" and insert "polygamy."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to insert after section 1 the following:

SEC. 2. The foregoing provisions shall not affect the prosecution or punishment of any offense already committed against the section amended by the first section of this act.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to amend that section in line 3, after the word "jurisdiction," by striking out the word "hereafter" and inserting "after the 1st day of July, 1883."

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I believe I have the privilege of making some remarks on the amendment. My object in offering the amendment is this: we know that there are many persons in that Territory now holding marital relations which this bill seeks to break up; but is it right, is it proper that we should enact a law here to-day that will cause the man who has three or four wives instantly to abandon those women, and the children whom he has had by them, turn them out upon the cold charities of the world without notice, or else subject himself to the pains and penalties of this act? I ask Senators whether in their judgment such a thing commends itself, or will commend itself, to the good sense of the American people?

I am as much opposed to this vile practice of polygamy and bigamy as any gentleman on this floor; but I trust that I am not so hardened in my own opinions and sensibilities as to be willing to have these deluded people subjected to all the misfortunes and injuries which this bill proposes; and therefore I have interposed this amendment in order that those unfortunate and deluded people may have a little time in which to adjust their marital relations, and make provision for a proper separation from the women they have married. That is the object I have in view; it is not to embarrass the passage of the bill, but it is to perfect it.

While I am sure that there is no more competent tribunal than the members of the Judiciary Committee of this body to prepare and present a bill, yet I have never been able to recognize infallibility either in the Pope or in the members of the Judiciary Committee or in any other committee. I think the bill would be improved by this provision, and I offer it in good faith, not for the purpose of embarrassing the passage of the bill, but to put it in such shape as I believe will commend it to the good judgment of the American people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the understanding was that we should vote without further debate. I simply ask for the yeas and nays on the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no agreement on the subject. It was that a vote should be had. Probably Senators supposed there was five-minute debate.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no doubt the Senate understood that the general debate was to close at half past five.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was what the Chair understood. The general debate was to close at half past five, and five-minute debate would be allowed after that. ["Oh, no!"]

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see how we can have a five-minute debate unless we agreed to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair stated what the understanding was to be, and that was that we should vote at not later than half past five. There was no other understanding stated; but we have heard the Senator from Delaware, and I only ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That announcement will be considered as made for the evening.

Mr. HAWLEY. I might as well add that the Senators from Maine would vote for the bill if they were here.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Camden,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Jonas,	Vance,	Walker.
Davis of W. Va.,

NAYS—42.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the section as adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the section still open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MORGAN. In the third line I move to strike out, before "woman," the words "more than one" and insert "any," and after "woman," to insert "other than his wife;" so as to read:

That if any male person in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction hereafter cohabits with any woman other than his wife, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate, the Chair is advised, is not in order unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Vermont took occasion on each occasion to remark when a certain amendment was proposed that if it was adopted it would defeat the bill. Then the Senator from Delaware spoke on his amendment. I do not wish to violate any rule of the Senate, but I think I have a distinct right to ask the attention of the Senate for five minutes to the question whether or not it was the intention of the committee to allow a man to have one——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator proceeding for five minutes? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Alabama may proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to know whether it was the intention of this committee to allow a man in Utah to have one concubine besides a wife. As it is now the section provides that a man to come within its provisions must have at least two women, one of whom may be his wife and the other may be somebody else. I do not know exactly what the meaning of the section is, and it is with a view of getting a clear idea of it that I offer this amendment.

The Senator from Vermont——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama appeals to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Vermont does not feel at liberty to debate this question any more.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not ask the Senator to trouble himself with any remarks by way of explanation, but——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state if everybody is willing that I shall do so simply this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the Senator may proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No rule can stop the Senator from Alabama from proceeding now if he wishes to speak, or me either; but I do not wish to violate the understanding. The committee considered that question and wished to report the section precisely as it stands, looking to the practice of polygamy. They did not undertake to deal with the sins and wickednesses of the rest of mankind in this particular bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the Senator from Vermont intends by his bill to allow a man to have a concubine and a wife both.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Vermont does not intend to allow anybody to have a concubine anywhere.

Mr. MORGAN. But understanding that he has one, this section provides that he may have two.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, this bill provides that he cannot vote at all. It applies to a certain class of persons who shall not vote. There may be a great many others who would not be entitled to vote if every man had his due.

Mr. MORGAN. That makes a question. This bill exempts a man from the penalties of this act who has a wife and concubine both.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are no penalties in this section at all.

Mr. MORGAN. There is a penalty by imprisonment and fine and also by a denial of suffrage. Now, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL, (when his name was called.) If I were not paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] I should vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.]

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] If he were here I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 7, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—7.

Brown,	Hampton,	Jonas,	Vest.
Groome,	Harris,	Vance,

NAYS—44.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Pugh,
Allison,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Rollins,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole as section 3.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to insert:

SEC. 4. That counts for any or all of the offenses named in sections 1 and 3 of this act may be joined in the same information or indictment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was stated to be after "bigamy," in line 1 of section 5, to insert "polygamy or unlawful cohabitation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I presume no Senator will object to taking all the amendments in that section, which are merely phraseological, en masse, without reading them fully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section can be read through as amended.

Mr. PENDLETON. I wish to amend the section. In line 5 of that section, before the word "living," I move to strike out the words "or has been," so as to read "that he is living in the practice of polygamy."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be the better way, the Secretary suggests, to take the words in italics which have been inserted as amendments and adopt or reject them, and then take up other amendments.

Mr. PENDLETON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sure there is no objection to agreeing to the words in italics, which are principally phraseological.

Mr. PENDLETON. I agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair will put the question on all the amendments to section 5 in a body, without their being read in detail.

The amendments to section 5 were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now the Senator from Ohio may propose his amendment.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move in line 5 of section 5, before the word "living," to strike out the words "or has been;" so as to read "is living in the practice of polygamy."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 15, noes 28.

Mr. PENDLETON. I take that vote of the Senate as an indication that they do not intend to vote for any of the amendments that I suggested my purpose to offer, perfecting the section in that direction. Therefore I shall not offer those I have heretofore stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The next amendment was, in section 6, to strike out——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sure no Senator wishes to move any amendment to the amendments made in committee to the printed section 5, now section 6. It is merely the amnesty section; and if no Senator wishes any change in it, we can save time by taking the question on all the amendments to that section in bulk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made to section 6 in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments were concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was stated to be, in section 7, line 1, to strike out "plural" and insert——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendments to section 7 are of the same character as those to sections 5 and 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on all the amendments to that section without their being read in detail.

The amendments to section 7 were concurred in.

The next amendment was, insert the eighth section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the section the Senator from Misssouri desires to amend.

Mr. VEST. I move, in line 5, after the word "shall," to insert "after conviction first duly had for the offenses hereinbefore mentioned in a court of competent jurisdiction;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall, after conviction first duly had for the offenses hereinbefore mentioned in a court of competent jurisdiction, be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. VEST called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.]

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I was paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] upon the amendment proposed to this bill by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN,] and as this is of the same nature as the amendment of which he gave notice, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I was paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia; and this being of the same character, I should vote "nay," if I were at liberty to do so, and he would vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 11, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Brown,	Davis of W. Va.,	Pendleton,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,	Walker.
Coke,	Jonas,	Vance,

NAYS—33.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Allison,	Garland,	McDill,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Harris,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Bayard,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Blair,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Teller,
Butler,	Hill of Colorado,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees.
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell,
Dawes,	Jackson,	Morrill,
Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,

ABSENT—32.

Beck,	Frye,	Johnston,	Platt,
Call,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Camden,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Grover,	Logan,	Slater,
Davis of Illinois,	Hale,	McPherson,	Van Wyck,
Fair,	Hill of Georgia,	Mahone,	Williams,
Ferry,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole as section 8.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BROWN. The amendment excepted by the Senator from Vermont in the next section is the one I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is now a portion of the section, which will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the ninth section was agreed to without dispute and one on the yeas and nays which I cannot get reversed now, and so I shall not make any point about it. Let the section stand as amended by the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on section 9.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It need not be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont called for a separate vote on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I could not technically call for a separate vote because it was put in in committee, but I should have to move to strike it out. I am satisfied I cannot get a majority to agree with me on the yeas and nays that have once been taken, and so I do not move to strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on concurring in the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole as section 9.

Mr. VANCE. Let it be reported. ["Oh, no!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the last section.

Mr. VANCE. What was the amendment of the Senator from Georgia?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That became part of the section, providing that not more than three of the board should be members of one political party.

Several SENATORS. All right.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment, the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

[On the announcement of the passage of the bill there were demonstrations of applause in various portions of the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is amazed at this noise in the galleries, but he will not order the galleries cleared at the present time, for they are clearing themselves.

LINCOLN MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to withdraw a motion to reconsider that I entered on the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be withdrawn.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4449) granting a pension to Lucretia R. Garfield was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Printing.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce the appointment of two Senators to fill vacancies on committees occasioned by the withdrawal of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] The Chair appoints the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Education and Labor, and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to fill the vacancy on the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. VEST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. INGALLS. The resolution that I offered about the arrears of pensions act was laid aside to consider the bill just disposed of. I ask that that resolution be now taken up.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Pursuant to notice——

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the resolution be taken up and left as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks that the resolution in relation to the arrears of pensions act, which was under discussion, be now taken up. That is antagonized by a motion of the Senator from California.

Mr. HOAR. I do not insist on my motion. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that we adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I propose to move——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have moved an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate will not object to my giving a notice. I propose to move to take up the bill in regard to the Presidential count; but I do not wish to antagonize the motion of the Senator from California. I think, however, this question can be settled to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. In all fairness the measure offered by the Senator from Kansas ought to be taken up and left as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] on the 12th of January, relative to the arrears of pensions act.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is the unfinished business, and is now laid before the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I renew the notice I gave yesterday, that as soon as this is disposed of I will move to take up the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese.

Mr. HOAR. I shall endeavor to call up the Presidential count bill immediately after that. Both can be done. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at seven o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 16, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. VALENTINE. That portion of the Journal, Mr. Speaker, which refers to the understanding reached last evening as to ordering the previous question on the apportionment bill to-day, I think is not correct.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask that it be read again.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let the portion touching the agreement in reference to the previous question be again read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that portion of the Journal again.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House thereupon resumed the consideration of the bill of the House H. R. No. 3550. On motion of Mr. PRESCOTT, by unanimous consent, ordered that the previous question be now seconded, when, on motion of Mr. PAGE, at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m., the House adjourned.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is not correct. The order of the House as I understood it, and if I am not right I ask to be corrected, was that the gentleman from Kentucky who then occupied the floor should have the right to the floor for one hour this morning, after which it should be considered that the previous question was ordered; whereupon the gentleman in charge of the bill should have the right to proceed for one hour under the rule.

The SPEAKER. From the statement in the RECORD of the proceedings on yesterday in connection with this matter the Chair is of opinion that the Journal should be corrected so as to show that by unanimous consent it was agreed, at the expiration of the hour to which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] was entitled when this question again came up for consideration, that the previous question was to be considered as ordered.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is right.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Upon the bill, pending amendments, and substitutes.

Mr. VALENTINE. That was the understanding, that it should embrace all.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

The Journal, as corrected, was then approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. CALKINS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. FLOWER. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw for a moment his demand for the regular order.

Mr. CALKINS. I withdraw it.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4447) to make additional regulations for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

STEAMSHIP MAIL SERVICE WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimons consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4448) to provide for the establishment of a fast ocean steamship mail service between the United States and Great Britain, and to secure to the Government the use of the vessels employed therein for postal, naval, and other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

LUCRETIA R. GARFIELD.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the select committee to audit expenses, &c., of the late President James A. Garfield's illness and burial to report for present consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Is that a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard the report.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I make no objection to it.

Mr. ATKINS. Let us hear the bill read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill granting a pension to Lucretia R. Garfield.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Lucretia R. Garfield, widow of James A. Garfield, deceased, late President of the United States, on the pension-roll, and allow and pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 per annum from and after the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COX, of New York. This is a copy of the bill in relation to the widow of President Lincoln, word for word.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if the committee had a right to go further than they have done in this matter and take into consideration the pensioning of widows of all ex-Presidents.

Mr. COX, of New York. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, I will read our instructions:

Special Committee to audit all claims for services and expenses growing out of the illness and burial of the late President James A. Garfield; also to consider what, if any, allowances, pension, or privileges should be granted the widow or family of the late President.

That is our authority.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not propose to offer any amendment to the bill, but I do propose to offer a similar bill to pension any other widow of any ex-President of the United States that may now be living.

Mr. MILLS. I understand the Senate have passed a bill of that kind for the widows of President Lincoln, President Tyler, and President Polk. Why not include them all in this bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4449) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANTS IN HOUSE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. URNER. I desire to make, from the Committee on Accounts, two reports, which, as I understand, are privileged; one asking for additional force in the post-office of the House, and the other providing for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims. I understand the necessities for this employment are urgent. The postmaster has requested repeatedly that there should be early action. I ask the Clerk to read the first resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Postmaster of this House desires to increase the facilities of the delivery of the mail matter to the members of this House, for which purpose he needs additional help: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Postmaster of the House of Representatives be, and he hereby is, authorized to employ two additional persons with his present force, and that they be paid out of the contingent fund of this House, at a salary not exceeding $100 per month, such employment to continue only during the session.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. URNER. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be authorized, until the further order of the House, to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the same rate of compensation now paid to session committee clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. In what form does this resolution come before the House?

The SPEAKER. It comes from the Committee on Accounts, having been referred there by resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 29.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before I raise the point that a quorum has not voted, I ask that the resolution may be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. ELLIS. Will the chairman of the committee inform me how many clerks are already employed by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. URNER. They have one clerk. I understand they have had an assistant clerk heretofore, and the chairman stated the necessity for the employment of an assistant clerk is so great they have a man now in the employment of the committee in the capacity of an assistant, and they ask the authority of the House that this may be legalized.

Mr. ELLIS. About how many bills are before that committee?

Mr. URNER. About a thousand, I think; probably more.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does not this resolution as it is drawn provide that this clerk shall be paid during the recess of Congress?

Mr. URNER. No, sir; during the session only, as I am informed.

The SPEAKER. The language of the resolution is, "until the further order of the House."

Mr. ATKINS. Did not that committee have an assistant clerk in the last Congress?

Mr. URNER. I believe they had. I am not certain.

Mr. HUBBELL. I wish it clearly specified that this assistant clerk shall be employed only during the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes the point that no quorum has voted. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. URNER, will take their places as tellers.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask for the reading of the resolution again for information.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HUBBELL. Let it be made clear that this assistant clerk shall not draw pay except during the session.

Mr. URNER. I ask if it would be in order for me now to modify the resolution so as to provide he shall be paid during the session only.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that modification might be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Tellers have been appointed and I call for the vote.

Mr. URNER. I move to insert the words "during this session only."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. BOWMAN. Is it in order for me to say a word on this resolution before the vote is taken?

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing.

Mr. BOWMAN. It has not commenced to divide.

The SPEAKER. One vote has been taken by division, and the House is now about to vote by tellers.

Mr. BOWMAN. I ask consent to say just one word.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and the tellers will take their places.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Is it now in order to move an amendment to the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It would be if the House was not dividing.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I ask consent to move an amendment.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the order for tellers will be dispensed with, and the Chair will entertain a motion to amend. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "until further orders" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "during this session only."

Mr. HUBBELL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, and others called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to introduce a bill for reference.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and the Chair has no discretion in the matter. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2415) to fix the term of office of collectors of internal revenue; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

URIEL CROCKER.

Mr. ERRETT, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 702, a bill (H. R. No. 4450) for the relief of Uriel Crocker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALBERT ELSBERG.

Mr. ERRETT also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1924, a bill (H. R. No. 4451) for the relief of Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WESTERN UNION RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1875, a bill (H. R. No. 4452) for the relief of the Western Union Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALBERT E. LEE.

Mr. McKINLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3045) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit certain customs dues and custom-house charges to Consul-General Alfred E. Lee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH COMSTOCK.

Mr. McKINLEY also, from the same committee, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3280) to reimburse Elizabeth Comstock customs dues paid by her on articles donated for the relief of colored refugees; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the amendment and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WEISS BEER.

Mr. CARLISLE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1044, a bill (H. R. No. 4453) to regulate the collection of the tax on weiss beer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2247, a bill (H. R. No. 4454) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburgh, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GREENLEAF CILLEY.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1022, a bill (H. R. No. 4455) for the relief of Greenleaf Cilley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered tobe printed.

COLOR BLINDNESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 24, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) relating to color blindness and visual acuteness in persons employed in the Navy and merchant marine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

T. G. MACKIE AND W. A. HYDE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3309) for the relief of Thomas G. Mackie and the heirs-at-law of William A. Hyde, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

TRAINING SCHOOLS FOR INDIAN YOUTH.

Mr. HOOKER. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purpose. I ask that the bill be placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Should not this bill go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. HOOKER. I think it ought to go to the House Calendar. It makes no appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Will it not require an appropriation to carry it out?

Mr. HOOKER. Not at all. The concluding proviso of the bill may possibly refer to the appropriation of certain moneys already belonging to the Indians for educational purposes; but I think the bill does not make any specific appropriation, and therefore it is referable to the House Calendar. It makes no appropriation out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Though the Chair thinks there is some doubt as to the propriety of sending the bill to the House Calendar, it will be placed on that calendar and ordered to be printed.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. AINSLIE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 1362) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian reservation, and for other purposes; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GREEN BAY INDIAN AGENT, WISCONSIN.

Mr. HASKELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3155) to confirm certain instructions given by the Department of the Interior to the agent at the Green Bay agency, Wisconsin, and to legalize the acts done and permitted by said Indian agent pursuant thereto; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HASKELL also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 406) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to give notice that a minority of the Committee on Indian Affairs desire to present their views in writing upon the bill just reported. The statement of the views of the minority is now in the hands of a member of the committee, and will be ready for presentation to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, leave will be granted to the minority of the committee to file their views and have them printed.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, from the Committee on the Territories, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1886, a bill (H. R. No. 4456) to enable the people of the Territory of Dakota to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT POUGHKEEPSIE, NEW YORK.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2087, a bill (H. R. No. 4457) for the erection of a public building at Poughkeepsie, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Mr. DE MOTTE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 1273 and 1275, a bill (H. R. No. 4458) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BOISE CITY, IDAHO.

Mr. DE MOTTE also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1906, a bill (H. R. No. 4459) providing for the erection of a public building at Boise City, Idaho; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILLIAMSPORT, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1449, a bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for United States district courts, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. LEWIS also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1441, a bill (H. R. No. 4461) to provide for the erection of a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts, post-office, customs offices, and other Government offices, at Erie, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SHREVEPORT, LOUISIANA.

Mr. BEACH, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 601, a bill (H. R. No. 4462) for a public building at Shreveport, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MACON, GEORGIA.

Mr. SCRANTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 106, a bill (H. R. No. 4463) for the erection of a public building at Macon, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LEAVENWORTH.

Mr. FORD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 343, a bill (H. R. No. 4464) for the erection of a public building at Leavenworth, Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN ANTONIO.

Mr. FORD also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1690, a bill (H. R. No. 4465) providing for a public building in San Antonio, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOUISA GASSAWAY.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back adversely the petition of Louisa Gassaway for a pension; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES COLLINS.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4315) for the relief of Charles Collins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANN B. HUBBARD.

Mr. BOWMAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 609) for the relief of Ann B. Hubbard, administratrix, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

H. K. BELDING.

Mr. BOWMAN also, from the same committee, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 839) for the relief of H. K. Belding; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH ANDERSON.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back adversely the petition of Joseph Anderson; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE F. BROTT.

Mr. HOLMAN also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3341) for the relief of George F. Brott; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF SALARIES.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3443) to reduce the salaries of the heads of Departments of the United States, and for other purposes, including those of members of Congress, with an adverse report.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If it is in order, I ask the report be read.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not care to make any objection, but at the same time it is not in order during this call.

Mr. KLOTZ. Let us have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is in order in making the report at this time.

Mr. CALKINS. But it must be printed and referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will submit his report.

Mr. HORR. I will read the report. "This bill referred to your committee had for its object the reduction of salaries" ——

Mr. RANDALL. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to debate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is not the reading of the report in order?

Mr. RANDALL. It is not, as the subject is not now up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read Rule XXXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a report from a committee, and if it is a report in good faith, it goes to one of the calendars without debate, and when it is reached on such calendar it will come up in order for consideration.

Mr. VALENTINE. But this is an adverse report.

Mr. RANDALL. It can go to the Calendar. Any one member can demand an adverse report may go to the Calendar.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not propose to have this body turned into one for amusement. A little fun is very well when the House is in bad temper, but we happen to be in good humor this morning.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I asked for the reading of the report if in order, but not for the purpose of affording amusement. The reading of the report, however, might afford the gentleman from Pennsylvania some instruction. If it is not in order I do not want it, but if it is in order I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not in order, but goes to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the effect of Rule XXXI to be, when there is a demand for the reading of a paper, on which the House is not called on to give a final vote, it is then for the House to decide whether it shall be read or not.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no such question raised in this case. This is simply a report from one of the committees of the House, and is governed in its procedure by a different rule from the one which has just been cited.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that this rule, XXXI, applies to this and all other like cases.

Mr. HORR. If it be deemed out of order to have the report of the committee read in this connection I have no preference in the matter, and have no objection to its being printed in the ordinary way.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have read in this connection the rule which governs the introduction of reports from committees, and their reference to the calendars.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman from Michigan has no objection to this paper taking the usual course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the rule, and ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to note the reading, as this involves an important question. The Chair understands that this rule relates to all other papers than those which the House is considering at the time.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I ask that the rule regulating the reports from committees to the House, and their reference to the calendars, be read, which directs how this business shall be transacted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that portion of Rule XXIV to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania alludes.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all days other than Monday as soon as the Journal is read and approved, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed.

Mr. RANDALL. That is it: shall be appropriately referred and printed. There is nothing about their being read, since they are not treated in the manner that a bill is treated when it is before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the rule which has been just read requires that the report and bill shall be appropriately referred. In the case of an adverse report, except upon the application or objection of a member, the bill is laid upon the table and the report printed. But the Chair still holds that where a proper paper is brought before the House, whether in the nature of a report and bill or otherwise, if its reading is demanded, it becomes a question for the House to determine. The Chair, however, understands now that the gentleman from Michigan merely asks that the report be printed, and that the bill be laid upon the table in the usual form.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection whatever to that, as it complies with the rule; the other does not.

Mr. HASKELL. The other does.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Michigan has now submitted the report. The Clerk will again read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3443) to reduce the salaries of the heads of Departments of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is reported adversely, and will be laid upon the table and the report printed.

Mr. WARNER. I ask that the bill and report be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLMAN. This should not go to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WARNER. Let it be referred to the proper calendar with the adverse recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it should be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WARNER. Very well. I have no objection to that.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with adverse recommendation, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees has now been concluded.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like at this time, if there is no objection, to submit certain requests of members, and lay before the House certain executive communications for printing and reference.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MOSGROVE, for one week from Monday next, on account of ill-health and important business; and

To Mr. DIBBLE, until Monday next, on account of important business.

NEW BARRACKS AT FORT LEAVENWORTH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, with accompanying papers, from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Secretary of War, dated the 11th instant, covering plans and estimates for completing the new barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and for the erection of additional quarters for officers thereat in connection with the school of cavalry and infantry; also the correspondence accompanying the same.

HALL'S SECOND ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication, with accompanying papers, from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, dated the 8th instant, and accompanying copies of letters from Rear-Admiral John Rodgers, Superintendent of the Naval Observatory; Professor J. E. Nourse, United States Navy; and Hon. John Eaton, Commissioner of Education, suggesting the publication of a second edition of the Second Arctic Expedition made by Captain C. F. Hall.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a letter from the Committee on Education, in which the recommendation is made that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for the purpose of education in Alaska.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

REPORT OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress the report of the board of Indian commissioners for the year 1881, accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 9th instant, suggesting legislation regarding reports from said board.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 880) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF DIGEST.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the Digest for the present session be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAP OF TRANSPORTATION ROUTES.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported, as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 10, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 136) to authorize and require the preparation of a map showing all rail and water transportation routes in the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to have prepared in the office of the Commissioner of Railroads an accurate map of the United States showing all navigable lakes and rivers, and also railroads and canals already constructed, those in course of construction, and those projected.

SEC. 2. That an amount not to exceed $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the preparation and printing by photo-lithographic process of the said map; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for as many copies of said map as the appropriation will justify, after deducting cost of the preparation of the original, and that said copies shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, after furnishing to the Senate and House of Representatives each a proportionate number.

SEC. 3. That copies of said map may be sold by the Secretary of the Interior at cost price with 10 per cent. added, whenever a sufficient number of orders for the same shall have been received to warrant the printing of the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that this resolution makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The third section does not make an appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. The resolutien takes money out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The second section makes an appropriation of money, but it may be a question whether it makes an appropriation for purposes other than those of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Its being for purposes of the House has nothing to do with it. It is an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States. What the Chair is alluding to is the contingent fund.

The SPEAKER. The report is in order. But the point of order is made that the resolution makes an appropriation of money; and the Chair is of the opinion that under clause 3 of rule XXIII it will have to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The point of order is sustained, and the resolution is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORT OF HEALTH OFFICER OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized to print 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia; 100 for the use of the Senate, 300 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,100 for the use of the said Health Officer of the District.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that it be again read.

Mr. VAN HORN. The same order was made during the last Congress, and has been every year since the establishment of the Board of Health. The report is now stereotyped in the Government Printing Office and there will be no additional expense except for paper and presswork.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. The Public Printing is now blocked up by matters of this kind. It is well known that the Public Printer is away behind on matters which relate to subjects of general interest throughout the United States. This is only as to the District of Columbia, and there is no urgency for this printing.

Mr. VALENTINE. I make the point of order that the House is dividing and that debate is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well. Then I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withhold that motion for a moment. I desire to say a word.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the motion for the present, to allow the gentleman from Illinois to be heard.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia——

Mr. VALENTINE. I insist on the point of order. The question was submitted to the House and the House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. The House is not dividing. By unanimous consent the resolution was again reported to the House, and the question has not been submitted.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia is now only printed as one of the executive documents transmitted by the President, and goes into the document-room. The pamphlet authorized by this resolution will be for distribution by the Health Officer of the District to such institutions as furnish documents to them with reference to the public health. The resolution provides for the usual number of copies of this document ordered by Congress heretofore; and as this District is under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, there is no means of having this report printed except by order of Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. The Agricultural Report for 1880 has just come in. We are not likely to get the Agricultural Report of 1881 for a long time to come; and the Public Printer himself informed me that the delay in the publication of books that are generally desirable is occasioned by this constant throwing in of unnecessary printing. Thousands of dollars are wasted every year in this way. Better begin now and curtail the expense and have the printing confined to that which is legitimate and necessary.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would not ask for a larger number of these documents than is usually printed, or for this printing, if it would result in any great expense. But to print this document would not cost more than $1,000, for it is already set up and stereotyped, and these copies can be printed without much extra trouble.

Mr. NEAL. This is a very valuable report. As has already been stated by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] the whole report has been set up and stereotyped, and all that is now required is the mere printing of it, which is a very small item compared with the cost of the work already done. This work was published without objection by the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth Congresses, and it should be published now. We might as well do away with our health board entirely if we do not publish this work.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would inquire of the gentleman by whose authority this work was set up and stereotyped?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is an executive document.

Mr. NEAL. It was sent in by the President and has been printed as an executive document.

Mr. CALKINS. I call the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 71, noes 74.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. RANDALL called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 35 in the affirmative; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 116, not voting 75; as follows:

Mr. SMITH, of New York, with Mr. DIBBLE.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. SIMONTON.

Mr. HERNDON with Mr. KETCHAM.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. VAN HORN. I call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, and others, called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

Mr. PRESCOTT. As this subject now stands before the House, there are three modes of division or apportionment pending. In order that there may be no uncertainty when we shall reach a vote, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. I have shown it to gentlemen on both sides of the House, and it is considered by them unquestionable.

Mr. CALKINS. Let it be read for information.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I gave notice of this resolution last evening.

Mr. RANDALL. It was a part of the agreement made last evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the vote to be taken upon the first section of the apportionment bill and amendments thereto, whenever the House shall adopt any number of members as the number for the House of Representatives hereafter, the same shall be apportioned among the States upon the same basis of division used at the Forty-sixth Congress, and now popularly known as the old method.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I reserve points of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] that the amendment which he sends up would not be in order to this resolution, but will be in order as an amendment to the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] submits as an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from New York what the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "upon the same basis of division used at the Forty-sixth Congress, and now popularly known as the old method," and insert "according to the constitutional and just method reported by the Committee on the Census, and known as the new method."

Mr. CONVERSE. I move as an amendment to the amendment the proposition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "hereafter," in the seventh line of the resolution of Mr. PRESCOTT, and insert the following:

"The same shall be divided among the States by giving a member for each full ratio in each Congress of the decennial period; and for each fraction of one-fifth of a ratio one additional member in the last Congress of the decennial period; for each two-fifths an additional member in the two last Congresses; for each three-fifths an additional member in the three last Congresses; and for each four-fifths of a ratio an additional member in each of the last four Congresses of the decennial period."

Mr. PRESCOTT. This matter has been fully debated upon all three of the propositions; and I therefore demand the previous question.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] will not cut off my amendment. I claimed the floor to offer the amendment before the gentleman had demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] that his proposition, which is an amendment to the bill, would be in order as such, but not as an amendment to this resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us understand whether the previous question is attempted to be enforced so as to operate upon these three propositions.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I call the previous question upon the resolution and the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls the previous question on the resolution and pending amendments.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order. I now hold the floor and propose to discuss the very question embraced in this resolution. It seems to me that I am entitled to be heard before the resolution is voted on.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask a parliamentary question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky is well taken. He has a right to be heard upon the respective merits of the old and the new method before the vote is taken on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The point made by the gentleman from Kentucky is hardly in the nature of a point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask my colleague [Mr. PRESCOTT] to withdraw this resolution now and offer it at the end of the speech of my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask this parliamentary question of the Chair, or of the gentleman who has offered this resolution: If we adopt this resolution will it have ipso facto any effect upon any amendment to the bill, or is it simply offered as an expression of the opinion of the House?

Mr. PRESCOTT. It is both. There are amendments based upon all three of the propositions covered by this resolution and amendments. The vote now determines those as well as the principle on which the division is to be made.

Mr. KASSON. The point of my inquiry is whether we must not have a vote all the same upon the amendments to the bill involving the questions embraced in the resolution, and whether, therefore, the resolution can have any useful effect. It seems to me that it is simply anticipatory of what the House may do when it comes to vote on the amendments.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Practically in voting hereafter we shall be compelled to vote upon one given number for the whole United States.

Mr. CALKINS. As the gentleman from Kentucky who holds the floor desires to speak on this question, I ask the gentleman from New York to leave this matter just as it is until the end of the hour to which the gentleman from Kentucky is entitled.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution and pending amendments will go over informally until the conclusion of the hour to which the gentleman from Kentucky is entitled.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] rises to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the first and second sections of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the amendment read, or is it simply offered for the purpose of going into the RECORD and being voted on in its order when reached?

Mr. HOOKER. I do not care particularly about its being read.

The SPEAKER. It will be considered as pending under the rule, and will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Will the gentleman state the number that he embraces in his amendment?

Mr. HOOKER. Three hundred and twenty six.

The amendment submitted by Mr. HOOKER is as follows:

Insert as a substitute for the first and second sections of the bill the following:

Be it enacted, &c., That after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 326 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows: Alabama, 8; Arkansas, 5; California, 6; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 10; Illinois, 20; Indiana, 13; Iowa, 11; Kansas, 7; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 6; Maine, 4; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 12; Michigan, 11; Minnesota, 5; Mississippi, 8; Missouri, 14; Nebraska, 3; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 7; New York, 34; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 7; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 11; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 10; West Virginia, 4; Wisconsin, 9.

SEC. 2. That whenever a new State is admitted to the Union the Representative or Representatives assigned to it shall be in addition to the number 326.

The SPEAKER. What portion of the hour has the gentleman already occupied?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. None at all in discussion.

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman proceed with the discussion yesterday?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I yielded to a motion to adjourn. I understood the Speaker to rule on yesterday that the time occupied by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] was not to be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did rule that the time occupied in making points of order when the gentleman from Kentucky held the floor should not be taken out of his time, but that the time occupied by the gentleman from Kentucky himself and by the gentleman from New York in discussion would have to be taken from his hour.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I yielded only momentarily.

Mr. COX, of New York. The agreement yesterday was that the gentleman from Kentucky could have his hour this morning.

Mr. PRESCOTT. It is only fair, I should say in reference to the time, that it was understood yesterday the gentleman from Kentucky should have his hour this morning to go on with the discussion of this question.

The SPEAKER. That will control the Chair.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I wish to stand by that agreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to an hour, and will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, at this late hour in the discussion of this important question it may be unnecessary to add anything to what has been already so well said by gentlemen who have preceded me; but I have submitted a substitute for the pending proposition which I believe to be worthy of serious consideration and of adoption by this House, as in my judgment it will relieve Congress and the country of the discussion and contest in reference to apportionment which takes place at every recurring decennial period. It will not only do away with the necessity of these discussions, but will prevent any waste of time in the consideration of the various apportionment bills. As my remarks will be principally directed to the consideration of this proposition, I do not see how I could better preface them than by sending to the Clerk's desk the substitute which I have moved in order that it may be read in the hearing of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to fix the number of members of House of Representatives, the manner of their apportionment among the States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That in the Forty-seventh and each subsequent Congress the House of Representatives of the United States of America shall consist of three hundred and nineteen members.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior, upon the enumeration of the population made in 1880 and upon each subsequent enumeration of the population as provided for by the Constitution, shall, as soon as the whole number of the population of the United States is ascertained, apportion said three hundred and nineteen members among the several States, and immediately notify the executive of each of said States of the number of members of said House to which each State may be respectively entitled under said apportionment.

SEC. 3. Said Secretary shall make said apportionment in the following way:

First. He shall divide the total population of the United States by the whole number of Representatives, and the quotient obtained shall be the ratio of representation.

Second. He shall deduct from said three hundred and nineteen as many members as there are States whose population upon the enumeration made is less than the ratio of representation, and assign one to each of said States respectively.

Third. After making said deduction he shall apply the ratio to the population of the several States to which no Representatives have been assigned, and the quotient obtained shall be the number of Representatives to which said States are entitled on even division.

Fourth. If the number produced by even division and those assigned to the States whose population is less than the ratio does not amount when added together to the whole number of three hundred and nineteen, then he shall assign to the State having the largest fraction on even division one of said members yet unassigned, and if two are left unassigned, then one to the next largest, and so on until all are assigned, giving said unassigned members to those States having the largest fractions.

SEC. 4. Whenever a new State is admitted into the Union, the member or members assigned said new State shall be in addition to the three hundred and nineteen herein provided for until the next apportionment under this bill, when the number shall again be as herein fixed.

SEC. 5. That all members of Congress hereafter elected by any State shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants, no district electing more than one member, and no voting precinct is to be divided in laying off said districts, and no city or county, if the districts can otherwise be practically made.

SEC. 7. Where the representation of any State is increased, such State may elect the increased number of members from the State at large to the first Congress succeeding said new apportionment. When the representation of any State is diminished, the executive of said State—unless the Legislature thereof has otherwise provided in anticipation of such dimunition, and until it does provide otherwise by proclamation—may lay off said State into the requisite number of districts in the manner heretofore provided in this act, and the Representatives of said States shall be elected by the districts thus laid off in time, manner, and form as now provided by law.

SEC. 8. That notice of the apportionment by the Secretary of the Interior to the several executives of the States shall not be delayed later than August 1 of the year in which the enumeration is made, and he shall also transmit to Congress immediately on its assembling a report of said apportionment.

SEC. 9. The enumeration of population and taking of the census shall hereafter be had and taken in April, instead of June, as provided in section 19 of the act of March 3, 1879, which section is modified to this extent.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen by the House that the object of that substitute is principally to take away at the end of every decennial period the necessity for the contest we have seen going on in this House for nearly two years in regard to the question of apportionment. There seems to be no good reason why at the end of each period of ten years, under the census then taken under the Constitution, this House should halt in its legislative labors and spend months in the discussion of how many members it should have and the plan by which they should be distributed. It seems to me from the discussion which has gone on here and to which we have listened there is no difference of opinion among all fair-minded men as to what plan should be adopted. They all agree upon a fair plan, but they are all divided upon one question, and that is how many members their own particular State shall have in the distribution of power. Now, if a plan should be adopted which is not dependent on the passions and prejudices of the hour and which is not dependent on the interests of the States, but which will leave the question above and beyond that, and at the same time be consistent with the Constitution and equitable, it seems to me Congress ought to adopt that plan, and to adopt it in advance, with a view of relieving future Congresses of any trouble on the subject.

In 1850 (and this is no new idea of mine) Congress did adopt such a plan; but in 1860, or rather 1862, because the apportionment was not made until then, the country was plunged into a war, and did not have time amid the beat of drums, the march of armies, on the tented field, to stop and consider the question of apportionment, and while it practically followed the plan of 1850 it nevertheless repealed the law intended to put the question of apportionment upon a permanent basis and take it away from Congress from that time forward.

Besides, sir, one whole section of the country was unrepresented, and the great questions on which the country had theretofore divided were hushed by the voice of sectional strife.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I do not claim originality for all of this bill, and possibly the members have given it as much serious consideration as I could ask.

The permanency of the plan is the main feature which recommends it, and the rapidity with which it conforms the House to the change of population is not to be despised, nor its effort to still further secure fair elections of representative men from small districts of contiguous territory and prevent that crime against representative government known as "gerrymandering" by which minorities are practically excluded from power and representation.

It is almost impossible to find any man who can give any new idea on this subject; indeed, I have thought the whole question was exhausted, and that nothing new could be suggested, until the Census Bureau did offer us something fresh, as they called it, but an examination of the plan which it proposed convinced me after a few moments' investigation there was nothing new in it, but that it was a return to those old methods not only discarded by Congress but rejected by the country. I have been surprised that any one in this House could be found so poorly informed as to believe there was anything new in the method proposed by the Census Bureau, and upon which they had expended so much time, so much patience, and so much arithmetical and mathematical talent, resulting at last in bringing before the country and the House a plan that has absolutely nothing new in it, except the circumlocution by which the result is arrived at.

Now, as to the plan proposed by the gentlemen of the committee, I do not know that it is hardly worth while to spend any time upon it, for it seems they have themselves practically abandoned it. After they had with much labor brought their offspring into the House, they leave it, as it would appear, without that maternal sustenance which such an offspring would be supposed to need, to die of inanition or live upon the charity of its enemies, for no member save the chairman seems to sustain it, and with him it is a question of interest, not affection. Why have they deserted it? Because its features are hideous and revolting when they come to look upon it. Mr. Seaton, the Superintendent of the Census Bureau, after spending months of labor at figuring, and perhaps thousands of dollars in clerk hire, has brought here a proposition which, when stripped of its circumlocution, is as old almost as the very foundation of the Government itself. Now, you may not have thought that, and possibly it has escaped the notice of a majority of the members of this House, but the Seaton method is nothing in the world, when you bring it down to arithmetic, except a distribution upon an even division regardless of fractions. It is a method that ignores all the fractions, and is nothing in the world but the distribution of the apportionment among the States according to an even division.

In support of this assertion I call the attention of the House to his tables as printed and to those of the able gentleman who preceded him, Mr. Walker, and I will not draw any comparison between the two.

Now, take his number 320 as presented by the committee. They presented that as a fair figure here in this bill for the distribution of the representative power among the States of this Union.

Now you take the number 337, which gives you a ratio of 146,502, apply it to all the States, counting out those that do not come up to the ratio, and you will find then that your division in this manner produces exactly 319 members or an even division, and when the member which comes to Nevada is included you make 320, and when compared to the committee's bill and with the members assigned to the different States under this bill which they have presented there is not a single solitary difference from one end of the table down to the other. All of the States have exactly the same number that this bill proposes to assign them.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, why have we all this circumlocution? Do gentlemen in the Census Bureau fail to understand their own bill or their own figures? Have they become so blinded that they do not understand their own mathematics? Or are they led to believe that in the broad domain of arithmetic they have been enabled to discover a new principle?

They may think so, but the most casual examination will show that when you come to distribute the fractions you distribute them according to this method to those States where the number of the population of each district comes nearer to that term brought into the House for the first time, and known as the "modulus," which modulus is merely the smallest ratio applied to any State. That is the term which they propose to introduce with their new calculations. It used to be called ratio. Who is it that has discovered this new method and coined a new word to describe it? Is it the Superintendent of the Census? Surely it must be some very subordinate. Why, Mr. Speaker, I went to the dictionary to find out what "modulus" meant. I found out that it was a measure for very small quantities, and I suppose it was intended to measure the mathematical information of the officer who succeeded in devising such a method, because there is nothing else to which it so aptly applies.

Why should we have a modulus instead of a ratio? Why should we adopt a term or method which nobody understands? Is it simply to conceal by this circumlocution a new method which makes an unfair and unequal distribution of political power, and return to that old method which was rejected in 1840 and has never since been recognized? Is it to return to a method which, during the preceding time, had been practically rejected in every apportionment from the first organization of the system down to 1830? You may take any number upon that book; you may select any number of Representatives for this House—a number presented under this new method—and I will find you a ratio which upon an even division will produce exactly the same result, disregarding every fraction; because you have nothing to do but to take as the modulus the ratio applied to what Mr. Seaton calls in his report the "ranking" State, apply such ratio, modulus, or number thus adopted from such ranking State to the population of the other States, and the number produced upon an even division plus the number set apart to those States whose population is less than the ratio will be the exact result accomplished by Mr. Seaton's long and tedious method of circumlocution.

Then, I ask again, why all this circumlocution unless it be to mystify, to mislead, or deceive the House into the adoption of a method which has been rejected for the last forty years? No other reason can be assigned for it. I do not know of anything that reminds me more of this circumlocution of the method recommended by the present Superintendent of the Census and adopted by the committee in this bill than what was said of a distinguished gentleman of my own

State, Hon. JOE BLACKBURN, a gentleman whose high-sounding adjectives, flowing rhetoric, and rounded periods have been heard upon the floor of this House and have tickled the ear of the country again and again. It was said of him, if you asked an ordinary man what two and two made he would tell you at once what it was; but when you asked this distinguished Kentuckian what two and two made, he would respond in something like this style: "That when in the course of human events it becomes necessary either that the whole people or one man should elucidate before the admiring world a proposition fraught with consequences as mighty as that now presented, then and there a decent respect for the opinions of mankind render it necessary, aye, not only necessary but obligatory, that without ifs or ands, circumlocution or cause, tending in any way or manner, or to any extent or degree, to mystify, magnify, or modify the same, should proceed at once, without further persuasion, procrastination, or delay, standing not upon the order of his going but going at once to that point which inexorable logic and that science which alone is pronounced exact, and which in every principle was as familiar to the ancient Egyptian when he toiled at his pyramids, like Ixion at his wheel, as to us on whom the sun of Christianity has shone for nearly two thousand years; howsoever, notwithstanding, nevertheless allow me, without any flights of oratory, flowers of rhetoric, rounded periods, or figures of speech, to say in all candor and earnestness, laying aside for the time being all party feeling, and to the truth of the proposition which I am now about to so solemnly announce, I pledge my life, my fortune, and my sacred honor—looking at it analytically and taking it synthetically—two and two make four." [Great laughter.]

Now, that is all there is in this proposition. After you have stripped it of all its circumlocution, you come down to the simple fact, two and two, under any and all circumstances, make four and no more. If any gentleman thinks there is anything involved in the arithmetic of this question beyond that, he is very much mistaken. All arithmetic, as I understand it, is composed of two things. The one is addition, the other is subtraction. An arithmetical process is merely ideal; it deals simply with the representation of substantial bodies; and all you can do with a quantity is to add to it or to subtract from it. Multiplication is a short method of addition, and division is but a short method of subtraction. Those learned in mathematics tell us that figures have absolute and inherent properties of their own, such as addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division invariably and necessarily present; and qualified properties, like casting out the nines, growing out of the decimal system which we use. That the decimal system itself is a mere matter of convenience. The use of nine digits is wholly unnecessary; two will answer for every calculation, and indeed simplify the most intricate problems. That the ternary, duodecimal, tornary, or sixteen systems are just as good, and whatever system is applied the same result will be attained. All of which results from the fact that they merely represent real bodies, measuring-rods, so to speak, and it makes no difference how the quantity is measured, it will leave the same result when added to or taken from the original. Yet this direct and exact science is to be so covered with circumlocution in its application to the simple problem of apportioning a fixed number of Representatives among a given number of States, according to their respective numbers, that two hundred and ninety-two out of the two hundred and ninety-three of the wise men of the land in Congress assembled, after wrestling with the subject near two months, fail to see the true basis on which the so-called new method rests.

The committee evidently believe that the longest way through is the shortest way around, and so follow it.

With all the involved matter that these gentlemen can throw around it, when you take this system which the Census Bureau has undertaken to impose upon us you find it comes down simply to one proposition, and that is the distribution of the powers of this House among the States on an even division, and no more, disregarding all fractions, however large. And it seems singular to me that somebody else did not think of telling you that before I got the floor; for that is the only new thing that has been said on this bill during the whole of this long debate.

I am sorry that I do not see at his desk the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE,] who has occupied the attention of the House on this question; I see he has now returned. I am gratified, for I wished him to hear what I have to say. That gentleman went into a perfest ecstasy of joy and delight when he became acquainted with Seaton's new method. I do not suppose that any sufferer from rheumatism, when he first heard of the virtues of St. Jacob's oil, ever had such spasms of delight as the gentleman from Pennsylvania had over this new method, when he discovered that it gave Pennsylvania 29 members, when she was only entitled to 27. I listened with attention to the gentleman's speech, and followed him through all the realms of arithmetic over which he wandered—and he went mightily into arithmetic. I accompanied him not only into decimal but into vulgar fractions. Laying aside that natural repugnance which every member of Congress feels to going into anything vulgar, I went with him even into vulgar fractions.

This ecstatic bliss, when he first saw Seaton's method, reminded me of a story I have heard of a long-legged, slab-sided, bare-footed, twenty-year old country fellow when he first started to school. It was way back when schools were few and far between. He was called up by the school-marm, as she was called out there, in front of a school-book. He was long, lank, green, and gawky, had never seen the inside of a school-house or school-book before. She asked him, pointing to the first letter, "What is that?" He looked from one side of the room to the other and then to the school-marm, and said: "I don't know." She said: "That is A." "A," said he; "goodness gracious, not A! I have heard of him all my life, but this is the first time I ever saw him." [Laughter.]

That is the way the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to be about this new method. J. PROCTOR KNOTT, whose heart ached and bowels yearned for some unknown haven of happiness, when he first heard of Duluth, did not endure the pleasant pains of joy and raptures of delight that that gentleman did when he first heard of Seaton's method, because it gave to his State two more Representatives than she was entitled to.

Now, I do not want to distribute the representation under any such method as that. There is nothing new in it. This same result can be reached by returning to the old method of even division, as any gentleman by taking the table can demonstrate in five minutes, and I am not surprised to see the gentlemen of the committee abandon it. They know there is nothing in the world fair in it.

If you want a House of 320, take Walker's table for 337, and the ratio for a House of 337, disregarding all fractions, gives 319 on even division, and 1 added for Nevada, who is not equal to the ratio, makes 320, the number required. Then compare this result on even division with Seaton's circumlocution, and you have the same identical result for each State. Why is this? Because the Seaton method only takes the ratio applied to the ranking State and applies to all others practically and necessarily producing the same result, for by distributing the fractional votes to those States who can get the most members on a basis least below the ratio is but an elimination of fractions from the count. The object of apportionment is to bring each State as near the ratio as practicable. The old method does that, for Florida with 2 members and New York with 33 are each nearer the ratio than Florida with 1 and New York with 34. Every time you take 1 from a small State and give it to a large one removes each that much further from equality, of which the ratio is the mean exponent.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCOID] who addressed himself to this bill, and I am glad to see him now before me, earnestly contended for it, because Iowa under this bill gets a member.

Mr. MCCOID. The gentleman is mistaken. Iowa gets just the same under either method.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is possibly some other gentleman to whom I am alluding, and not to the gentleman from Iowa. Why, sir, does the able chairman of this committee himself advocate this bill? Is it not because New York under it gets more than she is entitled to? Does he not feel he is the special champion of his own State? And I am surprised and sorry to see him in the advocacy of his bill forced into the position he at last assumes.

I have heard of many new methods and have investigated them all. We had two old methods, which gentlemen have presented, and with which all are familiar: one for the distribution of power according to fractions, and one for an even division. At last you have what they are pleased to call a new method. Now I do not know any thing that that reminds me of so much as what old Judge Bridges once said of a man who came to be examined before him for a license to practice law. He had read Blackstone for a long time, and the judge asked him how many ways there were of acquiring property at common law. He said: "According to Blackstone there are only two; but in my humble opinion, if it please the court, I think there are three." "What are they?" asked the court. "They are descent, purchase, and stealing." I think there is sometimes another way and a new plan of acquiring representation on the floor of this House, and the new method is the most apt plan I have seen of acquiring it. If these States get any additional Representatives it is simply by plundering other States that are entitled to these new members. Here, sir, is Florida, a little State, it is true, so far as population is concerned. She has now 2 members on the floor of the present House, and under this plan which the committee proposes they take 1 member away from her.

Florida has increased her population in the last decade 42 per cent., while New York has increased hers during the same period but 16 per cent. Yet Florida, with that increase of population of 42 per cent., is to lose one member in this House, while New York, with an increase of only 16 per cent., is to gain two members. Is that fair?

Now, if we are to distribute this power according to deserts and rights, here is the State of Florida, with 47,000 square miles, with a population scattered from one end of the State to the other, a State cut up by mighty rivers, one part totally distinct from the other, with but small opportunity for communication between the two ends of the State, the two sections of the State almost unknown to one another, yet Florida is to have but one member upon this floor, while New York, with its 5,000,000 of people—yes, New York City alone, (because they contend that this man is to go to that city with its compact population,) where every man in a district can be consulted in a few hours, and where it would take not more than a day to go over an entire district, while it would take nearly a year for one member to go from one end of Florida to the other, passing over hundreds of miles of territory—we are to take from Florida one of its members, so absolutely necessary for any actual acquaintance with its people and affairs, and give it to a State which already has 33 members on this floor. Now I cannot agree to any plan that accomplishes such a result. The gentleman from New York, the able chairman of the Committee on the Census, [Mr. PRESCOTT,] insists upon doing this on the idea that the bondholders of New York are entitled to some consideration in this House.

By the old method you give it to the largest fraction, by the Seaton method you obtain equality of representation as near as is possible. As between the methods there is no dispute or uncertainty, but one question presented is whether New York with her 5,082,871 inhabitants, with an assessed valuation of property subject to taxation of $2,686,139,133, whose citizens hold $210,264,250 of the nation's bonds, or about one-third of all held by citizens of the United States, being nineteen times as many as are held in California, fifty-two times as many as are held in Rhode Island, eight hundred and thirty-one times as many as in Florida; who represent one-fifth of the bank capital of the country and have and use one-quarter of its entire circulation; whose citizens hold nearly three-fourths of the whole gold certificates of the Government, and within whose State limits were collected in 1881 $141,958,855.90 of the customs, or nearly three-fourths of all in the country; whose banks paid the Government $2,042,838 in taxes, or one-fourth of all paid; the citizens of which pay $17,233,393.75, or one-eighth of the internal revenue of the Treasury, shall by a just apportionment, according to numbers, because of the largest ratio of apportionment, receive an increase of one-thirty-third of her representation, or shall California receive an increase of one-fifth, Florida of one-half, or Rhode Island one-half, as you shall give to one of them the Representative taken from New York.

Rhode Island, with only 276,531; Florida, with only 269,493, and California, with 864,694, are each the equal of New York now in the Senate, and will continue to be, although her 5,082,871 should become 10,000,000. In one branch of the Government they stand her equal in legislative power, and, while their combined population is but a fraction of hers, their voice is three times as potential.

Am I met with the claim that wealth, the sinew for the support of the Government and her bulwark of defense, counts nothing in representation?

That such was not the design of the founders of the Constitution is self-evident. Taxation and representation they considered joint factors in their blows for freedom.

I am sorry he has said that. I am sorry that the distribution of power in this House is to be based upon wealth instead of according to the Constitution upon population.

That gentleman says that out of $211,000,000 of banking capital in this country, New York has in round numbers $74,000,000, Illinois $15,000,000, and Pennsylvania about the same. And for that reason those three great States are to combine their mighty wealth together and come into this House and claim 3 members from three other States because they have not the same amount of wealth.

He says that New York should have this additional member because under the tariff system $141,000,000 of customs duties are now collected in the port of New York. Now, I will not agree with him on that, but rather than give New York an additional member, I will vote in favor of cutting down the customs duties by reducing the tariff until she feels that so little customs are collected at her port that she is not entitled to make claim on their account.

Why base representation on wealth and not on population? The gentleman says that in New York they have the bonds and the wealth. I would not have alluded to this, had it not been that it comes with more than the force of an ordinary voice in this House. I do not care how many members upon the other side of the House rise and deny that they agree to the proposition of the gentleman, or say that they disapprove it. It stands before the country, coming ex cathedra from the leader of the Republican party who has been placed in charge of this bill, and in his scheme he is backed by every Republican member of the committee. He has the right to voice the sentiment of the other side of the House, in so far as that committee has the power to do it. The committee has the right to do it because its members are the appointed representatives of that side of the House. And when they return into the House presenting a proposition by which they make a distribution of representation among the States based upon wealth and not upon the population of the country, I say it is a fatal stab made at the liberties of the people and constitutional government.

The country has a right to hold the Republican party responsible for this position taken by their chosen leaders and representatives on this great bill. As many as desire to do it have the right to say that they never have agreed to it. But it comes from the honored and selected representatives of that party, not only as a party, but it comes from a combination of these three great States, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and New York, which at the last national Republican convention undertook to dominate and control it, and which no doubt in the next convention will control it; who thus dominate and control the Republican party, and by so doing dominate and control the country.

I say that these three States, with one-half of the national banking capital of the country, combine their power together for the purpose of securing to themselves additional illegal and unconstitutional representation in this House, based not upon the provisions of the Constitution, nor upon their recognized rights, but, as the gentlemen themselves express it, only upon their greater wealth.

And they turn upon the gentleman from Florida, who protests against the injustice proposed to be done to his State, and say that New York has $74,000,000 of banking capital while Florida has but $375,000, and on this account New York should have this additional member.

Now, shall Florida, with a total population of 269,000, have the additional member, or shall we give it to the bondholders of New York? For my part I would rather give it to Florida, give it where manhood suffrage is the representative element, even if it be represented under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution.

For my part, if this country must fall, if it is to be destroyed, let it go down with the anarchy resulting from universal suffrage. I would rather this Government should die at the hands of anarchy, growing out of these amendments which have forced uneducated negro suffrage on us, than to die by the slow torture of corruption, or the cruel, cold-blooded cupidity of centralized capital and soulless corporate greed, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] seems to be the champion.

The Republican party is responsible to the country for thrusting before it the demand here and now for the first time made that wealth shall be acknowledged and recognized in the distribution of political power. You find no warrant for that in the Constitution. You find it nowhere except in the combination of these three great Republican States that are undertaking to dominate the country through the instrumentalities of the Republican party.

Mr. FLOWER. And no Democrat from New York is in favor of it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I am glad to hear no Democrat from New York is in favor of it. I hope that if there is a man who calls himself a Democrat who will consent to this thing he will turn his coat and his back on his party before he ever gives it aid or comfort.

I have been drawn away from what little I had to say upon this bill by pursuing the thoughts and arguments which have been presented here by other gentlemen. I am glad to see that many of them have modified their views, but I felt so outraged by the demand of the gentlemen of New York, Illinois, and Pennsylvania, where dwells the "Stalwart" power, the worst wing of the Republican party, a party which, years ago, even at best pronounced the Constitution as a "covenant with hell and league with the devil," and which has always ignored its provisions when grasping for power, and in which the dominant faction not only ignores the Constitution, but in spite of traditions as old as the Government and revered by the people, tried to force upon the country for the third time a man whose term was to be made perpetual, and who, failing in that, have received power at the hands of murder and assassination, that this same element should come boldly in this House, where the spirit of a liberty-loving people lives, breathes, and controls, and again attempt to set aside the Constitution and the people in the interests of wealth, bondholders, banks, and corporations, raises a just indignation which ought sooner or later to sweep it from power. It would not have been tolerated in the earlier and better days of the Republic.

We have had all sorts of propositions time and again presented to the House, but this is the last and the worst of all. It is to distribute power not according to population but according to banks and banking capital. Last year we had a proposition here to distribute power in this House according to voting population, and I am glad to see that the gentleman who then made a long and elaborate speech in favor of that proposition, insisting that representation should be based upon votes, has now gone back, as he says, to the old rule of practical common sense and the Constitution, and he agrees to an apportionment of representation based upon numbers instead of upon votes. If we were to apportion representation according to votes Rhode Island would be found to lose a member, because there is 1 member in this House from that State who never received more than 5,000 votes, while in Kansas and Texas you will find that some of the districts have from 60,000 to 90,000 votes. Rhode Island's votes are not to be counted. It is entitled to a Representative by reason of the fraction which is left after even division under that distribution which can alone be sustained as in pursuance of the Constitution. The apportionment of Representatives must be among the States according to numbers. That is what the Constitution says, and you must follow it except so far as it is modified by the fourteenth amendment. It has been found absolutely impracticable to apply the fourteenth amendment to this question, and the effort has long since been abandoned by the Republican party. They themselves consented to the enactment of that clause of the Revised Statutes which was a part of the act of May 6, 1872, and which has been heretofore referred to. With the passage of that law they stopped. It has been found absolutely impracticable to administer the fourteenth amendment for all the States. Every one of them in this Union have clauses in their constitution contrary thereto. Therefore we have nothing to do but to make the distribution according to numbers, and in making that distribution we ought to adopt, as we have the right to do, some permanent system to remove from the House this universal wrangling on the subject.

Now, the bill I have presented proposes an aggregate of 319 members. That number is not my favorite. I am frank to say that in the last Congress I voted against it. But I know that this House cannot be induced to consent to any better number. The Democrats from New York and Pennsylvania have voted for it. In the last House it was agreed to with the assistance of the Republican party. Every Republican member of this House who was also a member of the last House voted at that time for 319 as a fair number, the fairest that could be arrived at. If they believed then that it was a fair bill—and I could read the recorded opinions of the honorable Speaker of the House and half a dozen other members in advocacy of that bill—if it was a fair bill then, is it not a fair bill still? For there has been no change in the enumeration. Our apportionment must be based on that enumeration, and none other; and I do not see how, consistently with honor and integrity and their expressed opinions and the record made by the Republican party, gentlemen who voted for that number in the last Congress can fail to adopt it if we on this side of the House agree to accept it, as I believe we shall do.

But in fixing the number in the bill which I presented, I adopted it simply because I believed that the House would compromise on it. I believed the House was in a frame of mind for a compromise. But I believe we ought to do something further than that. I believe that we ought to have some permanent law, and I will state in a few words why I think so.

After the first enumeration of the population of the United States this quarreling over the apportionment began. The first apportionment bill failed between the two Houses. The next bill was vetoed by the then President of the United States, whose veto message has been read during this discussion, because it was based on no ratio which, as applied to the populations of States, would give the number then assigned. Congress did not follow any settled or stated rule down possibly to 1830. They went by arbitrary assignments, giving to this State and that any number that seemed desirable in order to pass an apportionment bill. But in 1830 Congress came down to what is known as the even division, or what might be called the Seaton method, because that is all it amounts to. In doing this they established for the first time a system. But in 1842, the question of fractions having again arisen, which had been discussed from the beginning of the Government to that time, Congress retraced their steps and adopted fractional representation.

But in 1850, when the question received more consideration possibly than at any other time, Congress adopted a permanent law similar to the measure I have now presented—the only one, too, that seems to me fair, because I cannot agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE,] which is to gather up the fractional strength of the small States and hold it in reserve unrepresented until the last or fifth Congress of the decennial period, and then give to every State having one-fifth of the ratio one Representative at that time.

How manifestly unjust that proposition would be, because taking his system at the first Congress he distributes it on an even division, which is the Seaton system, a system which has already been exposed to the House. At the next one, or the second Congress, he proposes to give those States which have four-fifths of a fraction a member, and to exclude all others, and so progresses on. At the next Congress those having three-fifths are to have one, and at the next those having two-fifths, and at the last Congress all come in which have one-fifth of a fraction. Three hundred and nineteen is the ratio he proposes, or the number to produce the ratio which he proposes, and yet in the first Congress he has but 303, 16 less than his ratio produces, and at the last Congress he will have 329, 10 more than his ratio allows. In other words, this system is very much like some modern scheme for storing electric fluid. He proposes to store up the power of the small States and to turn it loose with all its force in the last Congress, and thereby I suppose tear up the whole machinery because it is unprovided with rubbers and other appliances to prevent its destruction with all this increased strain of power.

Now, sir, of what use would it be to the smaller States after they get all the power it is proposed to give to them? Of what use is all this increased power to them when the laws are enacted before they get it, and under the rules of the House and by other provisions they cannot repeal the laws thus made?

The Constitution intended that the apportionment should be so made that in each House of Congress every State should stand upon a fair and safe distribution of power, to last during the decennial period. He distributes not to equalize in each House, but during a period of ten years. If you were to extend it for one hundred years you might give a State one-hundredth part of a fraction under the gentleman's system, thus at the end of the one hundred years adding 100 members to the House instead of adding only ten. And so you might go on ad infinitum.

The proposition at last is a sort of esthetical, a sort of Oscar Wilde theory, which the gentleman propounds; and it is really a matter impracticable when you come to administer it, if it is not absolutely unconstitutional and in violation of law. Therefore I think the gentleman's system cannot be adopted.

But, to come back now to what is the system and what is the plan. There seems to be but one. Some gentlemen have adopted the moiety system. That has been exploded by General Walker, a disinterested man, a Republican, a statistician, and a man of mathematics and learning, who exploded the moiety plan during the last year. If you will examine the moiety system you will find the ratio of representation changes every time you add one on account of the moiety. It thus makes a new ratio necessary; and so you never can have any ratio fixed for all. You then come to the plan of even division, or Seaton plan, which is the same thing, and that is full of all sorts of errors, and excludes fairness and justice, as has been amply shown.

Now, sir, there is but one plan, and that is the inexorable logic of arithmetic. It is to fix the number of which the House shall consist, and then divide that into the number of population, thus obtaining the ratio of representation.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] by his system proposed deducting from the population of the whole Union the population of those States having less than a ratio, which plan is impracticable, because you cannot tell what State to deduct from until you first determine the ratio, which must be by a division of all the population, including their own.

As I have said, there is but one plan, there is but one just, constitutional and mathematical plan, and that is to fix the size of the House and then distribute the members among the States according to numbers, giving to those of equal division, that is as far as entitled, and then to those having the largest fraction the remaining members, as best entitled to them. In that way you have approached nearer a fair representation and a more equal distribution of power, and were it not for the interest of the large States that system would not have been trenched upon from the foundation of the Government until the present time, but the passions and prejudices of the hour, the demands of the States, each one desiring an inordinate proportion of power, have changed that plan from time to time until we have come down to the present without any fixed or definite system.

Now, it seems to me we can have no more proper time, when the power of the House is equally divided, as every member knows, there being but a majority of one on that side over this—it seems to me there can be no better time when we can fix a plan more consistent with the Constitution than now. If you take the bill or plan I present, which is the plan of 1850, and give to the States on even division the power they are entitled to, and then to those having the largest fraction the remaining members, fixing the House at what number you desire, you will have acted wisely. Three hundred and nineteen has been recognized by both sides of the House at the last session of Congress as a fair number. But fixing that unalterably, some future Congress may come in at the next decennial period and say, "We need a larger House;" this 319 may be sufficient now, but will not be large enough then for an equal distribution of power. If so, they have power to change it, only they must make the change before they know how each State is to be affected, before passion is raised or party strife is heard, which is not apt to be done, for they are the potent factors in all these controversies. The apportionment would be made before Congress had knowledge of the result of enumeration.

The gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. TILLMAN,] as I understand from his argument the other day, wants to increase the number to 600. He wants us to have a parliamentary body as large as that of England. He forgets that the English Parliament is not elected under a representative system. He forgets that the House of Commons is not elected by the people; that one-ninth of the members of that House are elected by less than three hundred and seventy-four people, or at least they were in 1833; possibly there has been some extension of the right of suffrage since that time, because men like Mr. Bright and others have been agitating and contending for an extension of the right of suffrage for many years. But, Mr. Speaker, they have rotten boroughs everywhere; frequently one solitary vote not only sending a man into the House of Commons, but sometimes two. He is not in any sense a representative of the people, but represents himself and the corporate interests of that capital which sends him there and controls his actions. It is peculiarly a rotten system, and the House of Commons with all of its six hundred members has not in it as many representative men—men who represent the people—as there are now within ours of less than three hundred members. Their system is not based upon the people nor upon population. Besides that, the two Houses of Parliament have to legislate not only for England, but to legislate for the whole British Empire; every portion of it is under their legislative control, and every private bill must come before them for consideration. The passage of all laws of all kinds comes before the House of Commons, while we, with our grand system of thirty-eight local legislatures and thirty-eight independent sovereign States, are relieved of all the minor matters and inconsiderable local bills, which do not come before Congress at all.

Furthermore, I desire to say in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that I advocated at the last session of the House a small increase of membership, because I thought a slight increase would be but an appropriate response to our increased population. We have increased eleven millions of people since the last period, and if we increase the membership of the House short of 330, it will be no more than a fair and equal response for this increase in population, nor will it be more than can be comfortably seated on the floor of the House. If we increase the number of members of this House only 18, it would be simply an increase of one for every 550,000 increase of population. Should we increase our membership by 36, it would still reduce it to one man for every 275,000 of the increased population. I hope, Mr. Speaker, we will pass a bill at once.

There can be no reason for failure. We can fix upon a number which will be satisfactory to ourselves and to the people, if we want to, and, as I said a minute ago, I see no good reason why we should object to a permanent law in this connection. That is a matter, in my judgment, which ought to receive our careful consideration. There is no permanent law upon the statute-books to-day upon the subject of apportionment.

Why not take the subject out of Congress altogether? Why not frame a general law and put it upon your statute-books? Frame the law and after this Congress, when the time comes again to pass a census bill, I believe the honorable gentleman from New York, with that sagacity for which he is noted, has looked far enough in the future to see the importance of providing some permanent plan for taking the future census without additional legislation every ten years, and has so provided in the bill which he framed and passed. Let a bill be passed which will put the question of apportionment on the same basis, making it a mere question of calculation after the census has been taken. I say let us pass such a permanent bill now, and then if it is found at the end of ten years and the new House thus made comes into power that the apportionment is not correct or under it that it has not enough members, let that House with the new powers which it has, coming fresh and direct from the people as then enumerated, change the number of the House and reframe it to meet their own case and the necessities of the time.

My plan is this, that the Secretary of the Interior should do this work for us. He makes the enumeration of population. We lay down the number of which the House shall consist, which is the measure by which he obtains his ratio and by which ratio he shall distribute the power among the States, and he cannot vary from it.

Another prime object to be attained by my method is this: an immediate investiture of the States with their constitutional amount of power as fixed by the new enumeration. We have seen that apportionment bills have been delayed long, long after the enumeration is had, and nearly half the decade gone before a change in power among the States responsive to the change in population is had; that the great and growing States of the West which are entitled to additional representation in the House do not get it. Some upon this floor ought now to have additional members, but have actually less than they are entitled to. Texas is entitled to six or seven additional members under the last enumeration. Would she not have six or seven under this permanent system of representation now upon this floor contending for her rights and protecting her against wrong? Why has she not those members? Simply because Congress has never provided for the apportionment in time for the election at the first Congress succeeding the enumeration. I propose now that the Secretary of the Interior, as soon as the enumeration is concluded, shall apply our rod, our "modulus," if the gentleman, Mr. Seaton, or whoever happens to be the Superintendent of the Census, shall prefer that name—that he shall apply the ratio 319 members to be apportioned among the States according to the rule, and if Kansas or Texas shall be found entitled to the increase, when the enumeration is completed, by reason of an increase of population, let them have the additional representation, under the general law, upon this floor that they are justly entitled to at the first Congress after such enumeration. And instead of finding some States here whose powers are reduced, or with Representatives and power in this House to which they are not entitled, you will find each State under the new enumeration with a fair, just, constitutional and appropriate representation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the main feature in the bill which I have presented. It is to have the apportionment taken away and lifted from this House and placed in the hands of a man who goes only by arithmetic, and not by passion and prejudice or party feeling, or at the request or behest of a State. But before that enumeration occurs in 1890, before the House is advised what this State will lose or what the other will gain, the apportionment will be made, and the members on the floor will be assigned under that apportionment; and there is no chance for quarrel; no chance for dispute. If they come here and desire a new deal in making the apportionment, each State will have the advantage of its increased power to coerce a fair distribution, and, having already obtained it agreeably to the Constitution, there is no likelihood of again losing it.

There are some other features in the bill which, it seems to me, will commend themselves to the House. One of these has been advocated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BELTZHOOVER.] That is the feature that there should be no splitting of voting precincts or the division of counties or cities except where it is absolutely necessary to be done. This is merely another step taken by Congress to prevent the gerrymandering of the States; and the bill provides that unless it cannot be otherwise practically done, no city and no county can be divided. It absolutely prohibits any voting precinct being divided, but only prohibits those cities and those counties being divided where it can otherwise be practically done.

There is one other feature in the bill, and that is the one that provides that where the representation of a State is increased, then the State may elect at large. That is the old provision which has always stood upon the statute-book. But where it is diminished, and the Legislature has not had time to meet and provide to the contrary, then the executive of a State may lay off the State into districts, and the representation to the first Congress can be elected by the districts which that executive lays off. That is consistent with the Constitution and consistent with right. For it has been claimed and conceded by all parties that Congress itself has the power to divide States into districts; to invade the territory of the States—claimed away back long before our day, in the days of State rights—that Congress had a right to invade the States, and lay them off into districts if they desire to do it; and under the old maxim, qui facit per alium, facit per se, whatever this Congress does by its constituted agent it does by itself. It requires the executive to do it, and thereby each State is represented on a district system.

I do not think there is any other feature in the bill that requires any special attention. It seems to me it should commend itself to the House if for no other purpose than to get rid of a question that has arisen, producing for the tenth time prolonged discussion, lasting through many months.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that my opinions have undergone no modification on this subject since the last Congress. I was then and am now opposed to any reduction of the House, nor do I believe that a House as large as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] proposes will be a panacea for all our ills; yet if we must be extreme, let the extremity be upon the side of the people.

The history of the world shows that small bodies do become the pliant tools in the hands of power. Our own Senate is more yielding to the demands of corporations, monopolies, and wealth than the House. In the best days of Rome, when she was the proud mistress of the world, when her "eagles flew over prostrate Asia," when she "was almighty hailed," and "went forth but to conquer," her senate dared not face the frown of an imperial master, but, cowardly, venal, base prostitutes to the passions of the hour, they voted away and laid down at the feet of military dictatorship every vestige of the liberties of the people. Nor can we forget that after long years of desolation and plunder at the hands of victorious barbarians and disintegration by the slow but equally sure and deadly processes of civil corruption and vice her glories had declined that Rienzi, the tribune of the people, the representative of their rights, the redresser of their wrongs, removed from the world the black pall of ignorance which had "fallen upon it and restored to it for the time being the brightness in her eye she bore when Rome was free."

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, by unanimous consent, on yesterday, the previous question is now considered as ordered on the bill and all pending amendments.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I desire to call up the resolution which was pending before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] took the floor, and which was held pending till that gentleman had spoken.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the further consideration of the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] was postponed until this time. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the vote to be taken upon the first section of the apportionment bill or amendments thereto, whenever the House shall adopt any number of members as the number for the House of Representatives hereafter, the same shall be apportioned among the States upon the same basis of division used at the Forty-sixth Congress, and now popularly known as the old method.

The SPEAKER. To which resolution the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] submits an amendment, which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "upon the same basis of division used in the Forty-sixth Congress, and now popularly known as the old method" and insert "according to the constitutional and just method reported by the Committee on the Census and known as the new method."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the further amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE.]

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "hereafter," in the seventh line of the resolution, strike out the remainder of the resolution and insert as follows:

"The same shall be divided among the States by giving a member for each full ratio in each Congress of the decennial period; and for each fraction of one-fifth of a ratio one additional member in the last Congress of the decennial period; for each two-fifths an additional member in the two last Congresses; for each three-fifths an additional member in the three last Congresses; and for each four-fifths of a ratio an additional member in each of the last four Congresses of the decennial period."

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question being taken on a division by sound, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. CONVERSE. I think it desirable that on all these amendments we should have the yeas and nays. I call for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is next on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE.]

Mr. PRESCOTT. That is the Seaton method.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 9, noes 148.

Mr. BAYNE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. All those who are in favor of this method have spoken on it, and have thus already placed themselves on the record.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 14, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BAYNE. I discover an indisposition to go on the record.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the original resolution of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRESCOTT.]

Mr. HAZELTON. That is the old method.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. By the agreement made yesterday, by unanimous consent, the previous question is now operating upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask leave to offer an amendment, to be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must hold that no amendment is now in order, the previous question operating upon the bill.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask permission to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAZELTON. Not to be read?

Mr. BRUMM. I do not ask to have it read.

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Amend the original bill by striking out the word "five," after California, in ninth line, and insert "six;" strike out "one," after the word "twenty," in fifteenth line; strike out "six," after the word "Kansas," and insert "seven," in the eighteenth line; strike out "four," after the word "thirty," and insert "three," in thirty-second line; strike out "nine," after the word "twenty," and insert "eight," in thirty-sixth line, and strike out "eight," after the word "Wisconsin," and insert "nine," in forty-fourth line.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR.]

Mr. HORR. I do not believe I shall need five minutes to say what I desire to say. There seems to have been some feeling on the part of some of my Democratic friends, a sort of worry, because at the last session of Congress I made an argument basing the apportionment somewhat upon votes, which at this session of Congress I have entirely ignored or failed to mention. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] seemed to be quite hilarious over that fact. Now if that gentleman had read my speech as carefully as I am in the habit of reading his productions, he would have learned that I simply stated at the close of that speech of mine that my object in making votes enter into the basis of calculation was to show to the House how unfair was the number which the gentleman from New York had brought before the House at that time, 311 I think it was, and also to show that politically it was still more unfair when you took into account the small votes of certain sections.

At that session I did state, and I believed, that 319 was the fairest number that could be adopted; not the fairest that could be found. To-day I wish to revise my opinion in that respect. I now think that 319 does injustice to the four growing States, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, and Texas. I protested at that time against 311 because it was politically unfair, and I spoke in favor of 319 because I believed that was fair politically.

Now, if we add the States of South Carolina and New York to the four great growing States I have mentioned, and give one additional member to each State, making the whole number 325, that I think would be a fair and honest basis upon which all can agree. I believe that it is the fairest number, that it does justice to the growing States of the West, and that the Democratic party of this country and the members of that party on this floor cannot afford to oppose a number so fair and just as that is.

Mathematically 321 or 322 is, I think, the fairest number possible to be found. But I do not think that you gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House will consent to either of those numbers. I think you have as good a right to object to those as we had at the last session to object to 316 or 311, consequently I say let us adopt 325 as a number perfectly fair politically, and one which will do justice to the growing States of the West, and upon which we can all unite. That is all I desired to say on this question.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I will now yield five minutes to my friend from Vermont, [Mr. TYLER.]

Mr. TYLER. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor yesterday to offer an amendment which has been printed in the RECORD, providing for an apportionment of 294 Representatives. I venture the assertion that it is the better judgment of every gentleman on this floor that this House is already large enough. It is large enough for orderly proceedings as a legislative body. It is large enough for the seating capacity of the Hall. It is impossible to increase its membership at all, unless some of the aisles are closed up and the desks crowded nearer together, greatly to the inconvenience of members.

The present number is large enough in view of the fact that there are eight Territories, two of them now standing at the door of the Union asking for admission; some of them large enough to make several States, and likely to be divided before their admission.

We must remember that ten years hence the great States of the Northwest, on account of their astonishing growth, will demand largely increased representations. These are some of the reasons for keeping the House, under this apportionment, at its present number.

The number I have proposed, 294, is upon the ratio of 1 Representative to 168,505 population. That varies from the present number in this respect: we find that the next largest fraction belongs to the little State of Florida—little in population, not in area. She has 100,000 as a fraction, and I propose to give her another Representative for that fraction, thus increasing the number to 294. I have here a table showing the ratio of representation under this plan of twelve of the great States of the Union. By examining it gentlemen will see how remarkably near they come to each other in ratio of representation for the members which would be accorded them under my amendment:

States.	Reps.	Population.
Illinois	18	170,000
Iowa	10	162,000
Indiana	12	164,000
Kansas	6	166,000
New York	30	169,000
Pennsylvania	25	171,000
Ohio	19	168,000
Texas	9	176,000
Virginia	9	168,000
Wisconsin	8	164,000
Tennessee	9	171,000
North Carolina	8	174,000

I suppose gentlemen will not favor the amendment because under it certain States would be cut down. The great State of New York, with her gain of three-quarters of a million population in ten years, would lose three of her Representatives, and be reduced to thirty members on this floor, while she would see the great State of Texas, with a like increase in population, gain three members. And yet New York would have thirty members, each representing 169,000, while Texas would have nine, each representing 176,000; not a very great difference after all, and as near as they can approach under any number that has been proposed or can be adopted.

Pennsylvania would lose two of her Representatives and be reduced to twenty-five. But each of those twenty-five would have 171,000 population, only 3,000 more than the common ratio which I adopt. On the whole, the relative political power of the losing States would be preserved. I say this is the fairest method which can be adopted, a proposition which appeals to the better judgment of every man here; still, on account of State and party considerations a larger number will be demanded.

I have only this further remark to make; that if you go above 294, and examine the intermediate numbers to 325, there would be with each of them an unjust discrimination toward certain States and certain sections of the Union. I am therefore satisfied, from a careful examination of the tables, that the next fairest number above the present number is 325, and there is no point short of that at which we can stop. The advantage of this number over 319 is, that it gives Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, South Carolina, Texas, and New York each another Representative. Though I deplore such an increase, this is the number to which we must come.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now yield seven minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to explain the vote which I shall give upon this bill, and will do so briefly. I shall vote for the number 319.

At the last session of Congress this House passed a bill providing for 319 members. I was in favor of a lower number then, but finally voted for the passage of the bill of that session. I am still in favor of a lower number, upon the general principle of reducing rather than increasing the number of members upon this floor. And I regret very much, in voting for 319, to depart from the present capacity of this House for seating the number of members which are now upon this floor. Yet as this House seems determined to go above that number, seems determined to render it necessary to remove all these desks and make other provision for seating members, I must accept the situation, although upon general principles I prefer 293, the present number, to any other that could be adopted.

But in going above that number we are compelled to stop somewhere; and wherever we may stop, there will be some State that would get another member if you would make the number one more; and as different numbers are proposed these States that fall near the "ragged edge" of any allotment make complaint and insist upon our providing for 1 Representative more.

The number 319 was agreed upon by members of the committee of the last session and of this who have devoted more time to the mathematics of the question than I have. In support of this statement, I desire to call attention to a speech of my colleague [Mr. SHERWIN] delivered when this subject was under consideration at the last session. He said:

We must recognize the fact and select that number for a ratio which will be most fair and equitable in its operation.

In my opinion that number is the one that gives us 319 members. It is in accordance with the mathematical principles used in making apportionments. It leaves fewer States with their representation decreased. More States gain in that number than either of the others. Fewer States are stationary. It distributes the gains more generally over the country than the other numbers. And happily it gives no advantage to one section or party over any other section or party. The other numbers fail in all these particulars, and therefore should not be adopted. A great injustice will be done if either of them shall be selected.

The number 319 approaches nearest mathematically to an accurate apportionment as between the groups of States under discussion.

Then, after grouping the States and showing the mathematical certainty and equality of this number, the gentleman proceeded:

My excuse for entering into what might seem an overrefinement of figures is to demonstrate that that number, 319, which upon its face is most just as between the Southern and the Northern States is also the most accurate. And, further, that by grouping the States into three sections, Northeast, West and South, that accuracy is still upon the side of 319.

Another point worth observing is that all the gains on present representation between the numbers 301 and 311 fall to the Southern States, the South, as I have before pointed out, at the latter number having a net gain of 6; while between the numbers 311 and 319 all the gains but one are in the Northern States, and having arrived at 319, the gains between North and South are equal.

This was the position of my colleague at the last session. I understand that at this session he has favored a larger number; but he has not denied the correctness of the conclusion which he reached at the last session, which was that 319 struck a political equilibrium as well as a mathematical accuracy in so far as the distribution of the increased number of members is concerned. I hope that members, while looking at the interests of their own States, will exhibit some degree of willingness to give up a little where necessary, because we must draw the line somewhere; and, as I said, wherever it may be drawn, there will be one State which, if you had made the number of Representatives one greater, would have received an additional member. But 319 having been demonstrated by the figures of my colleague as a number which will do mathematical and political justice, why should we not settle upon that number?

Mr. SHERWIN. Does my colleague deny that 325 is as fair a number politically as 319?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think it is; but I will let the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who is about to take the floor, answer the gentleman more fully.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, in the one minute allotted to me I will reply to the gentleman from Michigan and answer the question which the gentleman from Illinois has just asked. Raising the number from 319 to 325 gives a gain to the States of Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, South Carolina, Texas, and New York, so that it is not fair, politically speaking; for Iowa, Wisconsin, and Kansas are Republican States; and New York in its present equivocal position is likely to be a Republican State, unless we do better. [Laughter.] So that by making the number 325 you gentlemen gain; and the tendency is, as the number increases, to give an advantage to the larger States. I am not very solicitous as to a few numbers; for a period of ten years, while it sometimes eats and destroys, has in it often health and rectification. Ten years may make many changes that the prescience of members on this floor cannot foresee.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS.]

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in the debate on this apportionment bill, and I wish now to occupy only a few moments to remind gentlemen on both sides of the House of the changed condition of things since we passed the apportionment bill at the last session. I want to say in the first place to my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the very able and learned remarks which he has read in the hearing of the House to-day were not sufficient to convince him in the last Congress of the justice of the position taken by his colleague, [Mr. SHERWIN.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I voted for 319 at the last session.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I will so far correct myself as to say that the gentleman was one of the few on that side of the House who did vote for the number 319, which was then agreed upon. But the great majority on that side, as will be remembered, and as the record will show, voted for a lower number.

Mr. COX, of New York. We had no vote on a lower number. Do you not remember that by the order of the House——

Mr. CALKINS. Members only voted in favor of a lower number by voting against 319.

Mr. COX, of New York. We commenced at 321, which was defeated; then we came to 319, which was adopted. No vote was taken on the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CALKINS. My friend from New York and I do not disagree on this point. Those who voted against 319 were in favor of a smaller number; the only way in which their preference was expressed was by voting against 319. The vote then taken, if any gentleman will scan it, will show that all the members on the other side of the House, with a few exceptions, were in favor of a lower number, as indicated by the vote upon 319. While we on this side of the House were struggling with all our power to get what we considered a fair bill, we were met by some gentlemen on the other side in the spirit of fairness, as we thought. That side having then the power and the responsibility, being able to pass by a majority vote any bill they might choose, we were met by certain gentlemen on that side who in the spirit of fairness were willing to give us 319, that being the only number that we could agree upon; and it was, under the circumstances, remarkably fair. But, Mr. Speaker, since that time——

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman will allow me to interrupt him at this point. He is speaking of what was done at the last Congress. Now, was not the number 319 agreed upon in your caucus, and did you not filibuster to prevent a vote on any other number?

Mr. CALKINS. To that question, Mr. Speaker, I answer no. We on this side of the House all the time wanted 322. We then regarded the question as we do now, that these Western States, including Texas, were growing, and that in ten years from now, no matter what basis we fix, they would be entitled to several members of Congress more than they would get in any apportionment. That is the way we felt. But what we tried to do was to get the very best thing we could. Standing on the proposition of 319 yielded to us by some gentlemen on that side, we caused its passage. Three hundred and twenty-two, as you know and I know, and I only refer to it to remind you of our proposed concessions, gives us a large advantage as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Iowa, giving Iowa, Kansas, and Wisconsin an additional member each. That stops at 322. That is the bill we would like. It is in the bill which every Republican would like to have adopted, but in a spirit of fairness we come forward and say no, we recognize we must yield something and we are willing to agree to 325, which, as we understand it, gives to Texas and South Carolina 2 Democratic members. I have not till this moment doubted it would also give to the cities of New York and Brooklyn an additional member.

Mr. COX, of New York. In case of redistricting it would, but we do not expect that, as it would meet with a veto from your governor.

Mr. CALKINS. I call my friend's attention to the fact that his party has the Legislature of New York now.

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes; but your Republican governor has the power to veto. But never mind that; let the gentleman go on with his speech.

Mr. CALKINS. I deem, in all fairness, this is certainly as fair a proposition as a majority could submit to a minority. It is fairer than you gentlemen did by us, for we will stand by 325 pretty solid. You did not stand by 319 for us solid by any means. We will go farther than you, and we will stand pretty solid by 325 for your benefit.

This is no time, Mr. Speaker, when party considerations should smother and overwhelm the interests of the country. If there ever was a time when fairness and statesmanship, and that which looks alone to the good of the country, should be in the ascendency, that time is the present. I know, as partisans, we try to get all we can; but I ask honorable and fair-minded men whether the propcsition submitted by this side of the House does not come nearer than any other now pending before the House to what is just and proper? If you will give us a chance, I think we will put it through.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now yield for one minute to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the question pending before this House is not one affected by party lines, but involves a principle which should not be ignored or obscured. Neither the Democratic nor the Republican nor the Greenback party has anything to do with it. We are here to-day, Mr. Speaker, to obey the mandate of the Constitution in apportioning representation according to population. Now, what is the fairest thing we can do in making the apportionment so as to leave no remainders? It is not the fair thing to do toward the growing States of the Northwest and of the Southwest to stop at 319, as you propose to do, and leave them with large remainders nearly ready, each one, for another member of Congress, while they are increasing at the rate of three or four hundred per cent. in population over other States. To stop at 319, and leave Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, and Texas nearly ready to take another member of Congress, is not fair, it is not just. If your census were taken to-day each one of those States would be entitled by your ratio to an additional Representative. I say that 325 is the right number, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now yield for one minute to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HASELTINE.]

Mr. HASELTINE. In the one minute allotted to me, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I doubt very much whether political prejudice or party spirit enters into this matter of apportionment to any extent whatever. It certainly should not do so. It is unworthy of American statesmen, and in behalf of the American people I ask at this hour we will put aside any such prejudice. I believe, sir, in the immediate future on both sides of the House men will meet with changes, and that instead of figuring for the North or South for Republican party strength or Democratic party strength, instead of being actuated by the spirit which grew out of the war, our work here will be on all sides of the House to do justice to the American people.

I favor the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont fixing the number of the House at 365, which would not shut out any of the older states. Let us do justice to all the States, and that in my judgment is an apportionment which will do justice according to numbers. Three hundred and sixty-five, as proposed by the gentleman from Vermont, is the nearest adjustment which can be made under the circumstances.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, mathematics has been left but one simple function to perform in making this apportionment, and that is to select the number. The arrangement of the number of Representatives that shall go to each State has not been made, according to the division, by mathematics, but according to what has been called in this debate common sense and by various other names. I shall apply mathematics to the last function which it has been left to perform in this matter, and that is to briefly state the number of Representatives which I think should be selected in this bill. I agree with the remarks made by gentlemen on both sides of the House, that an apportionment of Representatives should not be made in a partisan spirit, or to have for its ultimate end a partisan advantage. I think it is due to the Western States, which are growing so rapidly, to Iowa and to Kansas, to Wisconsin and Texas, that they should have increased membership upon the floor, because they would very soon merit it by their rapid growth, if they are not practically entitled to it at present. I agree, moreover, that the number 325 is freer from partisan prejudice, is fairer to all sections of the country than any other that has been mentioned, and I hope that number will be agreed upon by the House. I rose simply, sir, to give my consent to that number, and shall vote for it for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. I simply desired a moment to explain the amendment which I offered on yesterday. In the last Congress I was in favor of not increasing too largely the number of Representatives in this House, and made a speech in opposition to the report of the committee of which my friend [Mr. COX, of New York] was chairman in favor of the number 307; and if I could carry that number through to-day I would be willing to adopt that as the maximum. But it is evidently the sense of the House to advance to a larger number than 307, and therefore, if you go to 319, as the House agreed to in the last Congress, that being the number provided for in the bill passed by the last House of Representatives, or as the gentleman from Indiana has stated, go to 325, I hold that it would make a far more honest and fair ratio to go on to 326. That number, 326, if you are determined to increase the membership of the House, is the number that will divide all of the States—the total population of the States—in such a manner as to leave the shortest number unrepresented in any State. In other words, it will leave the smallest unrepresented fraction of any number that can be devised.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE.]

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MCLANE. If it is the sense of the House that we should come to a vote, I have no desire to occupy any time.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Then I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCOID.]

Mr. MCCOID. Mr. Speaker, the committee has been defeated, but the argument that a ratio should be adopted which when applied to the population of each State will give the number of the House desired, and the fractions should in such division be disregarded, has in no manner been met. The only objection urged against it is to the result of the application of that principle to the small States, and upon that single ground all the batteries of opposing rhetoric have been opened, and led by the sentiment thus aroused the House has refused to act logically, and in obedience of this principle I have waded through all the soft soil of sophomoric spleen pitched at the bill and lodged in the RECORD, and I find in it nothing but appeals to this sentiment and a misapprehension of the principles of the bill. In support of that principle and to show the practice of the fathers upon it, I submit an actual demonstration of the apportionment for five decennial periods from 1793 to 1843. These are tables of the ratios, divisions into the population of each State, the representation resulting, and the fractions remaining which were disregarded. These prove beyond doubt the practice to have been in perfect harmony with the bill of the committee. One instance of the objectionable results as to small States appears in 1823, when Delaware, with a population of 72,749, upon a ratio of 40,000, was cut down from 2 to 1 Representative with a fraction of 32,749. No instance in the committee's bill was subject to the charge of injustice as plainly as this. But I am content that the principle of that bill should take the worthy place of "truth crushed to earth," and wait a cooler judgment in some future Congress.

But to the sentiment thus invoked on behalf of States likely to be wronged I now appeal in behalf of my own State. No wrong is greater than would be the wrong of the adoption of 319 on the fractional plan when applied to the growing State of Iowa. At 320 she would get an increase to 11. Comparison with a dozen or more States will show that she is justly entitled to this increase if they get the number given them. From 320 to 325, possible numbers, she will get it. I appeal to friends on both sides not to adopt 319, a number which will do her such a great wrong.

I do not believe members whose States will not be affected either way will consent to this. The same generous sentiment which finds expression for Rhode Island and Florida, and in which I sincerely share, will, I hope, lead us all to do this simple act of justice to my State.

Now, I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to occupy but a very few moments at this time. I merely obtained the floor for the purpose of submitting these tables and remarks as to the committee's report, that they might be printed in the RECORD, and saying a word in explanation of a vote which I gave in the last House. It will be remembered, as the gentleman from Illinois says, that we voted for 319 members. Iowa voted solidly for that number, not because we had agreed to that number as just, but because we thought it the best thing to do to settle that question then. But it would be a wrong to our State that could not be excused if the last number (319) was taken. And I hope our friends on that side of the House will not vote for that number. Iowa has been for a great portion of the last ten years without a Representative to which she has been entitled. Two hundred and ninety-three members gives her 10. If you take 319 you cut her off without the eleventh member to which she would be entitled by the selection of one larger number. I hope, therefore, the House will not agree to 319. I come reluctantly to 325. I think, sir, it gives an advantage to the Democratic party, a considerable advantage over our own side; but I will agree to that number as a compromise, if that compromise will settle this question, and it ought to. It gives three additional members to each side. For these reasons I shall vote for it. I now yield to the evident desire of the House to vote.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I was yesterday surprised upon an examination of the printed speech of my colleague [Mr. COX] to find a reported charge of discourtesy on my part, in that I moved the consideration of the apportionment bill in his absence and against his written request.

If I had heard such suggestion in the portion of his speech delivered in this House, it would have been answered then that the letter received from the honorable gentleman—while announcing his expected absence until Thursday and regretting absence on Tuesday, the day for which notice of consideration had been the week before given—did not request a postponement of consideration to suit the pleasure of the honorable gentleman. If it had it would have presented the serious question whether the public demand for early and prompt action thereon should not have first been heeded?

But, Mr. Speaker, this claim of the gentleman was not more surprising than his entire change of base from the committee-room to the floor of this House, and again by his modification of his amendment. The excuses given for such change, aside from a rehearsal of the claims of injustice under the new method, which had been theretobefore fully stated, were, as given by him, as follows:

> The reason is local. Our New York Legislature is in a dead-lock. It is Democratic, but our governor is Republican. If any bill for redistricting should pass, the governor likely would veto it.

The gentleman reasoned justly that a party organized as the Democratic party of New York is, with a factional minority which for six weeks, defying the majority, ignoring the rights of the people and all economy, have, as obstructionists, with no aim but personal or factional gain, prevented the organization of either branch of the State Legislature, would, if the power or excuse presented, so redistrict that State that a Mohawk Indian could not follow their trail, and that no governor honestly discharging the duties of his office could ratify it. Since the honorable gentleman's announcement of this reason, this minority of his party has done the first works meet for repentance by voting for tried Republican officers of the assembly, and so given promise that the fears of the gentleman may be without foundation.

Not being a birthright New Yorker, the gentleman takes not as much pride in her rights or position among the States of the Union as myself, and only views her interests from the stand-point of a politician. Being to the manor born, with my honor and desires identical with those of my native State, I still ask that her rights be considered.

In the debate so far all the hardships, oppression, injustice, and uncertainty of all the methods since the creation of the Constitution have been conjured and charged to the new method of apportionment. Gentlemen in their opposition to the new method have lost sight of the fact that as between that method and the one used at the Forty-sixth Congress only three changes occur in the bill reported by the committee. The sole issue between the methods is whether California, Florida, and Rhode Island shall each receive one more member or shall they be given to Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania. In this contest Michigan, assured of an overrepresentation of 60,198, Massachusetts conceded an overrepresentation of 68,335, and others equally as fortunate or nothing to lose, hold up their hands in holy horror that the small States should not have been reported as entitled to first consideration in these national gifts. Several gentlemen have made groupings of States showing unfortunate results of what they have been pleased to call disfranchisement, and charged it to the new method of apportionment. What will such say to the result worked out by grouping States under the old method of apportionment?

Take the States of California, Florida, Massachusetts, Iowa, and Michigan. Their united population is 6,178,824. They get by the old method 42 members; but New York and New Jersey, with a united population of 6,213,991, being 35,167 more, get only 40 members. Under the new method the first-named five States would receive 40 and the last two 41, which is the nearest a just distribution according to numbers. Each member under the old method for the five States would be the representative of 147,114, while each in the other States would represent 155,349. Under the new method they would respectively represent 154,470 and 151,560. The old method makes a difference between these groupings in representation of 8,235 and the new only 2,910.

Again, take the fifteen States of California, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, having a joint population of 23,080,806, 1,604,864 less than one-half the population of the United States, yet under the old method they have one-half, or 160, of the Representatives of the whole, leaving the remaining 160 as the Representatives of 25,290,680. According to the reasoning of the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. CHACE,] this leaves 2,209,874 in the remaining twenty-three States disfranchised. You can find no combination or grouping of States under the new method that shows such startling results and flagrant disregard of the rights of the many for the benefit of the few.

Again, an aggregation of all the overrepresentation and underrepresentation at 320 by the old method and the new shows that upon the old plan the whole United States would be overrepresented 11,883, while by the new method there would be an underrepresentation of only 11,587, showing that if it is possible to make under the precedent of former times an unconstitutional apportionment, the old method proved itself such in that it provided for an overrepresentation of the whole people.

I will not weary the House with further comparison of these methods. I am well convinced that this House is determined to adhere to the method used in the Forty-sixth Congress; but if the discussion here had shall stimulate investigation so that the next decade shall develop some method that shall correct these glaring defects of every method yet presented, then the time now spent shall not have been in vain.

Allow a few moments' consideration of the claims of Rhode Island, Florida, and California. Since 1793 Rhode Island has had two Representatives in the House. In 1811 Mr. Dawson was instructed by his committee to report in favor of making the ratio of representation 40,000. He so reported, but because that would reduce Rhode Island and three other States, he proposed an amendment to 37,000; and it being subsequently reduced to 35,000, she was saved. Rhode Island, growing but four times her then population, has continued to retain her representation, while New York, with fifteen times her then population, is conceded only 33. At the same rate of claimed representation of Rhode Island, New York should have 37. For the last half of the nation's century Rhode Island has been continuously overrepresented in numbers, while New York has been underrepresented in numbers.

In 1840 Rhode Island obtained her two Representatives by an admitted overrepresentation of 32,532; the same was true in 1850, by an overrepresentation of 39,301; in 1860, by 70,068; in 1870, by 43,713; and now she asks to retain her Representatives by an admitted overrepresentation of 32,039. If now successful the aggregate of her successive overrepresentation since 1840 will nearly equal her present entire population.

While the Representatives from New York have back of them from over 20,000 to over 40,000 voters in the election for this Congress, the whole State of Rhode Island cast but 19,430 votes, not so many as the smallest Congressional district of New York, giving Rhode Island relatively in this House double the representation of New York.

Mr. Speaker, the twenty-third district of New York, where I reside, is composed of one county one hundred and fifteen square miles larger than the whole State of Rhode Island, and casting 8,000 votes more than that whole State. If this disparity of numbers results from her restrictive laws upon the franchise of her citizens, then she should not receive this double representation under the restriction of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

Taking the Presidential vote of 1880 as a fair criterion, Rhode Island cast 29,235 votes, and has two Representatives, while New York, casting 1,104,605—thirty-eight times as many—has only thirty-three, or sixteen times as many Representatives. If we call in the Senatorial representation, where Rhode Island's 276,531 has equal representation with New York's 5,082,871, the gross inequality grows vivid, and recalls the words of Mr. Giles in 1792, that equal representation in the Senate to all the States "enables a minority of constituents, through the medium of a majority of Representatives, to make laws for a majority of constituents absolutely against the will of their minority of Representatives."

Florida came into the Union in 1845, and in 1850 received an overrepresentation of 21,702. Again in 1860 she was overrepresented 6,617, and in 1870 73,318. She now asks an increase of Representatives which will give her 39,077 overrepresentation. Thus in the thirty-five years she has been in the family of States she has had and asks for 140,714 overrepresentation, or more than one-half her present total population.

California was admitted as a State September 9, 1850, with 2 Representatives; and although the census of 1850 returned her population as 92 597, while the ratio of apportionment was 93,423, she succeeded in having passed July 30, 1852, a supplemental act increasing the number of members of the House from 233 to 234, and allowing her to retain her 2 Representatives until a new apportionment.

In 1861, before any new apportionment was or could have been made, they elected 3 Representatives. Three members came here, and although the census did not show her entitled to that number when the apportionment was made in 1862, yet again they presented their case so successfully that June 2, 1862, an enabling act was again passed, reciting that as they had elected three under the supposition the State would be entitled to that number when apportioned, therefore (not, I suppose, to disappoint the honorable gentleman who had come so far and braved so much to represent her,) the said State be allowed 3 for the Thirty-seventh Congress then pending, and until the Thirty-eighth Congress, and for that purpose the whole number was increased one. Until another apportionment she continued each Congress to send her three members which were admitted, although no warrant of law can be found for same.

It is but just to California to say that in 1850 and 1860 her Representatives claimed that they were largely underestimated in the official census report, and by the increase they were receiving no more than their just representation. The truth of this claim does not appear to have been by the Government verified, although the allowance silences criticism. From any known or authenticated United States census returns she was overrepresented in 1850, 94,249; in 1860, 61,593, and will—giving her the full benefit of all her claimed inhabitants in 1880, if she shall receive 6 members—be overrepresented 61,016.

An examination of her present claim to 6 Representatives shows that at 320 members to the House California would be entitled to 5 upon an even division and have a portion remaining of 93,269. The census return states California's Chinese population at 75,132. The constitution of the State of California, adopted March 3, 1879, and ratified by a vote of the people May 7, 1879, provides, article 2, section 1:

> Every native male citizen of the United States, every male person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under or by virtue of "the treaty of Queretaro, and every male naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have been a resident, * * * shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law: Provided, No native of China, no idiot, * * * criminal, &c.," shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector in this State.

Although a Chinaman might have been duly naturalized, and thereby have become a citizen of the United States, with all the rights, immunities, and privileges as such in all the other States of this Union, yet so soon as he shall enter the State of California these rights and privileges of citizenship are struck down, and by the fundamental law of that State he can never "exercise the privileges of an elector" in that State.

Article 14 of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States declares:

> SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

Section 2 of the same article provides:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or [is] in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Able and exhaustive arguments were adduced at the Forty-sixth Congress to prove that this provision was intended solely for the benefit of the African race in the South, but it fully covers these disfranchised citizens.

These 75,132 Chinese are (as is well known and will appear by the census) almost wholly males, and over twenty-one years of age, and are by the fundamental law of the State of California absolutely denied the right "to exercise the privileges of an elector of that State." Therefore, by the Constitution of the United States the State of California must have the basis of her representation thereby reduced. Deducting these disfranchised citizens of the United States from the Representative population of the State leaves her a fraction of only 18,137; and upon this fraction she asks for her sixth Representative. Do you say the constitution of California being in conflict with the Constitution of the United States is void? I answer it is not for California to disfranchise her citizens at home and then come here and shield herself from the effect of her high-handed act of oppression and wrong by claiming her acts were as void as they are unjust and tyrannical.

If one member shall be taken from New York, where the bill reported assigns him, it is for this House to determine whether California shall receive this additional member upon her legal representative fraction of 18,137; or will you consider the claim of Kansas, with her admitted unrepresented fraction of 70,386 in 1880 and the teeming thousands of increase since—a State where all are welcome and where there are no disfranchised citizens of the United States?

These facts are not presented out of any unkind feeling toward any State or Representative. I sympathize with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] in his funereal services over a member of that State, because the inevitable has decreed one of Vermont's members must be entombed in his Green Mountain home. I trust our final action shall be marked with a full regard to facts and law, and with a view only to a just and legal distribution of the representative power.

If New York shall receive the number reported for her, 34, her relative representative influence will then be exceeded by Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, and West Virginia, and equaled by Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, South Carolina, and Wisconsin. Twenty-three States would exceed New York in relative influence, five would equal her, and only eight would be less than her. This fully answers all claims upon this floor that New York is grasping for undue power or seeking more than her due share of representation.

I have, by the direction of the committee, twice during the debate offered a resolution providing that upon the final voting upon this bill and pending amendments we commence at the highest proposed number, 365, and, if that is defeated, vote successively for each lower proposed number until one is adopted or we shall reach the lowest proposed number. This has each time met with objection to its consideration. If adopted as worded it would, conforming to the apparent majority desire of the House, have provided for voting upon apportionments made upon the old method; but that question has already been provided for by the resolution to-day adopted. Under the present order of the House the consideration of the amendments will commence with 307 under the new method, then successively 325, 321, 365, 319, and others, until a number shall be adopted.

I am only advised of two proposed amendments to the other provisions of the bill, which do not change the bill as reported, but are additional thereto, the one by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COLERICK,] to provide that States not having sessions of their Legislature this winter might district their States next winter at their regular sessions, and then call special elections for the election of their members of Congress thereafter before the opening of the Forty-eighth Congress. The other is the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BELTZHOOVER,] providing against the division of counties or parishes in the formation of Congressional districts, and providing that the counties or parishes which are most nearly contiguous to each other, having the required number, should compose the Representative district. While the propriety of the latter provision as law is admitted, I should prefer to see it presented to the House as an independent proposition, with opportunity for full consideration, which cannot now be had by attaching it as a rider to this bill.

I now ask for the consideration of the first section of the bill and all the amendments thereto, as provided by the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COX, of New York, rose.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me a moment. He has made a statement in regard to my State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has no time to yield to any gentleman.

Mr. PAGE. Then I say now that at some proper time I shall take occasion to refute what he has stated wrongfully, although I do not think he has done so intentionally.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to ask the House in common fairness in connection with this business, to which I have given three or four years of constant work, to permit me to answer the personal imputations thrown upon my motives by my colleague, the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] being heard?

Several members objected.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope the objection will not be insisted on.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If I have imputed anything against the motives of the gentleman from New York, I withdraw it. I only stated what the facts were.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] having the privilege of replying to his colleague, if I also am allowed to answer some of the gentleman's remarks in reference to my own State.

Mr. COX, of New York. This is a matter entirely personal to myself. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. PAGE. I repeat that I am quite willing the gentleman from New York should be heard, but I cannot agree to his being permitted to make an explanation unless I have the same privilege.

Mr. COX, of New York. This is a matter personal to myself.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted on.

Mr. CASSIDY. I wish to say the naturalization laws of the United States control the subject of Chinese citizenship, and not the constitution of California at all.

The SPEAKER rapped to order, during which

Mr. COX, of New York, said: This is a matter which concerns my reputation, and the gentleman should not have made this attack upon me without giving me a chance of reply.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is not in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I know it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be seated.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will; and I ask the Chair to enforce the rule so as to seat other members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will enforce the rule as regards all members alike.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have a right to know who objected to my being heard.

The SPEAKER. A number of gentlemen objected. A large number of members called for the regular order, which is always interpreted as an objection to proceeding out of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. Has the question been put on my motion to reconsider? I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that can only be done by unanimous consent, the ordering of the previous question having been by unanimous consent.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I object.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will say, then, that this is a cowardly proceeding, to make an attack on me at the last moment without my having a chance of reply.

The SPEAKER. The House will vote on the amendments to the pending bill, in the order of their presentation, in pursuance of an order adopted by unanimous consent of the House on the 7th February last. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. CALKINS. Before that is done, I desire to make a point of order against a modification of his amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment, which is the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] and it will be treated as an amendment offered under the order which the Chair has just referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 so as to read as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 307 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows: Alabama, 8; Arkansas, 5; California, 5; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 1; Florida, 1; Georgia, 10; Illinois, 19; Indiana, 12; Iowa, 10; Kansas, 6; Kentucky, 10; Louisiana, 6; Maine, 4; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 11; Michigan, 10; Minnesota, 5; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 14; Nebraska, 2; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 7; New York, 33; North Carolina, 9; Ohio, 20; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 27; Rhode Island, 1; South Carolina, 6; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 10; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 9; West Virginia, 4; Wisconsin, 8."

Mr. REAGAN. Does not the resolution adopted to-day on this subject exclude this amendment because it is a computation under the new method?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to interpret that resolution as excluding a vote on any proposition properly pending. The question is on the amendment as originally offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have modified it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York modified his amendment on yesterday.

Mr. CALKINS. Upon which I raise the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. I raise the point of order, not from any desire to be factious, or any desire to take up the time of the House. I will state very briefly the purpose for which I make the point of order, which I think is well taken. If my point of order be sustained it will bring us directly to a vote on the original amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and then carry us, as I understand, to a vote on the 325 proposition, which I think the House is ready to adopt. The order of the House is as follows:

Ordered, That it shall be in order to submit amendments to the pending bill without regard to Rule XIX, which said amendments shall be printed in the RECORD and shall be voted on in order of their application to sections of the bill and presentation.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] offered an amendment, which was that 307 should be the whole number of Representatives, apportioned as stated in the amendment. Afterward he proposed to modify his amendment by offering a new and substantive proposition entirely. It was not a modification, for modification means to change the same thing, to vary it; but to change the substantive proposition by way of substitute is not a modification.

This proposition which the gentleman now offers is a substitute for the proposition which he formerly offered, a new and substantive proposition in all its features. Therefore it is not a modification within the rules.

Secondly, there is a rule of the House, clause 4 of Rule XXI, from which I will reason by analogy. That rule says that no bill or joint resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House. Of course that rule will not apply technically to amendments of this kind, but by parity of reasoning it is applicable to it.

I make the further point, therefore, that there are now pending two other amendments precisely like the modification which the gentleman from New York has submitted, as he calls it, to his original proposition. One of them is an amendment offered by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] and the other is an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] They are both precisely like the modification, as the gentleman calls it, and they are both now pending; not, it is true, as bills or resolutions, but they are pending as propositions under the new rule or order of the House. By parity of reasoning, therefore, it would not be in order for any gentleman in this House to offer over and over again propositions which are pending to the bill.

The order adopted by the House was suggested for the purpose of facilitating business, and I think the gentleman himself will see that his proposition falls within the reasoning of the rule (if any rule can be sustained by reasoning, and sometimes I doubt it) as much as any reasoning by analogy can.

The next objection which I have and the next point of order which I make is that under the order of the House all amendments must come up to be voted on in the order in which they were offered. Therefore if this so-called modification is to be treated as a proposition at all in order, it must be as an independent amendment, and not as a modification of the original amendment. With these remarks I submit my point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. There is no logical argument on the point of order that the business of the House might be facilitated by a vote on this method. Yet I would say that was my motive in bringing forward this proposition.

I will say also (without referring to what transpired a moment ago, for which I ask the pardon of the Chair) that my motive in presenting this 319 proposition under the old method was in the first place to get rid of the proposition which I brought in under the new method. I do so for the reasons which I stated in my speech the other day. In that speech I frankly stated that I never had studied the new method, but only placed my proposition in line so that I might modify it at the proper time, if the figuring did not verify what I thought was a fair apportionment.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] has stated the only reason which can be conjured up for his point of order. But he can not seriously contend that because there are other similar amendments, therefore mine cannot be entertained. What is the phraseology of the rule to which he refers? Clause 4 of Rule 19 is as follows:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution ending before the House.

Now, that does not affect this matter at all. "Bill or resolution;" that is not a matter of this kind. These other amendments which the gentleman says are pending are not bills or resolutions; they are substitutes or amendments. And everybody knows the practice has been to bring in amendments, although there may be other amendments of a similar nature pending.

The gentleman also bases his point of order upon the special order of the House adopted in regard to this bill. What is that order?

Ordered, That it shall be in order to submit amendments to the pending bill without regard to Rule XIX, which said amendments shall be voted on in the order of their application to sections of the bill and presentation.

Now, I hold that as my original amendment is the principal thing, and as any modification of it is a mere incident, my position in regard to that amendment is not changed at all by the modification. "Ah," says the gentleman, when he finds that point pressing him close, "this is no modification." Now, what is a modification or amendment? It is the striking out words and inserting others. That is what Jefferson's Manual tells us.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman, who is usually very correct, will allow me to say that the Manual says, "modify means to reduce to lower terms." That is what modification means in parliamentary law. Now, that is not his amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is very thin, I am sure.

Mr. CALKINS. So is your proposition.

Mr. COX, of New York. My modification puts in another number.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. COX, of New York. Not for the present, sir; no, sir. [Laughter.] The gentleman will understand that an amendment is the striking out things and inserting things. Of course the original proposition is thereby more or less modified. Is it not so?

In this modification of my amendment I have changed the number from 307 to 319. That is substantial I know, and it modifies the representation of many of the States, but more than half of them remain as in the original proposition. And I have modified my amendment in other respects, so as to conform to the new number I have chosen, 319.

Perhaps the strongest point the gentleman makes against my proposition is this: that by the order of the House these amendments are to be considered and voted upon in the order of their presentation. Now, if I am right in what I have said, the order of presentation is the order in which the original amendment was introduced, and that draws to itself the modification I have proposed. I do not lose my place by modifying my amendment. I submitted that amendment originally in a nebulous form, not having fully studied it, for the very purpose of securing my place, intending to modify it if after further examination of the matter I should think it necessary.

Hence, if I should now be cut out by the ruling of the Chair, I should lose all the benefit that I expected to have by a frank, honest study of this question as it might be presented during this discussion.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the previous question having been ordered, debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Chair, without objection, permitted one gentleman on each side to state his points; but debate on the point of order is not in order now.

Mr. HAZELTON. Then let us have a vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I simply desire to call attention to the ruling of the Chair when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] desired to modify a resolution presented by him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed debate to proceed; but as the point is made, debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire to debate it, but simply to call the attention of the Chair to a proposition made in a similar case, and the ruling upon it.

The SPEAKER. The question, as it appears to the Chair, is where the modified amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] shall take its place in the order of amendments to be voted on. The Chair then held, as he would now, that the gentleman from New York had a right under the existing rule to offer any proposition applicable to this bill that he chose. He chose to name the proposition a modification of his original amendment. The Chair then declined to express any opinion as to the status which this modified amendment would take in the order of amendments pending before the House. The right of a member to modify his amendment before it is voted upon, or before the previous question is ordered, is clear. Just what is to be regarded as a modification of a pending proposition it may not now be necessary to decide. The right to modify is only an incident to the right to withdraw a proposition that has been offered. Ordinarily modifications are made to perfect the language of a proposition, so as to express more clearly and perfectly the original view of the mover; and when this is done the modified amendment is treated as though it were the original.

But what is the state of the question we are now considering? The gentleman from New York offered what has been treated as the first in order of the amendments to the first section of the bill of the committee; and under the rule adopted February 7, 1882, by the unanimous consent of the House, it is entitled to be voted on first. The Chair will ask the Clerk to read that rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That it shall be in order to submit amendments to the pending bill without regard to Rule XIX, which said amendments shall be printed in the RECORD, and shall be voted on in order of their application to sections of the bill and presentation.

The SPEAKER. It will be observed that by this order the standing Rule XIX is set aside as regards this bill; and it will be further observed that amendments are to be voted on in the order of the sections of the bill and their presentation. Yesterday the gentleman from New York, after many other amendments had been offered to the bill, submitted a proposed amendment to his amendment which the Chair held was in order, declining, however, to indicate then what in its opinion would be the status of the proposed modified amendment under the rule. On examination, the Chair finds that the original amendment of the gentleman from New York was framed on what is appropriately known as the new or Seaton method; and it fixes the number of members at 307. The Chair also finds that the modified amendment is based on the old plan of apportionment and proposes to fix the number at 319, making a distribution of members differently from that proposed in the original amendment. The modified amendment is also found to be exactly in words the amendment proposed to the first section of the bill by the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] and also the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

The Chair would not feel disposed to hold, if a mere verbal modification of an amendment were made, that under the new rule even the original amendment should lose its place; but in view of the absolute substantive changes in the original amendment made by the modified amendment, and in view further of the fact that it would give a right to vote on another amendment before, under the new rule, it could be reached, the Chair holds that the modified amendment must take its place in the order of its presentation. The Chair holds that the first proposition before the House to be voted upon is the original amendment introduced by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw that original amendment.

The SPEAKER. The original amendment of the gentleman from New York is withdrawn.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow me to read a ruling entirely different from that which has been made to-day? [Cries of "Regular order!"] I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The next amendment in order is that offered by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. ANDERSON,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1, after the enacting clause, and insert these words:

"That after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 325 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows: Alabama, 8; Arkansas, 5; California, 6; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 10; Illinois, 20; Indiana, 13; Iowa, 11; Kansas, 7; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 6; Maine, 4; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 12; Michigan, 11; Minnesota, 5; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 14; Nebraska, 3; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 7; New York, 34; North Carolina, 9; Ohio, 21; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 28; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 7; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 11; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 10; West Virginia, 4; Wisconsin, 9."

Mr. COLERICK. I desire to make an inquiry, and it is whether the amendment just read is the next amendment in order? I reported from the minority of the Committee on the Census an amendment which I submit is next in order to that offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that his first proposition was a substitute for the whole bill. His first amendment, properly speaking, was an amendment to the third section of the bill. The Chair holds, under the plain reading of the new rule, all amendments to the first section must be disposed of first and so on through the bill. When through with all the amendments to the different sections of the bill, then it will be in order to vote on the substitutes for the whole bill; so that the gentleman's substitute is not now in order to be voted on, nor is the gentleman's amendment to the third section.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment which the Clerk has just read proposes, as I understand, the number of 325. I have offered an amendment proposing 326. Now, would it not be in order for me to offer that as an amendment to this proposition? Otherwise you might exclude a vote on my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi was offered later, and is not therefore entitled to be voted on now. Besides, it is a proposition to amend another section of the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. No, sir; the first section.

The SPEAKER. It is a substitute for the first and second sections.

Mr. JOYCE. My proposition is a substitute for the original bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not now in order to be voted on. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] which has just been read.

Mr. SHERWIN. Some members do not understand how many members are proposed in that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-five.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether these 325 members are by this amendment apportioned according to the new or the old method.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The old method.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 162, nays 104, not voting 26; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following additional pair was announced:

Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts, with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ANDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I believe my amendment is next in order, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. It is an amendment to the first section and would have been next in order, but as the House has already agreed on the first section, all other amendments to that section necessarily fall, and will not be voted on.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask for the reading of the second section and the proposed amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, if permitted, I withdraw that amendment to the second section.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRESCOTT. There is an amendment, offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COLERICK,] to the third section.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon a vote upon that amendment?

Mr. COLERICK. I ask a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be reported.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Before the third section is considered, as I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana refers to this section, I desire to have the second section completed, in accordance with the vote which has just been taken, by adding at the end of the section the word "five;" so that it will read:

That whenever a new State is admitted to the Union the Representative or Representatives assigned to it shall be in addition to the number 325.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the modification will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move the adoption of the section as modified.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

If in any State in which the number of Representatives in Congress is changed by this act the Legislature thereof shall not have adapted its laws to the changes herein made so as to enable Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress from said State to be elected at the time now provided by law, it shall be lawful for the governor of such State, after it shall have been redistricted under this act, by proclamation, to provide for a special election for such Representatives, to be had upon such notice and in the same manner as is now provided by law for the election of members of the most numerous branch of the Legislature.

Mr. SPRINGER. That would allow the governor of New York to redistrict that State as he might see fit.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the third section of the bill be read in connection with this proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER. The section will be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That in each State entitled under this apportionment the number to which such State may be entitled in the Forty-eighth and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants, and equal in number to the Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative: Provided, That unless the Legislature of such State shall otherwise provide, before the election of such Representatives shall take place as provided by law, where no change shall be hereby made in the representation of a State, the Representatives thereof to the Forty-eighth Congress shall be elected therein as now provided by law. If the number as hereby provided for shall be larger than it was before this change, then the additional Representative or Representatives allowed to said State under this apportionment may be elected by the State at large, and the other Representatives to which the State is entitled by the districts as now prescribed by law in said State; and if the number hereby provided for shall in any State be less than it was before the change hereby made, then the whole number to such State hereby provided for shall be elected at large, unless the Legislatures of said States should otherwise provide before the time fixed by law for the next election of Representatives therein. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 103.

Mr. COLERICK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 21 members only voting therefor.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

The House refused to order tellers, there being only 22 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. COLERICK. I demand a count of the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late now to demand a count of the other side on the demand for the yeas and nays, since the House has refused tellers on the yeas and nays.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that there is any further pending amendment to the bill.

Mr. PRESCOTT. There was an amendment introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BELTZHOOVER,] which I think has not been withdrawn.

Mr. SIMONTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMONTON. I wish to know if the sections to which the amendments which may be adopted are pending will have to be adopted by the House by another vote.

The SPEAKER. Not now.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] offered a substitute for the bill; does he insist upon a vote?

Mr. JOYCE. I do.

The SPEAKER. The question will then be taken on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Vermont for the entire bill, unless there be other amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the substitute be read.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I think the amendment I offered comes in before the substitute.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the third section of the bill is next entitled to consideration.

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to the third section of the apportionment bill the following provision:

"It shall be unlawful to divide any county or parish in the formation of any district which shall consist of more than one county or parish, unless contiguous territory containing the ratio of inhabitants fixed by law for a district cannot be obtained without such division; and in all districts consisting of more than one county or parish the counties or parishes which are most nearly contiguous to each other and which have the number of inhabitants nearest to the ratio fixed by law shall be made a representative district."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 89.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 135, not voting 42; as follows:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

After the second roll-call,

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. KELLEY with Mr. CURTIN; and

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. MONEY.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I listened to the second call of the roll and did not hear my name called. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman attending to the roll-call?

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. Yes; I was listening and did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER. The rule, or rather practice, is that after the second roll-call if a gentleman states that he listened attentively and did not hear his name called he should be permitted to vote.

Mr. RANDALL. What part of the rule is that?

The SPEAKER. That is the practice which was established by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] himself, when he was Speaker.

Mr. RANDALL. Never.

The SPEAKER. It has been the constant practice to allow gentlemen when they rise in their seats and state they had given attention to the roll-call throughout and failed to hear their names called, to permit them to have their names again called. If the gentleman from Missouri states he was giving attention, the Chair will, in accordance with the former practice, allow his name to be again called.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I was giving attention.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name will again be called.

The name of Mr. RICE, of Missouri, was again called and he voted "ay."

Mr. BRAGG. I wish to ask the Chair whether the case to which he refers is not that of a member rising in his seat and stating he had voted, but the Clerk had failed to record him as voting?

The SPEAKER. Both cases have arisen under this rule, both in this and in the last Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say I never made any such decision.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

There being no objection, the reading of the names of those who had voted was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make a privileged motion. When the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COLERICK] was being voted on, I was under a misapprehension and voted against it. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCOOK. I rise to a question of order. I cannot hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order. Gentlemen will resume their seats. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 72, noes 97.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. As the regular order, the next vote will be taken on the substitute for the whole bill, offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COLERICK.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Before we pass to that, I move to reconsider the vote by which the House disagreed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COLERICK.] I call upon the Clerk to state whether my vote was not with the prevailing side.

The Clerk stated that Mr. SPRINGER had voted with the majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana was rejected.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER, having put the question on a division by sound, stated that the "ayes" had it.

Mr. SPRINGER. You cannot pass this bill without our understanding what we are about.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order to debate the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Illinois is not entitled to the floor. The privilege of moving to reconsider belonged to the majority. The majority neglected to make that motion, and it is not now the right of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to make it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] voted with the majority on that amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Clerk has stated so.

Mr. SPARKS. And voting with the majority he had the right to move to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair for that reason entertains the motion, but the Chair holds that when a motion is made to lay the motion to reconsider on the table the gentleman from Illinois is not entitled to debate the question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was not asking to debate the question. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 42 members voting therefor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order to debate this question,

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not ask to debate it. I want to have the amendment on which we are to vote read. I have the right to have this question stated.

The SPEAKER. It is the habit of some gentlemen to rise and debate out of order at a time when the Chair cannot hear, by reason of the confusion, a word that is said. The gentleman is entirely out of order to debate a matter that is not debatable.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not attempted to debate it. I want the question stated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll and called the first name, Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a right to have the amendment read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I suggest the reading of the amendment is in the nature of debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a right to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the right to interrupt the roll-call. By unanimous consent he can have the amendment read. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. SHELLEY and Mr. MULDROW moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SHELLEY. I insist on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion has just been voted down.

Mr. SHELLEY. But other business has intervened.

Mr. KENNA. I will state my point of order when I have an opportunity, but no sooner; as soon as there is sufficient order in the House to permit my being heard.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. As soon as the House comes to order the gentleman from West Virginia is recognized on a point of order.

Mr. KENNA. I insist that it is the right of members on this floor not only to hear what is going on, but that the Chair shall hear them when they make motions and requests. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asked to have the amendment, upon which the House was about to vote, read to the House, and was cut off by the calling of the roll, which was ordered on account of the confusion being so great that the Chair did not hear his request.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the Chair indicated that there was a reconsideration of the vote on the Indiana proposition, whereas the reconsideration was on the Pennsylvania proposition. That is the reason why we desired to have the amendment read, in order that we might know what proposition we were voting upon. That, I think, is a very natural request to make.

The SPEAKER. On the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, there was a reconsideration and tabling of that vote. On the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COLERICK] the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moved to reconsider, which motion to reconsider the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] moved to lay on the table.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to inquire if it is not true that the Speaker had directed the roll to be called, and the first name on the roll had been called by the Clerk before the request for the reading of the amendment was made? If so, then as a point of order I hold that the roll-call cannot be interrupted.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no doubt about that.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about that. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

Mr. MULDROW. I rise to a question of order.

Several members made remarks which were not understood at the reporter's desk.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order. The Chair states that when a number of members are speaking at once he will not listen to or recognize any of them.

Mr. AIKEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] is out of order for the present. When the House comes to order, the Chair will listen to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MULDROW.] [After a pause.] The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MULDROW. My point of order is this: that business has intervened between the time the last motion to adjourn was made and voted down and the time that I made the motion to adjourn, and therefore my motion to adjourn was in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made his motion after the Clerk had commenced the call of the roll.

Mr. MULDROW. I beg the Speaker's pardon.

The SPEAKER. And after the Clerk had commenced the calling of the roll he was interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SHELLEY. I moved to adjourn before the call of the roll was commenced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman. If gentlemen desire to have their rights recognized they must preserve order. The confusion in the House is often such that the Chair cannot hear members who would otherwise be in order. The Clerk will proceed with the roll-call.

Mr. AIKEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to state that it is perfectly impossible for members to hear anything said except by the Speaker. I insist that we must have the amendment read from the Clerk's desk, or no one can vote upon it intelligently. Have I not the right to know what I am voting on?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read.

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. AIKEN,] which is that the House is out of order and that there is too much disorder and confusion, the Chair sustains. Gentlemen complain that their motions are not heard or recognized in the midst of all this confusion. The Chair desires to rid itself of all responsibility for any failure to recognize gentlemen, simply because the confusion in the Hall makes it impossible for him to hear them. The Clerk has begun the call of the roll.

Mr. AIKEN. If my name was called I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard it, and so did other gentlemen.

Mr. AIKEN. And even if it was called, I do not know what I am asked to vote upon.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I hope there will be no objection to having the amendment read.

The SPEAKER. If there is unanimous consent the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COLERICK] will be again read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 3 insert the following:

"If in any State in which the number of Representatives in Congress is changed by this act the Legislature thereof shall not have adapted its laws to the changes herein made so as to enable Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress from said State to be elected at the time now provided by law, it shall be lawful for the governor of such State, after it shall have been redistricted under this act, by proclamation, to provide for a special election for such Representatives, to be had upon such notice and in the same manner as is now provided by law for the election of members of the most numerous branch of the Legislature."

Mr. SHELLEY. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order in the midst of a roll-call.

Mr. HOOKER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call was interrupted by unanimous consent to have the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COLERICK] read by the Clerk. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. State it.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Make it.

Mr. KENNA. It is whether, under the rules of this House, it makes any difference that intervening business has been transacted by consent or otherwise; and cannot a motion to adjourn be renewed after intervening business has been made?

Mr. HAZELTON. That does not apply to this at all.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call cannot be interrupted by a motion to adjourn. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the call; and there were—yeas 129, nays 4, not voting 159; as follows:

Mr. SHELLEY and others. No quorum.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion of Mr. PAGE was agreed to; and accordingly (at six o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BREWER: The petition of citizens of Lakewood, New Jersey, for the adoption of measures for the extirpation of polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: The petition of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of Blair County, Pennsylvania, and of members of Stephen Potts Post, Grand Army of the Republic, praying Congress to establish a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEBBER: The petition of 38 citizens of Wayland, Michigan, for the suppression of polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 17, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Major James W. Cuyler, Corps of Engineers, of an examination of the Licking River from its mouth to Falmouth, Kentucky, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 7th instant, a report of the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office in reference to the right of occupation by settlers of any portion of the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of March 24, 1881, complete lists of all publications relating to the Department of Justice, and all documents published by the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, from 1853 to 1881, inclusive; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VOORHEES presented two petitions of citizens of Indiana, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SLATER presented the petition of Louisa Boddy, one of the sufferers by the Modoc war, praying for the restitution of property destroyed by Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, I hold in my hand resolutions of the Union League Club of the city of New York, relating to a bill introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] in aid of the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The Union League Club was organized soon after the breaking out of the late war by the patriotic citizens of the city of New York. During that struggle it gave much aid and comfort to the Union cause. Since the close of the war the Union League Club has been continued as a social and political club, and its voice has ever been given in support of good government. Of late it has taken deep interest in the matter of the education of the masses. The club not only numbers among its members many of the leading citizens of the city of New York, but many of the leading citizens scattered over the entire country, and I believe its views are entitled to the consideration of this body. I ask that the memorial be read, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

THE UNION LEAGUE CLUB,
New York, February 10, 1882.

To Hon. WARNER MILLER:

The following report was accepted and the appended resolution unanimously adopted at a regular meeting of the Union League Club held on the 9th of February, 1882.

We request you to present them to Congress, as being the respectful petition of this club.

Very few subjects equal in importance that of elevating the illiterate voters in the United States to the condition required for the proper enjoyment and protection of universal suffrage.

It appears from the census of 1880, that of the total colored population, over 47 per cent. are unable to write. Of the total white population nearly 7 per cent. are unable to write. These percentages are much higher in the South. Those unable to write in Alabama are, whites nearly 17 per cent., colored over 53. In Georgia, whites nearly 16 per cent., colored over 54. In North Carolina, whites over 22 per cent., colored over 51. In New Mexico, whites 49½ per cent., colored 69½. In many of the States the means for instruction are confessedly insufficient to cope with this great evil.

The want of education and of consequent ability to use the suffrage so as to protect the voter from fraud, violence, and misdirection, and our free institutions from peril, have caused the introduction into the Senate of the United States of a bill entitled "A bill to aid the establishment and temporary support of common schools."

It appropriates $15,000,000 for the first year, and then goes on diminishing one million a year until at the end of ten years the final appropriation of $6,000,000 is reached, after which they entirely cease.

In addition to a common-school education, instruction in the arts of industry is to be given wherever practicable. The fund is not to be applied to the construction of school-houses. It is to be divided among the States and Territories in the proportion which the number of illiterates in each bears to the whole number of them in the United States. The Southern States will therefore have the larger share. A small part of the fund may be applied to the education of teachers for common schools.

The design of the bill is not to establish an independent system, but to aid for the time being in the development of local systems. It provides that no payments shall be made under it in any State or Territory which shall not, from its own resources, annually expend for the maintenance of common schools, free to all, during the first five years of the operation of the act, at least one-third as much as the sum allotted to it, and during the second five years a sum equal to the whole so allotted. Payments, however, in case of such local neglect, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, may be made for the support of existing common schools or the establishment of new ones. In case, also, of other localities not possessing common-school advantages, he may establish them.

The Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Education, is charged with the administration of the act, aided by a commissioner in each State, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; the commissioner thus appointed is to act in co-operation with the State authorities in which he is located. In Territories this commissioner is charged with the general supervision and control of public education.

All payments under the act are to be made by Treasury warrants directly to the person in each State or Territory who renders service, on vouchers to be approved by the local authorities, the commissioner, and the Secretary of the Interior.

It will be seen, therefore, that the amount payable in any State or Territory can neither be diverted nor squandered, but that careful provision is made for the application of it directly to the purposes of education. The bill is comprehensive as well as guarded, and is to continue only for the length of time supposed to be required for stimulating the most sluggish of the States into the requisite activity.

The condition of the Treasury, with a large annual surplus, tempting to useless schemes of extravagance, would seem to be a favorable time for the adoption of a measure to secure the enlightenment of the uneducated and the safety of our republican form of government. The Constitution in express terms provides, section 4, article 4, that "the United States shall guarantee to each State in this Union a republican form of government." The powers necessary to carry out this guarantee are implied and are, therefore, complete. By the act of the national Government a large body of illiterate men have been suddenly raised from the condition of chattels into that of freemen and voters, without any preparation for the high duty which admission to the suffrage involves. The extraordinary measures resorted to in States where the danger from this source is most conspicuous, often leading to bloodshed and anarchy, would seem to impose on the General Government the immediate duty of seeing that the republican form, thus threatened by the two evils of illiteracy and violence, shall be preserved. The necessary and proper means for this consists in such a wide diffusion of the benefits and blessings of education as will secure the requisite intelligence and patriotism.

The committee of political reform recommend the adoption of the following resolution.

GEO. B. BUTLER, Chairman.
S. M. BLATCHFORD, Secretary.

Resolved, That the Union League Club heartily approves of the scope and object of the bill introduced into the Senate of the United States by Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR, of the State of New Hampshire, entitled "A bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools," and that the President and Secretary of the club be directed to affix their names to this report and resolution as being the respectful petition of the club to the Congress of the United States in favor of the passage of the bill.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully,

WILLIAM M. EVARTS, President.
DAVID MILLIKEN, JR., Secretary.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of Z. T. Smith and 29 others, citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of a law to compel railroad corporations and their agents, and all common carriers upon them, to perform certain duties; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KELLOGG. I present a petition of members of the Cotton Exchange of Shreveport, Caddo Parish, Louisiana, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Red River, and also for the erection of a public building in the city of Shreveport for a court-house and post-office. I suppose other petitions of this kind, in regard to the improvement of Red River, have gone to the Committee on Commerce, but as the petition further relates to the erection of a public building, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the treatment of the Jews in Russia and in favor of governmental intervention in their behalf; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WINDOM presented the petition of G. A. Dallas, missionary, and others, citizens of Texas, praying for an appropriation for schools for children of freedmen now living in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of John B. Stranch, of Madison County, Illinois, late a private in Company C, Third Regiment Missouri Mounted Volunteers, praying to be compensated for certain losses sustained by him while in the service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I present a petition of the county officers and other residents of Knox County, Nebraska, praying for authority to build a bridge across the Bazile Creek in the Santee Sioux reservation, and also one across the Niobrara River on the old Ponca reservation. These streams are not navigable, and therefore I think it proper that the petition should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which committee I move its reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company of Alabama, praying to be relieved from certain burdens imposed on land-grant railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COKE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas, to report it without amendment. I am also unanimously instructed by the committee to ask the consent of the Senate to act upon the bill at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. INGALLS. The regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. COKE. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that I was unanimously instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill in view of the necessity for its early passage.

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill relates to an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Galveston, Texas. The citizens of that State have taken great interest in this matter, believing that the public interest will be greatly subserved by an advanced appropriation for the improvement of the harbor. The committee have received from the Department the opinion of the Secretary of War, and directed the Senator from Texas, as a member of the committee, to report the bill with the request that it should be considered immediately.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Kansas for a moment. I know personally by an actual personal investigation the importance of this bill. I know it is earnestly recommended by the Chief of Engineers, and it is necessary to continue the work, which otherwise will have to stop.

Mr. INGALLS. Every bill on the Calendar is meritorious, and in the interest of the public service I ask that we may proceed with the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. COKE. I desire to give notice that Monday morning, after the morning business has been disposed of, I shall move to lay aside all pending business and take up the bill just reported by me from the Committee on Commerce, unless I can secure action on it to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1230) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Florida.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE. By direction of the Committee on the Census, I ask leave to report back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 4240) supplemental to the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the final expenses of the tenth census" with the recommendation that it pass. This is a matter which should be attended to at once in order that the employés may have their pay. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. The regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HALE. Then I give notice that before proceeding with the Calendar under the Anthony rule I shall ask, in a few moments, the consent of the Senate to take up this bill and pass it. It is very urgent in its needs, and will take but a little while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Meanwhile the bill will go upon the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims to report back favorably the bill (S. No. 504) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories, with amendments. The bill relates to private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico, Wyoming, Arizona, and Utah, and within the States of Nevada and Colorado. The bill is reported from the committee with a recommendation that it pass; and accompanying it I propose to report unfavorably a number of bills to confirm private claims.

I desire to say to the Senate that the question being of great interest to many individual claimants under these bills, it is due to the parties claimant and the importance of the question, that Congress should decide at an early day whether it will confirm the action of the Senate at a preceding time on this subject, for the bill now reported has met twice the favorable consideration of the Senate, but has failed to pass the other House. I believe it has failed to have any action taken upon it in the House. It is due to the claimants that either we should adopt the reasoning of the committee and settle the private land claims, which are of great magnitude and importance to large bodies of settlers in these new States and Territories, by proposing to adjudicate their claims as the bill provides before legal tribunals, or that they shall as heretofore bring in their claims, separatim, to be considered by the committees of Congress.

In reporting the bill back, I signify to the Senate as the organ of the Committee on Private Land Claims their belief that it is proper for the sake of private justice that these land claims should be in all cases adjudicated by a tribunal furnished with the proper machinery for the ascertainment of facts and the adjudication of rights. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar, and I invite the attention of Senators to it in order that at an early day I may call it up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. By the same committee I am instructed to report adversely and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the bills which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be indefinitely postponed if there be no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not move the indefinite postponement of the bills. The committee report them adversely and ask to be discharged from their further consideration and that they may go on the Calendar, so that the parties interested may have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. GARLAND. I understand the Senator from Delaware to ask that the bills be not finally disposed of now, because if the general bill he has reported does not cover these private bills the parties would then have the question left open.

Mr. BAYARD. That is the point. I think that is only right.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware if there is a written report accompanying the general bill?

Mr. BAYARD. No. The bill is a general bill and disposes, in the judgment of the committee, of the necessity for action by the committee or by Congress upon the separate claims.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Delaware if the bill is designed to cover the various claims that are presented before other committees, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Committee on Military Affairs, or the Committee on Claims?

Mr. BAYARD. It relates to lands in the States and Territories covered by the treaty stipulations referred to therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills reported adversely will be placed on the Calendar.

The following bills reported adversely were ordered to be placed on the Calendar:

A bill (S. No. 1178) for the relief of Ignacio Chaves and others, their heirs, and assigns;

A bill (S. No. 986) to confirm a certain land claim in the Territory of Arizona;

A bill (S. No. 617) to confirm a grant of land to citizens of Socorro, New Mexico;

A bill (S. No. 870) to confirm title to certain private land grants in Arizona Territory;

A bill (S. No. 408) to confirm a certain land claim in the Territory of New Mexico; and

A bill (S. No. 260) to confirm the title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona to Charles P. Sykes and John Currey.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1231) to establish a polytechnic school for the United States, or a school for instruction in science and the useful arts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BUTLER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1232) for the relief of Agnes and Maria De Leon, heirs-at-law of Rebecca L. De Leon, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALDRICH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1234) to regulate the licenses of vessels engaged in the coasting trade and fisheries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1235) for the relief of I. Edwin Forrest; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1236) granting a pension to Thomas Simpson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARLEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1237) to extend the time for making proof and payment on desert-land entries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLATT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1238) to regulate practice in patent suits; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say that early in the session the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] introduced a resolution instructing the Committee on Patents to inquire what legislation was necessary to regulate proceedings in patent suits; and there have been several bills referred to the committee which have been considered. I think the result of the labors of the committee up to the present time is embodied in the bill which I have now introduced. I do not desire to commit the committee or myself to its favorable consideration finally, but I introduce the bill so that those who are interested in this subject may have their attention called to it and make further suggestions. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1239) granting a pension to Joseph N. Abbey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1240) providing for the building of a lock at the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1241) for the improvement of Red River above Shreveport, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1242) providing for the improvement of Bayou La Fourche, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1243) providing for the improvement of Bayou Teche, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1244) for the improvement of the Calcasieu River, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1245) for the deepening and improvement of the channel of the Atchafalaya River, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1246) regarding the improvement of the levee of the Mississippi River in front of the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1247) providing for the improvement of the Ouachita River, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1248) providing for the erection of a post-office and court-house at Opelousas, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1249) providing for the erection of a custom-house and post-office at Morgan City, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1250) providing for the erection of a post-office and court-house at Shreveport, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1251) for the relief of Alfred G. Hatfield; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROLLINS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1252) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1253) granting a pension to Maria Louise Moss; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1254) for the relief of Captain W. J. Lyster; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That Thomas W. King have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the case of Arent B. Sorenson be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That the papers in the matter of the proposed sale of a part of the Fort Hays military reservation be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask permission of the Senate to have returned to the Commissioner of Pensions the papers relating to the pension claim of John C. Hargrave. The case has been reported favorably by the Committee on Pensions, and is now on the Calendar. The papers were sent here by the Commissioner of Pensions, and are now in the office of the Secretary of the Senate. I ask permission to have them withdrawn and returned to the Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

HOY COOPER.

Mr. COCKRELL. On Tuesday last the Committee on Pensions reported adversely on the bill (S. No. 888) granting a pension to Hoy Cooper, and the bill was indefinitely postponed. I ask that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed upon the Calendar until I can have time to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CENSUS OFFICE EMPLOYÉS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions," the Calendar will be proceeded with under the Anthony rule.

Mr. HALE. I now ask unanimous consent to take up the bill reported by me this morning in relation to the disposition of the census appropriation. It will take but a short time to dispose of the bill, and I hope there will be no objection to action upon it at this time.

Mr. McPHERSON. I call for the regular order. I wish to state that we have now been in session nearly two months and a half; we have two hundred and fifty bills upon the Calendar, and have not considered more than about twenty of them; and until some work has been done upon the Calendar I shall object to every matter being brought up out of order.

Mr. HALE. Let me appeal to the Senator from New Jersey for a moment, so that he may understand what the bill is which I am seeking to call up. It is a bill providing for the immediate payment of the Census Office employés who are now hung up in the Department for the need of the legislation provided by the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have no objection to the consideration of that bill; I withdraw all objection; but I give notice now that after action upon that bill I shall object to everything except the Calendar.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4240) supplemental to the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the final expenses of the tenth census." It declares that notwithstanding the provisions of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes, the compensation authorized by the act approved January 28, 1882, "making appropriations for the payment of the final expenses of the tenth census," to be paid to those persons who have rendered services as volunteers, may be made to the assignee or assignees in writing of the amounts payable to such persons respectively, or may be made to such person or persons as shall have received in writing and now hold a power of attorney to collect, have, and receive the said compensation, or any part thereof, on the certificates issued therefor by the Department of the Interior, to the amount advanced by such assignee or person holding such right or power of attorney to such volunteer, together with interest or discount upon such advancement not exceeding the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the report be read if there is a report in the case.

Mr. HALE. There is no printed report upon the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Maine state what the bill is?

Mr. HALE. It is a bill passed by the House and sent here; and I will state the occasion for its passage.

The Census Office employés during the summer, working voluntarily for the Government, depending upon an appropriation to be made afterwards, which has already been made, were forced by their condition in many cases to assign in whole or in part their claims or certificates. Those certificates now lie in the hands of parties who have advanced sometimes 50 per cent., sometimes 75 per cent. of the amount. The parties holding the certificates have assignments and powers of attorney, which, of course, under the law at present cannot be recognized. The statute is very clear and specific, declaring that the Government will recognize no assignments of claims of this kind. The parties find themselves in this predicament: those who have advanced money to the employés in good faith cannot collect because the statute interposes; those who did the work and have lodged their certificates with parties advancing the money cannot get their pay for the balance or for any amount because the certificates are in the hands of those who advanced the money and the disbursing officer has nothing to recognize. So the result is that everybody is hung up, the employés as well as the parties who have furnished the money.

I am bound to say, Mr. President, that if the circumstances were not such as they are, the needs very urgent, and all the conditions anomalous, I should not like the bill. I do not like establishing a precedent by which we recognize assignments given to agents and brokers; but we are confronted with a practical question, whether on explanation of this subject, under all the conditions, we shall let these people out and let them have their pay.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to put a question to my honorable friend from Maine either now or when he gets through.

Mr. HALE. Now, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. HOAR. I ask, does the bill authorize the payment by the Government of interest? Will the Senator from Maine look at the last part of the bill and see whether it is liable to that construction?

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot hear the Senator from Massachusetts at all.

Mr. HOAR. The question I put was whether this bill authorizes and requires the payment by the Government of interest. I suppose the bill intends to say that the assignee may receive out of what is due to the employé an amount equal to what he has advanced and interest upon it, but that in no event is the Government to pay interest as if it were a debtor from whom interest were due.

Mr. HALE. The bill was drawn by the First Comptroller, a very careful officer, and I have no doubt that his intention was to provide simply that as between the parties, the clerk and the broker, interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum might be allowed on the advance.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not to exceed 10 per cent.

Mr. HALE. Not to exceed the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and it is not in any way to increase the obligation of the Government to pay the amount of the certificate, either to the clerk or to the broker.

Mr. HOAR. If the First Comptroller drew the bill, I am very sure he will expound it that way.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt he will. I do not think there is any practical trouble in that regard.

Mr. HOAR. I think, however, the bill is not well drawn in that particular, as would be ascertained if it were sent to a stranger to expound it as it is now written; but I will not compel the bill to be sent back to the House of Representatives on such a question.

Mr. HALE. That of course would be the trouble, that if we amend it, the bill would have to go back to the House, and I suppose these are cases of real suffering which require immediate relief.

Mr. INGALLS. There is one provision in the bill that I confess I am not able to understand. The statement of the Senator from Maine was clear and lucid; indeed I understood before that the pay certificates, as I suppose they may be called, had been assigned to certain bankers or brokers or money dealers in this town who had advanced a percentage to the persons entitled to the pay. What amount was withheld by these brokers has never definitely been stated.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the amount differs probably in different cases.

Mr. HARRIS. The sums do differ in amount.

Mr. INGALLS. That is to say, these brokers speculated upon the necessities of the persons who held these certificates, exacting from them whatever they could extort as a consideration for the advancement of money, upon the assurance that Congress would make the necessary appropriation.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that was the case.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to say on that point that I was informed by the present Superintendent of the Census that in some instances gentlemen came forward with money and advanced a given proportion of these certificates at 6 per cent. per annum, as a mere matter of favor to the employés. In some other instances I have no doubt the fact is exactly as the Senator from Kansas states it, and brokers made harsh terms with employés.

Mr. HALE. That is regulated in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill does not allow them to receive more than 10 per cent. per annum.

Mr. INGALLS. That is exactly what I wish to call to the attention of the Senate: whether it is proposed to say by a solemn enactment that we will permit the sum of 10 per cent. per annum to be charged by brokers to Government employés, when the rate of interest that the Government is paying is fixed at from 3 to 3½ per cent.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the Senator realizes the fact that a broker, however fair and reasonable he might be, in a short transaction of this kind, dealing with small sums and dealing with the uncertainty of the future as to an appropriation, would naturally be expected to ask a rate of interest much larger than that on the long Government bonds. I suppose the committee in considering this subject fixed upon 10 per cent. per annum as a rate of interest that for such a transaction would not be unreasonable.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the maximum.

Mr. INGALLS. The element of uncertainty never entered into this transaction. There was no more doubt that Congress would appropriate the amount necessary to complete this census and pay the wages due to these employés than there was that Congress would meet on the day designated by the Constitution. I am opposed, so far as I am concerned, not to the payment of the amount due on the certificates to the persons holding them, because there was an exigency which perhaps would justify it, but I think it is vicious and pernicious to recognize by act of Congress the right of the brokers and money-lenders and bank proprietors of Washington to advance money to necessitous employés at exorbitant and extortionate rates of interest.

I shall not move to amend the bill, because I suppose perhaps that might necessitate still longer delay, but I want to put on record my emphatic protest against such a provision being incorporated into a bill of this description.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say only a word further. I agree fully with the Senator from Kansas; I do not like the bill; I do not like provisions in any bill recognizing an assignment of claims against the Government made to brokers or claim agents. As I have said, it is only because the condition is so peculiar and because the urgency is so great, that I ask the passage of the bill, at the same time putting in my protest, that it shall not be considered at any time hereafter as a precedent; and I have no thought that any such conditions will ever again arise.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine a question for information. Was a certificate issued to the employé by the Government, or by any officer of the Government, for the amount of money due him?

Mr. HALE. I understand that after the appropriation had been made recognizing the service, certificates were issued, and that these certificates to a greater or less extent are in the hands of the parties who have advanced the money.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then it was clearly the act of the employé himself in disposing of his certificate, he holding it or not as he pleased?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine how it became necessary for employés of the Government to assign these warrants? How did the deficiency occur?

Mr. HALE. I will explain that. If an appropriation had been made in advance for this work, the employés, month by month, would have drawn their pay; they would have paid their own bills, and would have been in the condition of the clerks in any Department; but they were hung up, they had no money, they needed money, and they had to pledge these claims against the Government.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to know from the Senator whether Congress has not responded affirmatively to every request made for an appropriation in regard to the taking of the census, and whether this was an unexpected expense incurred by the Department, or whether it was in the usual course of the employment under the Census Bureau?

Mr. HALE. That raises a question about the conduct of the Census Office in going on and doing this work and trusting to Congress. It was unexpected to this extent, that the Superintendent of the Census at the time Congress was in session last winter hoped and believed he could get along with the funds then at his disposal. He afterward found that the cloth was not big enough to make the garment, so that he had to go on in this way, but that is all settled by the appropriation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENTS OF GALVESTON HARBOR.

Mr. COKE. I again, since the morning business has been disposed of, ask the Senate to take up the bill I reported this mornlng.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas, which was reported by him this morning from the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which appropriates $100,000 for the purpose of continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, Texas, which improvements are now being prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War, and the appropriation for which is wholly insufficient to continue the work to the end of the current fiscal year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I now call for the regular order, which, I think, is Senate bill No. 12, being No. 27 on the order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the point reached when proceedings under the Anthony rule were last had was order of business No. 49, but several cases had been passed without prejudice.

Mr. McPHERSON. The case I speak of was reached in my absence; and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] asked to have it passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 12) to establish and equalize the grades and regulate appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps. It was passed over without prejudice and, if there be no objection, it will now be taken up.

The bill was read.

Mr. McPHERSON. There are some amendments of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the report may be read.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects to the consideration of the bill. It will be passed over. Are there any other bills that have been passed over without prejudice?

Mr. SLATER. On Monday last Senate bill No. 126, order of business No. 36, was reached, and I asked that it might be passed over without prejudice in order to procure some papers that were in the other wing of the Capitol. I ask that it now be taken up.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts objected to the present consideration of the bill relative to the Marine Corps?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move that all other matters be postponed for the purpose of considering that bill. It is reached in proper order on the Calendar, and we have as much time to consider it to-day as we shall ever have. I think that when the report is read every Senator will be perfectly satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon give way? He has the floor.

Mr. SLATER. No, sir; I do not give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill of the Senator from New Jersey was objected to and passed over.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not hear the Senator from Massachusetts object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has since obtained the floor and asked that another bill be taken up.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted, by the courtesy of the Senator from Oregon, to say a word, I will remark that I did not understand, and do not now understand, that the purpose of this Anthony rule was to bring before the Senate in this scrap which remains of the morning hour before half past one important measures which introduce new policies and require full debate, such as changing the entire organization of the Marine Corps. It seemed to me that it was manifest when the honorable Senator from Kansas called for the reading of the report that this was a bill which must require considerable examination and reflection on the part of the Senate.

I hope, therefore, that the Senator from New Jersey will not antagonize the Calendar, which is being called for the unobjected cases, or those cases which require only a brief five-minute explanation, by insisting on cutting off the twenty minutes that remain. He will have an opportunity to move to take up his bill after half past one. It will not further the final disposition of his bill to press it now.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not expect it would take more than a very few moments to read the report, which I think is a complete answer to all the objection which can be urged to the bill. The bill has received the unanimous assent of the Committee on Naval Affairs; it is recommended by the Marine Corps themselves, both staff and line, and by distinguished Army and Navy officers, and by the Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is looking at the clock every minute.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am proceeding by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill called for by the Senator from Oregon will be read.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

The Acting Secretary read the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

Mr. SLATER. This bill, in the terms in which it is now read, passed the Senate during the last Congress. The bill has been very fully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs both in the last Congress and in the present Congress. I think it passed the Senate two or three times previous to its passage in the last Congress, but failed in the other House by their being unable to reach it. It is now presented again. The facts have all been stated in the report, which is in consonance with the reports of the Department and sustained by the Attorney-General, I think in two different opinions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report?

Mr. SHERMAN. The amount is very large, and I think we ought to have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. SLATER from the Committee on Indian Affairs on the 10th of January last; and after proceeding some time,

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the consideration of that bill. It involves too large a sum of money to be considered under this call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

G. W. CANDEE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 480) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, of $2,650, being the amount stolen from him at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, in the fall of 1869, without fault or negligence on his part, and restored by him out of private funds.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is; and it will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. HAMPTON on the 11th of January, but before concluding was interrupted by,

Mr. HAMPTON. I think I can relieve the Senate from having a very long report read by stating the substance of the case. The proof before the Military Committee was overwhelming, and its substance is embraced in the report. The evidence before the committee shows that the money was stolen. There was a unanimous report last year, and the bill passed the Senate unanimously; and it only failed because it could not be reached in the other House. The committee has made the same report this year, having all the facts before it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the report had better be read, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me to make the request.

Mr. HAMPTON. I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. McMILLAN. The circumstances under which the loss occurred are no doubt satisfactorily stated in the report, but the Senate ought to hear them.

The Principal Legislative Clerk resumed, and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 480) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, respectfully submit the following report:

That the committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate Report No. 462, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, which said report is hereto annexed and made part of this report, and is as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 462, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 904) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, have duly considered the same and accompanying papers, and recommend that it pass.

"The facts upon which this recommendation is based are so fully set forth in the reports of Major Candee and the Paymaster-General that your committee ask to make them a part of their report.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, January 8, 1880.

"The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the House of Representatives, for the Committee on Military Affairs, copies of reports of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, and Brigadier-General Benjamin Alvord, Paymaster-General, United States Army, dated, respectively, December 29, 1879, and January 3, 1880, containing information called for under date of December 9, 1879, by Hon. Benjamin Le Fevre, sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs, in relation to the inclosed bill, House of Representatives No. 3049, for the relief of Major G. W. Candee.

"COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
"Washington, D. C., December 19, 1879.

"SIR: The accompanying bill (H. R. No. 3049) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, is before the committee, and referred to me for examination and report.

"I respectfully request the following information, namely:

"First. The military history of the officer.

"Second. Was there a want of reasonable care and diligence exercised by the paymaster, Major Candee, while on disbursing duty at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, at the time $2,650 was stolen from his safe?

"Third. Is much consideration due Major Candee for his promptness in repairing the loss of the amount of money stolen?

"Fourth. If no fault is attached to Major Candee, and his reputation is that of a faithful, industrious, and honorable paymaster, would the department hold it to be an act of justice if the relief asked for in bill H. R. 3049 was granted?

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

"[Second indorsement.]

"WASHINGTON, D. C., December 29, 1879.

"Respectfully returned to the Paymaster-General, inviting attention to the following report:

"November 15, 1869, I received orders from my immediate superior officer, Colonel N. W. Brown, Assistant Paymaster-General, United States Army, which orders commanded me to leave my station, Fort Smith, Arkansas, and proceed on a disbursing tour in a prescribed district, and pay the troops stationed therein. For the purpose I took with me $83,000 in paper currency of the United States, in packages running from $100 to $5,000. At the Creek agency, Indian Territory, two companies of the Tenth Cavalry were stationed. In paying the said command I used $2,350 from a $5,000 package, which amount paid was marked off the strap that secured the bills; the broken package I returned to the safe and placed it with the unbroken packages forming the top layer; I locked the safe and put the key in my pocket, resumed my journey, arriving at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, at four o'clock p. m., November 25, 1869. I accepted an invitation extended to me by Captain Joseph B. Rife, Sixth Infantry, to share his quarters during my temporary residence at the post. After luncheon arrangements were made to begin the payment of the troops. I unlocked and took from my safe several packages of money, locking my safe afterward; my clerk assisted in the removing of the straps and placing the bills on the pay-table. When I ceased disbursing for the day I returned to the safe the small amount of money left on the table. As I locked and took the key from the safe my clerk, Lewis Candee, inquired if I remembered having assorted the broken $5,000 package; I replied I did not handle it. My clerk secured the straps that were taken from the packages of bills paid out. We retired to my sleeping apartment; my clerk looked over the straps; the one belonging to the broken package was not among the number; the contents of the safe were removed, and no trace of the broken package containing the $2,650 was to be found. On my return to my station, Fort Smith, Arkansas, I balanced my accounts, and found a deficit of exactly $2,650. It is evident it had been taken from the safe soon after it was opened, and during the few minutes when my clerk and myself had our faces to the pay-table, arranging the bills in rows and piles of their respective denominations. The loss of the $2,650 being established, my brother, who was then my clerk, insisted that Captain Rife was the thief. I naturally felt that he committed the act, as there was no other way for me to account for the loss, he being the only other occupant of the quarters besides my brother and myself, yet it was a hard matter to charge the officer whose hospitality I was accepting as being the thief, when I did not detect him in the act of appropriating the money. In obedience to instructions, my brother went to Richfield, Illinois, and obtained from my father $2,650 to make good the loss, which amount was deposited with the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Saint Louis, Missouri.

"It is the unanimous opinion of the officers stationed at Fort Arbuckle at the time that Captain Rife was the person who abstracted the $2,650, which belief is strengthened by a later act of Captain Joseph B. Rife. While commanding an escort for Major David Taylor, paymaster, United States Army, he took from Major Taylor's pocket during the night, while he was asleep, the key to his safe, opened it, and stole from the only remaining $10,000 a package of $1,000, which theft later he acknowledged, and paid back the amount by draft drawn on his brother in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. At this time Captain Rife was forced to resign on account of serious charges then pending, aside from the theft of the $1,000. There can be no question, it is plain, that he appropriated the $2,650.

"I feel as though I am in no manner deserving of reprehension, and that the desired relief should be granted, as the loss occurred through no fault of my own.

"G. W. CANDEE,
"Paymaster, United States Army.

"[Third indorsement.]

"PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, January 3, 1880.

"Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of War.

"As to the military history of Major George W. Candee, paymaster, he was first appointed an additional paymaster February 23, 1864, and was mustered out January 15, 1866. He was afterward appointed a paymaster in the Army, January 17, 1867, under the eighteenth section of act of 28th July, 1866, which required the vacancies to be selected from those who had served as additional paymasters. His being selected for reappointment exhibits his standing during the war; and his entire course since has been confirmatory of the high character he has always held for probity, vigilance, and intelligent discharge of his duties. Thus I doubt not the affidavits presented by himself and his clerk, Lewis Candee, his brother, deserve to be treated with entire respect. His averment as to his care, caution, and diligence on the occasion referred to should have great weight. His brother, Lewis Candee, several years clerk to him, stands very high in character.

"No report of this transaction was made to this office. Major Candee, no doubt, refrained from making such report and applied at once to his father for the money to replace the amount under the supposition that the loss must be promptly made up in order to maintain his record.

"I think that consideration is due this office for his prompt restitution. The claim he has for legislation in this case is not absolute, but in proportion to his long and faithful service to the Government.

"In private life a rich bank often makes good to a painstaking, faithful teller an amount unluckily paid or lost, when there is unmistakable evidence of high character and fidelity, though the act of the bank must be one not at all founded on legal claims, but prompted by the bounty of the corporation in the spirit of generosity and good policy toward an unfortunate employé.

"BENJ. ALVORD,
"Paymaster-General, United States Army.

"I, Charles H. Smith, clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of an instrument of writing now on file in the committee-room of the Military Committee aforesaid.

"Witness my hand this 21st day of February, A. D. 1880.

"CHARLES H. SMITH,
"Clerk Military Committee House of Representatives."

The committee, therefore, adopt said Senate report as the report of this committee, and report the accompanying bill for his relief, with the recommendation that it do pass.

APPENDIX.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, August 22, 1881.

I certify that during the years 1866, 1867, and 1868, and a portion of 1869 I was in command of the posts of Fort Gibson, Indian Territory, and Fort Smith, Arkansas. Paymaster George W. Candee was the district paymaster, and I always considered him as being a man of great probity, and exceedingly correct as a man, and also as a Government disbursing officer. In 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1879 I was in command of Fort Randall, Dakota. Major Candee was the district paymaster, and until ordered to Washington paid my post with great regularity. I always considered him a good man, and faithful in the performance of his official duties. His brother, Mr. Louis Candee, who has always been his clerk, is universally respected for his correct habits and great business capacity. I have always considered him as being both intelligent and reliable. Being familiar with their method of doing business, and the very great care taken by them in looking after the public funds while making payments, I am fully convinced that his loss of funds in 1869 was not due to any neglect on their part.

PINKNEY LUGENBEEL,
Colonel Fifth Regiment United States Infantry.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington, D. C., August 19, 1881.

MAJOR: Having been informed that you contemplate applying to the next Congress for relief on account of money stolen from your safe at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, in 1869, I desire to state that I was stationed in that military department, serving upon various duties, as district commander, post commander, and as superintendent of Indian affairs, during the time you were on duty there, and, having excellent opportunities for observing your conduct at that time, I take great pleasure in thus testifying to your high character for integrity, sobriety, and discretion, and the careful and prompt performance of every duty devolving upon you.

I sincerely hope that your application for relief may be successful, and you are at liberty to make such use of this letter as you may desire.

Very truly, yours,

W. B. HAZEN,
Brigadier and Brevet Major-General, Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A.

Major G. W. CANDEE,
Paymaster United States Army.

---

392 FRANKLIN STREET, BUFFALO, N. Y.,
August 13, 1881.

I have the honor to state that I have known Major G. W. Candee for a number (ten or more) of years, serving a part of the time in the same department with him. I can testify to his promptness and correctness in business affairs, his courage and perseverence in traveling over lonely and perilous routes in the Indian country, and to his general high standing as an officer and a gentleman. I firmly believe Major Candee's loss was from causes unavoidable in a frontier country.

D. S. STANLEY,
Colonel Twenty-second Infantry, Brevet Major-General.

CAMP ON WHITE RIVER, COLORADO,
August 17, 1881.

COLONEL: It is earnestly hoped by all your friends that the bill will pass for your relief which is now before Congress. Those who have known you for so long a time in the Army can give the strongest assurances of your unimpeachable rectitude and integrity, and in your various important duties you have won their highest respect and esteem.

Very truly, yours,

ORLANDO H. MOORE,
Major Sixth Regiment Infantry, U. S. A.

Colonel G. W. CANDEE, U. S. A.,
Washington, D. C.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH INFANTRY,
Fort Brown, Texas, August 28, 1881.

I have known Major G. W. Candee, paymaster United States Army, for the past nine years. During the year 1873 he paid the troops at Fort Randall, Dakota, and while I exercised command at that post. During the years 1874 and 1875, while I held the position of inspector of the Military Department of Dakota, I inspected his official accounts. Since 1876 I have not met him, as our stations have been widely apart. My knowledge of Major Candee's official transactions has been quite intimate, and I believe him to be a gentleman of upright character and strict integrity. His clerk and brother, Lewis Candee, I also know well, he having been present and given assistance at the numerous inspections which I made of Major Candee's accounts. He is honest, diligent and faithful in the extreme.

E. S. OTIS,
Colonel Twentieth Infantry, Commanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER JONES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 130) for the relief of Paulina Jones, widow of Alexander Jones, deceased, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Infantry; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to place the name of Alexander Jones upon the rolls of Company E, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry, to date September 1, 1863.

Mr. HAMPTON. I know the hour has expired for taking action, but I hope the bill will be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will consider the bill as pending if no objection be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. VOORHEES, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] on the 12th of January, relative to the arrears of pensions act.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not feel well enough to stay here very long to-day, and I should be very much obliged to the Senate if it would agree to proceed to the consideration of the executive business for a short time. I submit that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and fifty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXPENSES OF AN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the expenses incurred by the Committee on Military Affairs in the case of Paymaster Rochester be paid out of the appropriation for special and select committees.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 12th of December, 1881, respecting the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, I transmit herewith a further report by the Secretary of State, accompanied by copies of papers on the subject.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 17, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 31st of January last, calling for the correspondence touching the relations of the United States with Guatemala and Mexico, and their relations with each other, I transmit a report of the Secretary of State, which is accompanied by a copy of the papers called for by the resolution.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 17, 1882.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and twenty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 17, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a correction of the Journal. I ask the Clerk to read that part of the Journal which states my motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COLERICK] was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report that portion of the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KING moved that the House adjourn; which motion was disagreed to.
Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment submitted by Mr. COLERICK was disagreed to; pending which,
Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to lay the said motion on the table.
Mr. SPRINGER demanded the yeas and nays; and one-fifth of the members present voting in favor thereof, the same were ordered.
The Clerk thereupon proceeded to call the name of Mr. AIKEN.
Mr. SPRINGER asked that the amendment submitted by Mr. COLERICK be read.
The SPEAKER held that the roll-call having been commenced, it was not in order to interrupt it to have said amendment read, except by unanimous consent; and objection being made, the Speaker directed the roll-call to proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I do not understand that statement to be in accordance with the fact. I never assumed or claimed the right to demand the reading of any proposition after the roll-call had begun. What I claimed was that the proposition should be read when it was made, and that when I moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected I had the right then to have the amendment read and the question stated so that the House could understand the effect of the motion.

Mr. CALKINS. We cannot hear the gentleman from Illinois distinctly. We would like to know in what particular he wants the Journal corrected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want the Journal corrected so as to show that I demanded the reading of the amendment upon which I had moved to reconsider the vote by which it was rejected. I never assumed that I had the right to have the proposition read after the roll-call had begun. That was just the point on which I differed with the Speaker last evening, he insisting that the roll-call had been ordered, and I insisting that I had demanded the reading of this proposition when I submitted the motion to reconsider, and that I had then the right to have the proposition read and stated to the House in order that members might know upon what they were voting. The Journal in that respect is not in accordance with the fact as I understand it.

Mr. CALKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether it is desirable, on his part, to get into a tangle this morning about this matter? In the midst of the confusion yesterday evening it was almost impossible to hear what was said by gentlemen upon the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there was some confusion at the time the gentleman rose, and it did not hear any demand for the reading of the paper, but witnessed the gentleman apparently addressing members who were about him. If at the time and before the roll was called the gentleman made any demand to have the paper read, the Chair did not hear it. The gentleman may be right in his statement, and he evidently is according to his own understanding of the matter. What he has said this morning will go into the RECORD containing the proceedings of this day. The Journal, however, is in accordance with the facts as they were understood by the Chair at the time.

Mr. SPRINGER. What I wish understood is that I never presumed I had the right to have the paper read after the call of the roll had begun.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman's statement covers that point, and I suggest the matter be allowed to drop.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the Journal shows that I insisted on the reading of a paper as a right after the roll-call had begun.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD shows that fact also, but the point the gentleman desires to make, as the Chair apprehends, is that he made the demand for the reading of the paper before the call of the roll was begun.

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the demand for the reading of the proposition when I made the motion to reconsider and before the roll was called.

The SPEAKER. The Journal as read states only the understanding of the Chair at the time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a right to move to correct the Journal.

Mr. ROBESON. By what?

Mr. CALKINS. Do not do that.

Mr. SPRINGER. The remarks I made are in the RECORD; but they are not in the Journal. The Journal is evidence of the official record of the House. That Journal shows I asked to have a paper read, and made the point of order that it should be read when everybody knew I had no right to have it read, and that it was ridiculous for me to insist on having it read after the roll-call had begun.

Mr. CALKINS. Your statement goes into the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but it does not go into the Journal, which is the official record of our proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD of yesterday shows the gentleman insisted on having the paper read after the first name on the roll was called, but the Chair wishes to state in all fairness to the gentleman from Illinois that he did claim that he made the demand for the reading before the call of the roll had begun, although the Chair did not hear him. The Journal as now made up is in accordance with the notes taken by the reporters, who had the same opportunity to hear what was said as the Chair had.

Mr. SPRINGER. But this does not go into the Journal.

Mr. CALKINS. No, but it goes into the RECORD of this day's proceedings.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will direct the Clerk to make a note upon the Journal, as read this morning, at the bottom of the page, so what I have said shall accompany these proceedings as stated in that Journal, then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite willing that shall be done.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 977) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy, and that it be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MARTIN. Who objects?

Mr. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. HAWK. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, what gentleman objects to this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio at this time; and the gentleman from Illinois now demands the regular order.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is further proceedings on the consideration of the apportionment bill, the previous question operating upon the bill and pending amendments. At the adjournment of the House on yesterday a vote was being taken on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH,] to lay upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] which was to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COLERICK] was lost. The yeas and nays had been ordered, the roll was called; and the point of order having been made that no quorum had voted, at that point all further proceedings on the bill ceased and the House adjourned. The Chair now holds that the yeas and nays having been ordered upon this motion, and no quorum appearing, the roll must again be called, and the question will now be taken on the motion.

Mr. ROBESON. It is possible, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman who made the point of order of no quorum last night will withdraw it this morning, as he only desired to get an adjournment. If so, we can get on without this additional vote, and save time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether the gentleman desires to withdraw the point of order or not. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the roll will be called.

Mr. ROBESON. Of course, unless the gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KENNA. My understanding was that the roll was called through twice on yesterday. Now my question is, can any member who failed to respond to his name on either of those calls vote upon this question at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the roll was called twice upon this proposition. There was, under the rule of the House, a second call of the names of those who failed to respond upon the first call, which is the regular course of proceedings under the rules on a roll-call.

Mr. KENNA. But under the rule is it not prohibited, after the second call of the roll, to allow a member to have his name recorded? I ask the question merely for the purpose of having some settled rule upon this point. I understand that under the rules of the House after the roll has been called through the second time it is not in order even to submit a request for unanimous consent to record a name.

The SPEAKER. That does not apply, however, in this case.

Mr. KENNA. But if the roll has been called through the second time, is it now in order on the same proposition to call the names of those who failed to respond? I do not wish to retard the business of the House, but I simply ask this question in order that a correct ruling may be established upon a matter of so much importance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again repeat to the gentleman from West Virginia that the point he makes is not presented at present for the consideration of the House. This call of the roll must begin de novo, as if no previous roll-call had been taken on the subject, the previous roll-call having been vacated by the adjournment of the House. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 116, not voting 46; as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

After the second roll-call, the following pairs were announced:

Mr. GODSHALK with Mr. BENJAMIN WOOD.

Mr. CAMP with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. FISHER.
Mr. HUTCHINS with Mr. BELFORD.
Mr. JORGENSEN with Mr. DIBBLE.
Mr. HERNDON with Mr. KETCHAM.
Mr. MCLANE with Mr. PAGE.
Mr. HAZELTON with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.
Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. MONEY, on this vote.
Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. HUBBELL, on all votes on the apportionment bill; and with Mr. CANNON, on all political questions until next Tuesday, except that either can vote to make a quorum.
Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, on this vote.
Mr. WEST. I desire to vote. I did not hear my name called on the second roll-call.
The SPEAKER. The Chair has held that a gentleman was not entitled to have his vote recorded after the second roll-call, unless he was able to state he was present and giving attention at the time his name was called and did not hear it. Was the gentleman listening to hear his name called?
Mr. WEST. I was, and did not hear it.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman's statement will be accepted.
Mr. WEST's name was then again called and he voted "ay."
Mr. HUTCHINS. I am announced as paired with Mr. BELFORD. I voted. I am paired with Mr. BELFORD on all questions except the apportionment bill.
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.
There being no objection, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.
The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report, as the next proposition in order to be voted upon, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COLERICK.]
The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 316 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows: Alabama, 8; Arkansas, 5; California, 6; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 10; Illinois, 20; Indiana, 13; Iowa, 10; Kansas, 6; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 6; Maine, 4; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 11; Michigan, 11; Minnesota, 5; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 14; Nebraska, 3; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 7; New York, 33; North Carolina, 9; Ohio, 20; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 27; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 6; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 10; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 10; West Virginia, 4; Wisconsin, 8.

SEC. 2. That whenever a new State is admitted to the Union the Representative or Representatives assigned to it shall be added to the number.

SEC. 3. That in each State entitled under this apportionment the number to which such State may be entitled in the Forty-eighth and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants, and equal in number to the Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative: Provided, That unless the Legislature of such State shall otherwise provide before the election of such Representatives shall take place as provided by law, where no change shall be hereby made in the representation of a State, the Representatives thereof to the Forty-eighth Congress shall be elected therein as now provided by law. If the number as hereby provided for shall be larger than it was before this change, then the additional Representative or Representatives allowed to said State under this apportionment may be elected by the State at large, and the other Representatives to which the State is entitled by the districts as now prescribed by law in said State; and if the number hereby provided for shall in any State be less than it was before the change hereby made, then the whole number to such State hereby provided for shall be elected at large, unless the Legislature of said State should otherwise provide before the time fixed by law for the next election of Representatives therein. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BRAGG. The House on yesterday having fixed the number of Representatives at 325, and the motion to reconsider that vote having been laid upon the table, I wish to inquire what kind of a vote will it require now to fix the number at 316, as proposed by this substitute?
The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that on yesterday the House proceeded to vote upon amendments to the original bill by sections. This, being a substitute for the whole bill, was withheld, although offered earlier than some of the amendments. The Chair understands that when substitutes are pending it is the right of members seeking to amend the original text to have the House vote upon their amendments first; but a substitute is not necessarily thereby cut off, and it may be voted on after the text is amended, if it should be amended. If this were a proposition to change section 1 of the bill alone, the Chair would hold, as it held on yesterday, that it was not in order; but as it covers the entire bill, and is a substitute for the entire bill, the Chair holds it is in order.
Mr. COX, of New York. As this side of the House has had no vote on a number, I call for the yeas and nays upon this substitute.
Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I desire to say that on the last vote I voted inadvertently. I am paired, and desire to withdraw my vote.
The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman's vote may be withdrawn. It does not affect the result.
There was no objection.
Mr. COX, of New York. In voting on this substitute the House votes on the number 316, by the old method.
Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that I offered an amendment proposing the number 326 as the proper number of which the House should be constituted. The point of order which I make is this: that we are not now acting under Rule XIX. That rule has been abrogated by a special order of the House in reference to the method of procedure with this bill. If we were proceeding, sir, under Rule XIX, then the amendment which I offered would properly have come in as an amendment to the proposition of the gentlemen on the other side who propose 325 as the number; but the House chose to do away with that rule which would have covered the procedure by abrogating it as regards this bill. It will be seen by reference to that rule the House would have had an opportunity of voting on every number which might be indicated as the proper number of which the House should be composed, and we would have had a vote on the original proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to fix it at 307; we would have had a vote on the proposition to fix it at 319; and we would have had votes on the propositions fixing the number at 325 and 326. But that rule, I say, is done away with by the special order of the House. Under that rule an amendment to an amendment could have been offered, and thus the sense of the House on what was the proper number could have been obtained; but the House chose to do away with that rule and to adopt another and a different rule with reference to the method of procedure in dealing with this bill.
Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman is not entitled to debate.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has the right to make his point of order. But as the House is now operating under the previous question, the gentleman is not entitled to debate.
Mr. HOOKER. I am not debating.
The SPEAKER. The Chair must restrict the gentleman to stating his point of order.
Mr. HOOKER. I am merely stating the point of order. I do not wish to do more than state it.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman must state his point of order.
Mr. HOOKER. I am stating it, and doing so in as few words as possible. I rise with great reluctance to address the Speaker on this subject, but I think it my duty to do so, for I want the sense of the House on every proposition that has been submitted. I will read the rule under which we are now operating.
The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot, under the rules, allow the gentleman to proceed to debate his proposition, and reading the rule is in the nature of debate. The Chair will indulge the gentleman to state his point of order so that it may be understood not only by the Chair but by the House.
Mr. HOOKER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the new rule under which we are now operating.
The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate.
Mr. HOOKER. The Chair cannot rule upon a point of order unless he understands the rule under which that point is made. And I want to give the Speaker my views of what that rule means.
The SPEAKER. The Chair must enforce the rule.
Mr. HOOKER. The new rule says——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi, like all other gentlemen, must conform to the rules of the House.
Mr. HOOKER. Does the Chair hold that when I am making a point of order I cannot read a rule which the House has adopted?
The SPEAKER. The Chair does so hold, as that is in the nature of debate.
Mr. HOOKER. My point of order is this, and I have been endeavoring to state it: that under the new rule which is operating upon the House in the consideration of this bill a vote is provided for on every amendment in the order in which they are presented to the several sections of the bill. I hold, therefore, that under that specific rule, which abrogates Rule XIX, it is the right of the House to vote upon the various propositions seriatim, beginning with the first offered in point of order to the first section of the bill, and so on through the bill. My point of order is that as we are operating under this specific rule we have a right to vote on each amendment offered before proceeding to consider the several substitutes, and therefore we have a right to vote on the proposition which I have submitted.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he understands the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER,] and the Chair also understands the gentleman to state the rule correctly. But the Chair held on yesterday, and now holds, that when the House has adopted one of the amendments which have been offered to a section, all the other amendments to that same section or portion of the section are dropped; for the House will not do the foolish thing of deciding, for instance, to adopt a particular number and then proceeding to vote upon another number.
Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say that the ruling of the Speaker would be absolutely correct if we were operating under the regular rule of the House, Rule XIX; but as we are operating under a special rule applicable to this bill, I think the Speaker is wrong.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the special rule is entitled to receive a reasonable construction. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it not now in order to vote on a proposition which proposes the number 316 as the number of members for this House?

Mr. HOOKER. Has the Chair ruled on my point of order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has already risen to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOOKER. I thought the gentleman was speaking on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair distinctly stated that the point of order was overruled.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to make this parliamentary inquiry: the House having adopted 325 as the number of members of this House for the next Congress, and the vote adopting that number having been reconsidered and tabled, and it having been agreed by unanimous consent that the voting should begin and proceed until some number was agreed to, now, that question having been disposed of, is it in order to vote upon the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COLERICK,] which, if adopted, would change the number of Representatives of this House and fix it at 316?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point as made by the gentleman. The Chair has just ruled, upon an inquiry made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] that this proposition being a substitute for the entire bill, it is in order, notwithstanding the House has voted on separate amendments to perfect the text of the original bill. Under the practice the consideration of all substitutes must be postponed until amendments to the various sections of the original bill have been disposed of. As this is a substitute for the whole bill it is in order. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] calls for the yeas and nays on this substitute.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 35 in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. That is not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYNE. Let the count be again taken, and we will give the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Tellers have been called on ordering the yeas and nays, and if insisted upon the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. COLERICK, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. PRESCOTT, will act as tellers.

Mr. HASKELL. Let the call for tellers be withdrawn, and we will give them the yeas and nays.

Mr. COX, of New York. If that is so, I will withdraw the call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The call for tellers having been withdrawn, the Chair will again submit to the House the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 154, not voting 44; as follows:

So the substitute of Mr. COLERICK was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. MONEY.

Mr. WASHBURN with Mr. ROSS.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute of Mr. COLERICK was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next substitute in order is that submitted by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. JOYCE.]

Mr. JOYCE. The House having decided by a large majority to fix the number of members of this House at 325, I desire to withdraw my substitute.

Mr. HOOKER. Let the amendment be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to withdraw the substitute——

Mr. HOOKER. Not if there is objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the withdrawal?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes; I object, and I call for the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 365 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows: Alabama, 9; Arkansas, 6; California, 6; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 5; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 11; Illinois, 23; Indiana, 15; Iowa, 12; Kansas, 7; Kentucky, 12; Louisiana, 7; Maine, 5; Maryland, 7; Massachusetts, 13; Michigan, 12; Minnesota, 6; Mississippi, 8; Missouri, 16; Nebraska, 3; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 3; New Jersey, 8; New York, 38; North Carolina, 10; Ohio, 24; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 32; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 7; Tennessee, 11; Texas, 12; Vermont, 3; Virginia, 11; West Virginia, 5; Wisconsin, 10.

"SEC. 2. That whenever a new State is admitted to the Union the Representative or Representatives assigned to it shall be in addition to the number 365.

"SEC. 3. That in each State entitled under this apportionment the number to which such State may be entitled in the Forty-eighth and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants, and equal in number to the Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative: Provided, That unless the Legislature of said State shall otherwise provide before the election of such Representatives shall take place as provided by law, where no change shall be hereby made in the representation of a State, the Representatives thereof to the Forty-eighth Congress shall be elected therein as now provided by law. If the number as hereby provided for shall be larger than it was before this change, then the additional Representative or Representatives allowed to said State under this apportionment may be elected by the State at large, and the other Representatives to which the State is entitled by the districts as now prescribed by law in said State; and if the number hereby provided for shall in any State be less than it was before the change hereby made, then the whole number to such State hereby provided for shall be elected at large, unless the Legislatures of said States should otherwise provide before the time fixed by law for the next election of Representatives therein. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Vermont desires to withdraw it, I think he has the right to do so, under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the general rule gives the right to withdraw an amendment before a decision or amendment, but subject to the exception that the withdrawal cannot be made without unanimous consent after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That does not appear in our present rules, however.

The SPEAKER. It does not specifically appear in the new rules; but, as the Chair understands, the present rule relating to this question is the same as the old rule, under which the uniform decision was that after the previous question applying to a pending amendment had been ordered it was too late, except by unanimous consent, to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MURCH. I object to the withdrawal.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute of Mr. JOYCE, it was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute of Mr. JOYCE was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next substitute in order is that offered by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. ROBESON. I am authorized by the gentleman from California, who is necessarily absent, to ask to withdraw his substitute.

Mr. HOOKER. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the withdrawal?

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of 319 members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows: Alabama, 8; Arkansas, 5; California, 6; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 10; Illinois, 20; Indiana, 13; Iowa, 10; Kansas, 6; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 6; Maine, 4; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 12; Michigan, 11; Minnesota, 5; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 14; Nebraska, 3; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 7; New York, 33; North Carolina, 9; Ohio, 21; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 28; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 6; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 10; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 10; West Virginia, 4; Wisconsin, 8.

"SEC. 2. That whenever a new State is admitted to the Union the Representative or Representatives assigned to it shall be added to the number.

"SEC. 3. That in each State entitled under this apportionment the number to which such State may be entitled in the Forty-eighth and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants, and equal in number to the Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative."

Mr. ROBESON. If nobody objects, I will withdraw the substitute.

Mr. HOOKER. I object.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute of Mr. PAGE, there were—ayes 38, noes 90.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I ask that the substitute be read.

Objection was made.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I hope there will be no objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have the substitute again read.

Mr. RYAN. Certainly, the gentleman is entitled to information of that character.

The objection was not insisted upon, and the substitute was again read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage without amendment of the bill (H. R. No. 4240) supplementary to the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the payment of the final expenses of the tenth census."

It further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association, with an amendment, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of the following bills, in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 130) for the relief of Paulina Jones, widow of Alexander Jones, deceased, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Infantry;

A bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 480) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee; and

A bill (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements on Galveston Harbor, State of Texas.

APPORTIONMENT.

The question recurs on agreeing to the substitute of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 99, nays 150, not voting 43; as follows:

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMPSON;] which will be next voted on.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to fix the number of members of House of Representatives, the manner of their apportionment among the States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That in the Forty-eighth and each subsequent Congress the House of Representatives of the United States of America shall consist of 319 members.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior, upon the enumeration of the population made in 1880 and upon each subsequent enumeration of the population as provided for by the Constitution, shall, as soon as the whole number of the population of the United States is ascertained, apportion said 319 members among the several States, and immediately notify the executive of each of said States of the number of members of said House to which each State may be respectively entitled under said apportionment.

SEC. 3. Said Secretary shall make said apportionment in the following way:

First. He shall divide the total population of the United States by the whole number of Representatives and the quotient obtained shall be the ratio of representation.

Second. He shall deduct from said 319 as many members as there are States whose population upon the enumeration made is less than the ratio of representation, and assign one to each of said States respectively.

Third. After making said deduction he shall apply the ratio to the population of the several States to which no Representatives have been assigned and the quotient obtained shall be the number of Representatives to which said States are entitled on even division.

Fourth. If the number produced by even division and those assigned to the States whose population is less than the ratio does not amount when added together to the whole number of 319, then he shall assign to the State having the largest fraction on even division one of said members yet unassigned, and if two are left unassigned, then one to the next largest, and so on until all are assigned, giving said signed members to those States having the largest fractions.

SEC. 4. Whenever a new State is admitted into the Union, the member or members assigned said new State shall be in addition to the 319 herein provided for until the next apportionment under this bill, when the number shall again be as herein fixed.

SEC. 5. That all members of Congress hereafter elected by any State shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants, no district electing more than one member, and no voting precinct is to be divided in laying off said districts, and no city or county, if the districts can otherwise be practically made.

SEC. 7. Where the representation of any State is increased, such State may elect the increased number of members from the State at large to the first Congress succeeding said new apportionment. When the representation of any State is diminished, the executive of said State—unless the Legislature thereof has otherwise provided in anticipation of such diminution, and until it does provide otherwise by proclamation—may lay off said State into the requisite number of districts in the manner heretofore provided in this act, and the Representatives of said States shall be elected by the districts thus laid off in time, manner, and form as now provided by law.

SEC. 8. That notice of the apportionment by the Secretary of the Interior to the several executives of the States shall not be delayed later than August 1 of the year in which the enumeration is made, and he shall also transmit to Congress immediately on its assembling a report of the said apportionment.

SEC. 9. The enumeration of population and taking of the census shall hereafter be had and taken in April, instead of June, as provided in section 19 of the act of March 3, 1879, which section is modified to this extent.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask by unanimous consent to modify the amendment so as to make it conform to the action already had by the House, so that it shall provide for 325 instead of 319 members.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It is an entirely new plan.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is a modification.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I object.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Do I understand that there is any objection to the modification?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that two gentlemen have objected.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Unless I am allowed to modify the bill so as to conform to the action of the House, I do not desire to press it for the consideration of the House. It is merely a permanent law based upon exactly the same plan that has been heretofore followed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask to withdraw the substitute?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If there is objection to the modification of it, I do desire to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by two gentlemen to the modification. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the substitute?

Mr. HOOKER. I object to the withdrawal.

The SPEAKER. The question will then be taken on the adoption of the substitute which has been read.

The substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Speaker, three States have applied to me, and informed me that their Legislatures have already provided for the changes which will be made——

Mr. COX, of New York. I object to debate.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am not debating, I am merely stating a fact; that the Legislatures of three States have already made provision for the changes that will be made in the representation of their States. Hence, the word "should," in the twenty-third line of the third section of the bill, should be stricken out, and the words "have provided or shall" substituted, so that it will read "unless the Legislatures of said States have provided, or shall otherwise provide," &c.

The SPEAKER. Is their objection to the modification?

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. COLERICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit——

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the engrossment and third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The engrossed bill was then read.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered on the final passage of the bill; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLERICK. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Census, with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The question will now be taken on the passage of the bill on which the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Indiana rose and made his motion to recommit before the previous question had been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana did not have the floor for that purpose. Pending the demand for the previous question he could not be recognized. The question is whether the gentleman's motion is now in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, which informed the House of the approval of the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. No. 3870) to change the name of the National Mechanics' Banking Association of New York to that of Wall Street National Bank.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) fixing the time when the pay of certain clerks of committees of the House shall begin.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I desire to move to reconsider the vote of the House by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that has been already done. The gentleman from Indiana now desires to submit a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. CALKINS. Let it be reported subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That this bill be recommitted, with instructions to report the same back at the earliest time practicable, with a provision that in States where the number of Representatives in Congress is reduced below the number allowed such State in the Forty-seventh Congress, it shall be lawful for the governor of such State, after the State shall have been redistricted under this act, by proclamation to provide for a special election for such Representatives, to be had upon such notice and in the same manner as is now provided by law for the election of members of the most numerous branch of the Legislature.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALKINS. I make the point of order that this same proposition has been substantially voted upon by the House in one or more of the amendments which have been submitted and rejected, and consequently that it is not now in order to present the same proposition. The House has decided adversely upon this proposition when submitted in another form.

Mr. CONVERSE. I think the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken, as he will find upon examination that this presents a different subject. The bill has now been read a third time, and this motion to recommit not having been made before, is now in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. This proposition embodies a different feature from the amendment to which the gentleman from Indiana refers. It is different from the other proposition in this: that applied to all the States where a change was made, while this refers only to those States where a reduction of Representatives is made under this bill. It is entirely different.

Mr. CALKINS. It is substantially the same, however.

Mr. SPRINGER. By no means. The other applied to all the States. This applies only to the States where there is a reduction, and the difference is between every State which has an increase under the bill, and the three States which are reduced.

Mr. RANDALL. Has there been at any time since the bill has been under consideration a motion to recommit with instructions?

Mr. COX. There has not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether or not his proposition is the same, or substantially the same, as the one which was voted upon by the House and rejected?

Mr. COLERICK. It is not.

Mr. CALKINS. If it is not, of course the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. COLERICK. The other proposition involved all the States that were affected in any manner by the bill. This proposition only affects the States where there is a decrease of their representation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order to be withdrawn.

Mr. CALKINS. On the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, that it is a different proposition from the other, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to recommit the bill with instructions, as read.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to lay that motion to recommit on the table.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. But if the motion to lay the motion to recommit on the table should carry, would it not carry with it the bill itself?

Mr. SPRINGER. It would.

Mr. HASKELL. I withdraw the motion, then.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The House divided; and there were ayes 69, noes 103.

Mr. COLERICK. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 142, not voting 47; as follows:

Darrell,	Harris, Benj. W.	Ross,

So the motion to recommit with instructions was not agreed to.

After the second roll-call, the following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. DIBBLE.

Mr. ATKINS with Mr. CALKINS.

Mr. LEEDOM with Mr. DAWES.

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

There being no objection, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] who objected to the change of two words in the bill now withdraws his objection, as I understand. I ask unanimous consent that the change be made.

Mr. BRAGG. I understand that the change only applies to one or two cases where legislatures have already made the provision referred to.

Mr. HOOKER. What is the change?

Mr. PRESCOTT. It is to insert the words "have provided or shall" instead of the word "should;" so that it will read "unless the Legislatures of said States shall have provided or shall otherwise provide," &c.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to making this verbal amendment?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ATHERTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 14 members voting therefor.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. NEAL. Last evening was set apart by order of the House for the consideration of the municipal code of the District of Columbia. An evening session was not held. Next Tuesday is also set apart for the same purpose, but there is to be a reception on that evening to the distinguished philanthropist W. W. Corcoran. I ask unanimous consent that Monday evening be set apart for the consideration of that bill instead of Tuesday.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOWMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with; and I announce in this connection that I will move, if that motion prevail, that we go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the pressing deficiency bill.

The question being taken on Mr. HISCOCK's motion—there were, ayes 113, noes 35.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only nine members voting therefor.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the morning hour was dispensed with.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question being taken on Mr. COX's motion, there were—ayes 102, noes 66.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays. I desire to announce there are five appropriation bills now awaiting action.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 44; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to state that if we sit on Saturday I propose to take up an appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 119, not voting 67; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn over was not agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. HOUSE with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, on this vote.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say that at this late hour of the day I will not antagonize that motion.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 86, noes 13.

No further count being called for, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I make the point of order that after the House has determined to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar it is too late to make a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. SPARKS; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, noes 60.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. SPARKS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being but 9 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The House has determined to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. HORR in the chair.

THOMAS LITTLE.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1691) to authorize the restoration of Thomas Little to the rank of captain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect Thomas Little; and the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Thomas Little, late a captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain held by him in November, 1877, in any vacancy now or hereafter existing or hereafter occurring: Provided, That his pay shall commence only from the date of his reappointment under this act.

Mr. SPARKS. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1691) for the relief of Thomas Little, respectfully report that, concurring in the views expressed in the report of this committee made at the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress on a bill identical with the one now under consideration, they adopt said report and recommend the passage of said bill H. R. No. 1691.

Said report is as follows:

"[Forty-sixth Congress, second session.—House Report No. 450.]

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2513) for the relief of Thomas Little, report:

"That Thomas Little enlisted as a private in the United States Army and was assigned to the Fourth Artillery September 29, 1856; promoted corporal September 1, 1857; sergeant, June 1, 1859; and first sergeant, March 1, 1860; re-enlisted August 31, 1861, and discharged as first sergeant October 13, 1861; re-enlisted November 8, 1861, and appointed same date; discharged July 2, 1862, by reason of appointment as second lieutenant Thirteenth Infantry, May 31, 1862; appointed first lieutenant August 15, 1862; appointed captain November 1, 1867; brevetted captain July 4, 1863, for gallant and meritorious services at the siege of Vicksburgh, Mississippi, and major November 25, 1863, for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Missionary Ridge, Tennessee. Served in the Florida Indian war in 1856 and 1857. Participated in the following battles, namely, Chickasaw Bayou, December 29, 1862; Arkansas Post, January 11, 1863; Walnut Hills, May 19, 1863; siege of Vicksburgh, 1863; Colliersville, Tennessee, October 11, 1863; Missionary Ridge, November 24 and 25, 1863; in two engagements with Sioux Indians in Dakota in 1867 and 1868, and in pursuit of Comanches and Kiowas in Texas and Indian Territory; in two engagements with Kiowas in 1872; in battle of the Wichita agency, August 11, 1874. Wounded twice—once slightly in Florida and once severely in action before Vicksburgh. Dismissed from service December 20, 1877.

"Before a court-martial convened at Fort Clark, Texas, October 31, 1877, the said Thomas Little was tried and dismissed the service on the charge, mainly, that in an examination before a justice of the peace, September 5, 1877, at Brackettville, which was a small frontier town adjoining Fort Clark, of a prostitute accused by said Little of having stolen from him about forty-five dollars in money, it appeared from the statement of said Little before the justice that this woman, after dark, between the hours of seven and eleven at night, took or seized hold of his arm and walked with him in the street for about twenty-five yards; that he went to her house and remained there about one hour; that while at her house he missed his pocket-book, which contained $46, including one silver dollar, and he never saw it afterward.

"This occurrence, it appears, was after dark, and witnessed by no reliable witness excepting one, who stated, in substance, that he and Little having taken a lunch in a saloon, walked out, when the woman referred to walked up to Little and said: "I wish to see you a moment;" that Little walked off a few steps with her; that he saw her snatch his arm a second, not more, and saw them walk across the street. The statement of Little before the justice as to what occurred between him and the woman, not legitimately connected with the charge of theft, appears to have been drawn out by the attorney of the woman.

"The justice, in answer to the question, 'Did not Mr. Clamp, when acting as counsel for the defense, press the accused with questions purposely made obscene and on matters not necessarily relevant to the case, and was not this the cause of irritation on Captain Little's part?' says: 'Yes, sir; I came very near fining him for contempt of court for pressing such obscene questions.'

"It would seem from the proceedings of the court-martial that the gist of the charge against Captain Little was that, in prosecuting the woman for theft, he had voluntarily published his own dishonor, not from the fact that he had been guilty of improper conduct. Whatever of publicity may have been given to the matter does not seem to have been voluntarily given by Captain Little, but to have been drawn out by inquisitive and insolent counsel, and designedly made more public by preferring the charges, based upon the testimony as taken down before the justice, surreptitiously obtained.

"During the entire service of Thomas Little in the United States Army for upward of twenty-one years, as a private, as sergeant-major, as first and second lieutenant, as captain and brevet major, he appears to have uniformly borne the character of a good soldier and an efficient officer, of being scrupulous in the discharge of duty, as marked for personal bravery and coolness in danger, and distinguished for gallantry and daring in battle. He was twice wounded and twice brevetted, once as captain and once as major, for gallant and meritorious conduct in battle. Considering the long and valuable services rendered by Thomas Little to the United States, his adopted country, and his uniformly good character as a soldier and a citizen, as well as the evidence upon which he was tried, it is believed that, for the peccadillo charged, his dismissal from the service was unwarranted, and that a generous and just Government should restore him to the rank which he held in the Army at the date of his dismissal therefrom.

"Therefore your committee report back bill H. R. 2513, and recommend its passage."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. McCOOK. I object. I do not know that I care to make any remarks.

Mr. PEELLE. I move as a substitute for the bill that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect Thomas Little; and the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Thomas Little, late a captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry Regiment, to a captaincy in the Army in any vacancy hereafter occurring in the cavalry arm of the service: Provided, That his pay and rank shall commence only from the date of his reappointment under this act.

Mr. UPSON. I am willing to accept that amendment, and hope there will be no opposition to it.

Mr. McCOOK. If the Committee of the Whole is absolutely ready to vote upon this question, I certainly shall not consume time by making any remarks. [Cries of "Go on!"] I would like to hear this bill discussed for a little while, not for three or four hours, but I think the committee can come to some determination in a very few minutes. The substitute of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PEELLE] is unquestionably an improvement upon the bill if it is to become a law. But so far as I am personally concerned, I am quite as much opposed to the substitute as to the original bill. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] desires to speak upon this subject——

Mr. UPSON. Not unless you make it necessary.

Mr. SPARKS. If this bill is objected to, must not the objection be reported to the House?

Mr. McCOOK. I do not object in order to go to the House, but to defeat the bill. This man Little was dismissed the service in 1877 by sentence of court-martial.

Last Friday this House voted to restore Captain Kirby to the Army, and logically I suppose we should now vote to restore Captain Little. But I want this Friday, as I did last Friday, to raise my voice and cast my vote against the policy the House then pursued.

Very briefly this is the case: Captain Little was a soldier of unquestioned gallantry; I do not dispute that. He was a captain of the Tenth United States Cavalry, stationed in Texas, near Fort Clark. In September or October, 1877, he was seen on the street of a town or village in the vicinity of the fort dressed in his uniform and in company with a public prostitute. He accompanied her to her residence and remained there for some time. I am quoting briefly from the evidence, for I examined it all.

Subsequently he alleged that $45 had been stolen from him by this woman, and the next day, in company with another man, he went before a justice of the peace and made affidavit to that effect. The charge against Captain Little is conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. To that charge were two separate and distinct specifications; one specifying what I have already referred to, that he was seen on the street with a public prostitute; and the second, going into the matter in detail and incorporating in the specification the testimony which he himself gave before the justice of the peace when he caused the arrest of this woman, by the name of Molly Magee or Molly Magnire. At all events the county attorney concluded that the evidence given was not sufficient to hold the woman for the offense.

On this charge and these specifications the military court found Captain Little guilty, and sentenced him to be dismissed the Army. When the case came up here for review it went to the Judge-Advocate-General, at that time General William McKee Dunn, of Indiana. In reviewing the case he says, in conclusion:

It is impossible in a case of this kind to view with indulgence the offenses charged and proved. The gross act of the accused, in walking arm in arm with a notorious prostitute on a public street, while so dressed in uniform as to be distinguishable as an officer of the Army, was greatly aggravated by his subsequent proceeding in voluntarily publishing the details of his disreputable conduct in open court, upon the hearing of a criminal complaint for theft, personally made by him against the woman. It does not even appear that the complaint thus made was a just one. The county attorney is shown to have dismissed it by the entry of a nolle prosequi on the ground that the testimony of the accused was insufficient; and whether the woman really stole the money as charged, or the same was lost by his own negligence, aggravated perhaps by his being under the influence of liquor, cannot be ascertained.

Even if the money were certainly stolen, the accused should at least have had sufficient respect for his military profession, if not for himself, to have refrained from scandalizing the Army and the public service by the exhibition he made. Conduct such as his, in one who has, as he says in his communication to the General of the Army, herewith returned, a "young and large family," was especially disgraceful; and in applying to the General to interest himself in his behalf he evinces a marked insensibility to the disgraceful character of his offenses. I cannot hesitate to recommend the confirmation of the sentence.

That is signed by W. M. Dunn, Judge-Advocate-General.

Upon that the President of the United States approved the finding of the court-martial, and Captain Little was dismissed from the Army of the United States.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me to ask what the sentence of the court-martial was?

Mr. McCOOK. That he be dismissed from the service of the United States.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Anything further?

Mr. McCOOK. I suppose it was in the ordinary form; I am not sure about that. It was a sentence of dismissal, at all events.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Is this a unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. McCOOK. That I cannot answer; I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I hope we shall ascertain that fact. Before we get out into the broad sea which this bill opens, we ought to know whether the committee report unanimously in favor of taking back into the Army such a man.

Mr. McCOOK. I know that I did not vote for the bill in committee, if I was there.

Mr. UPSON. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that after the reading of the report, by which it appears that this bill has been twice acted upon favorably by the Military Committee of this House, there would be no necessity to enter into a discussion in regard to its merits. The substance of the testimony is contained in the report; but as the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] has seen proper to open this discussion, I feel it incumbent upon me to state to the House the facts of the case, in justice, as I believe, to an honest, brave, and meritorious officer, a foreigner by birth, who has made this country his home by adoption, and can hold up before the country his record of twenty-one long years of service in the Army, without spot or blemish, in answer to the one act of indiscretion preferred against him.

In brief, what are the facts of this case? This officer, having been upon the frontier during a campaign of three or four months, came to Brackettville, a small frontier town near Fort Clark, in Texas, on the night when it is represented he fell in company with this woman of easy virtue. He went to a saloon with a friend and there took supper. There is no charge of drunkenness against him, though the evidence shows that he had taken a few glasses of beer. Between ten and eleven o'clock at night, a dark night, he left the saloon. Here let me say that the review of the finding of this court is unjust and unwarranted in representing this officer as walking upon the public streets with a common prostitute, as though in public in the broad light of day in defiance of decency, when in fact the occurrence took place about eleven o'clock at night, on a dark night, unseen except by one person. As Captain Little walked out of the saloon this woman spoke to him and caught him for a moment by the arm. He walked about twenty-five steps only with her across the street, in the darkness of the night, and went to her room.

Those are the facts. How were they disclosed? Captain Little, under the advice of his friends—no doubt indiscreetly—made on the following day an affidavit for the purpose of obtaining a search-warrant to recover the money which had been stolen from him. In that affidavit there is nothing disclosed in regard to this transaction at all. He simply makes affidavit that he had been robbed of some forty-five dollars in money; and he makes this statement for the purpose of obtaining a search-warrant, having no thought of an examination before the justice. What was the result? This woman obtained counsel, who upon examination drew out the facts upon which the charges against him were based. This disclosure was made through the efforts of the counsel defending the woman against the charge of theft, and not through the voluntary statement of Little.

Now you will find on examining the record of the court that Captain Little was not found guilty, or sentenced to be dismissed, on the ground of having committed any immoral act with this woman; no, but simply because he walked upon the public streets with a common prostitute. While it would be far from me, Mr. Chairman, to lower the high standard of morals which should prevail in the Army, I may ask, who can "cast the first stone?" This brave officer may in a moment of indiscretion have listened to the siren's voice; but, let me ask, how many willing ears have, not once only, but perhaps many times, yielded to her seductive whisperings.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman and members of this House, the charges against this officer are frivolous and trifling when weighed with his honored record in the service of his country. They are the offspring of prejudice against a volunteer officer. Although Thomas Little has not the power of wealth or the influence of high official position to back him in asking his restoration to the Army, yet there is not one of his comrades in arms, not one of the brave soldiers who served by his side, that does not speak of him in terms of the highest commendation, and he can point to his unblemished record as a soldier in vindication of his demands for justice. Twice wounded, twice brevetted for gallant and meritorious conduct—at the seige of Vicksburgh seriously wounded, passing through the entire war with credit and with honor—has he not, Mr. Chairman, a record demanding the respect of this body?

If the roll-call of heroes, if the roll-call of brave men who served in the late war was sounded to-day, Thomas Little would stand in the front rank, among the foremost of the bravest of the brave. Sir, during his long service, wherever danger showed itself he was one of the first to face and dare it. He served during the Florida war, throughout the late war, and against the Indians upon our frontiers. By merit and valor he rose from a private soldier in the ranks to a captain in the regular Army. Indeed, sir, if he has any unpardonable sin, if he has any fault, it would seem to be only in the fact that he sprung from the common people, and by his own unaided exertions made himself the brave, the gallant and meritorious soldier that he is. This no one dare gainsay. His record is before you. With that record, having no one except my humble self to speak in his defense, he presents himself before you, and asks you to examine, to scan it, spotless and unstained as it is, and to do him justice.

Why, Mr. Chairman, he has been a soldier from his boyhood. He came here a soldier from the English army in early manhood, and entered the United States Army as a private twenty-four or twenty-five years ago.

Now, let me say one word in explanation of the deep interest I take in this case. It is because I know this man and know something of his worth, and because I conscientiously believe that he has been grossly wronged. I know his dismissal from the Army has been the greatest stab, the deepest wound he has ever received. Although his body is overscarred with wounds received while defending the flag of his adopted country, yet this dismissal is the deepest wound of all inflicted upon that gallant and noble officer. Although driven from the Army penniless, without profession or calling, having dependent on him for their support an aged mother, a wife, and seven little children—a soldier by education, knowing nothing but the honor and duties of a soldier, yet since his dismissal from the Army he has exhibited as high a degree of moral bravery as he did physical bravery when he faced danger in the time of battle. He has been temperate and circumspect in his conduct, and has won the respect and confidence of the community in which he has lived; his character has been honest and upright as a citizen and a soldier. Although driven to hard labor, even to chopping wood, as I am told, in order to obtain support for his little children, while suffering from wounds and bitter wrongs, no act of dishonor or shame has marked his life since his dismissal from the Army. He appeals to you now as the only tribunal to which he can resort for justice, and in that appeal he holds up his record, spotless and unstained, both as a soldier and as a citizen in private life, to speak in his behalf.

The charges, so far as they are sustained by the facts, are too frivolous and groundless to warrant or justify the severe punishment which has been inflicted upon him, and, in my judgment, are the offspring of spite against this poor, ill-treated, and outraged officer who should be restored to the position from which he was unjustly dismissed.

I have accepted the substitute that there might be no objection to its passage, and I cannot believe there will be any hesitation on the part of this House to do this act of justice to Captain Little.

Mr. ROBESON. Let me ask the gentleman a question, and it is this: whether there was any complaint alleged against this officer before?

Mr. UPSON. None, sir. His character was without reproach.

Mr. ROBESON. But before this dismissal?

Mr. UPSON. None in the world, sir, that I know of until this charge.

Mr. PEELLE. Lest it be believed I am in favor of the restoration of Captain Little to the Army by reason of having offered the substitute, I desire simply to say that while I know nothing specially or personally against the merits of this case, but on the contrary am informed Captain Little was a brave soldier during the war, that he did his duty well, yet nevertheless I apprehend the duty of the American Congress goes beyond simple justice to a single individual, and that we are to consider the welfare and safety of this nation in the precedents which we make here from day to day. If we would have an army which shall be respected by our own people and by other nations of the world, if we would have an army in whose ranks it would be respectable to serve, we must refuse to restore men who have been dismissed by regular court-martial. Therefore, upon general principles, I am opposed to the restoration of an officer, except in an extreme case, who has been regularly dismissed from the Army by court-martial regularly and legally convened. I believe this class of legislation is an indirect attack on a judicial proceeding, and should be stopped.

Mr. McCOOK. I shall not consume the time of the committee further except in one particular. I understand the gentleman from Texas does not controvert any statement I made. I stand upon the record and now will ask to have read from the Clerk's desk the testimony given by Captain Little himself before the committing magistrate at Brackettville.

Mr. UPSON. I object.

Mr. McCOOK. On what account?

Mr. UPSON. I wish to make a statement in regard to that matter.

Mr. McCOOK. This is a sworn statement, which appears on the files as a portion of the records of the court-martial in that case.

Mr. UPSON. But it was never read to Captain Little——

Mr. HISCOCK. It can be read as part of the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not wish the statement to go to the committee unless the committee, and perhaps the gentleman from Texas, is satisfied with reference to it. But this I will say, that what I desire to have read is a part of the official record obtained from the Judge-Advocate-General's Office, being a part of the proceedings of the court-martial. That fact will not be controverted, I presume.

Mr. UPSON. The evidence shows that that statement was not read to Mr. Little. It was taken down by a justice, as any one who has experience in such matters knows, in a hasty, inconsiderate manner. It is but justice to this officer to make this statement in regard to it, so that it shall not go to the committee that this was a matter of which he was cognizant and had an opportunity of denying, but failed to do so. What I want to say is that the testimony in this particular case was never submitted to him.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not understand the gentleman from Texas to dispute that the testimony which I have here, and taken from the official records of the Adjutant-General's Office, was a portion of the proceedings of the court-martial, and is incorporated in the second specification of the charge. That I presume the gentleman will not deny.

Mr. UPSON. No, sir.

Mr. COBB. Is that paper signed by Mr. Little?

Mr. McCOOK. It is a transcript from the records of the court-martial, on file in the Adjutant-General's Office. I ask that this part of the record be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read. After reading some time,

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I object to the further reading of that paper in this House.

Mr. MOORE. I object to the reading of any such testimony in the Halls of Congress.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that this bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to that testimony which has been read going into the RECORD of this House. It is not appropriate or proper that it should do so, and I think it should be excluded.

Mr. McCOOK. If it be in order to make a motion, I will move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. A proper motion would be to move that the bill be reported to the House with an adverse recommendation, or with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. UPSON. And I move to amend that motion, that it be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be unanimous consent given that no portion of the record which has been read from the Clerk's desk shall be printed in the official RECORD of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope there will be no objection to its exclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question to the House. Is there objection to the proposition to exclude from the RECORD the paper which has just been read?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I now move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. UPSON. I have already moved to amend, that it be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

Mr. JOYCE. Would it be in order now to move to strike out the enacting clause?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It would not be in order, for the reason that if you strike out the enacting clause of the bill you would have nothing to report back to the House, and the committee would have no right to dispose of the bill in that way.

Mr. McCOOK. I think it would be in order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Not in committee.

Mr. BRAGG. Would it be in order to amend the bill?

Mr. JOYCE. I think that motion can be made; and, if in order, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That cannot be in order, for the reason I have stated.

Mr. BRAGG. In order that no injustice be done to any one, I will move to add a section providing that the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain the name of that woman, and that she be placed on the pension-roll. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. UPSON. I make the point of order upon that, that the motion is not in order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope the Chair will cause the rule to be read with reference to this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clause 7 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

The motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend; and if carried, shall be considered equivalent to its rejection.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have no doubt of that. But I submit the point of order is well taken, and my motion is in order. If this committee strikes out the enacting clause it destroys the bill and there is nothing to report back to the House. The only motion to kill the bill in Committee of the Whole is the motion to report it back with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table. No committee can so destroy its work that it shall have nothing to report back.

Mr. SPRINGER. This would be the report of the committee, that it recommended the enacting clause be stricken out, and if the House agreed, then the bill would be killed. It is the most effectual way of killing a bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. We can report back with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out; but it appears to me it is not the Committee of the Whole House which strikes it out.

Mr. JOYCE. In the first place, as to this question of order, I would say it has been the constant practice in the Committee of the Whole, ever since I have been in Congress, when it was desired to kill a bill, to make this motion. I have seen it done a great many times, and when a motion of this kind is carried to strike out the enacting clause of the bill then that is the report that is made by the committee to the House, that the enacting clause has been stricken out; and that is equivalent to the defeat of the bill.

Mr. SPARKS. All the Committee of the Whole House has to do is to amend and recommend. Now the carrying of the motion to strike out the enacting clause would be a recommendation, and when it comes into the House that would be the report. It would come before the House in that shape with a recommendation for the enacting clause to be stricken out, which effectually of course kills the bill. I do not see, however, any reason for putting it in that shape, because the bill can be reported back with an unfavorable recommendation or an adverse recommendation. Either of these reports would destroy the bill if that was the sense of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That would undoubtedly be the effect in either case.

Mr. McCOOK. I wish to read a paragraph from page 270 of the digest:

When the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or of the Whole House have stricken out the enacting words or clause, it is not necessary that the committee should at once rise and report that action to the House, but the bill may be laid aside to be reported as other bills.

Therefore it seems to me the motion to strike out is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Vermont is in order. Is the committee ready for the question?

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question being taken, the motion to strike out the enacting words was agreed to.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1612) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate William P. Chambliss, late a major of the Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, and place his name on the list of retired officers of the United States Army, with the rank to which he would have attained in service at the date of the passage of this act: Provided, however, That he shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance of any kind under the provisions of this act for the time intervening between the 1st day of November, 1867, the date of his resignation, and the date of the approval of this act.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with the following amendment:

After the word "rank," strike out the words "to which he would have attained in service at the date of the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of major."

Mr. HAWK. Let the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. STEELE said: The next two or three documents are merely corroborative of what has been read already. If there be no objection I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. The statements of Stanhope and Waters merely corroborate what has already been read.

Mr. SPARKS. It is desired that the report be read.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the Chairman will direct that the last page be not read. It is simply a reproduction of what is on the first and second pages.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made the reading of the report will be continued.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report. Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. HOLMAN said: Inasmuch as the remainder of this report does not bear materially on the question I suggest that the further reading be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and the further reading was dispensed with.

The report in full is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1612) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, late major in the Fourth United States Cavalry, brevet lieutenant-colonel, United States Army, having duly considered the same, amend the bill by striking out in the sixth, seventh, and eighth lines the words "to which he would have attained in service at the date of the passage of this act," and insert the words "of major," and recommend its passage as amended.

The facts upon which this recommendation is based are so fully set forth in the accompanying papers, that your committee ask to make them a part of their report.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 13, 1880.

Military history of William P. Chambliss, late of the United States Army, as shown by the files of this office:

Enrolled as second lieutenant Company E, First Tennessee Mounted Volunteers, May 22, 1846, and served with regiment in Texas and in the war with Mexico until muster-out of regiment in June, 1847. Re-entered service as Captain Company C, Third Tennessee Volunteers, October 7, 1847, and served in the war with Mexico until mustered out with company, July 24, 1848. Appointed first lieutenant Second United States Cavalry March 3, 1855; promoted captain April 6, 1861 (Fifth Cavalry, August 3, 1861,) and major Fourth Cavalry March 30, 1864. On regimental recruiting service in Tennessee from May 8 to September 14, 1855; with regiment at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to October 27, 1855; en route to aid in Texas to May 18, 1858; on recruiting service to April 19, 1859; on leave of absence (not sick leave) to September 22, 1859; on duty at Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania, to March 8, 1860; on recruiting service to July, 1860; on delay to October 17, 1860; on duty at Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania, to November, 1860; conducting recruits to and with regiment in Texas to April, 1861; at Washington, District Columbia, to March 10, 1862, and in the field, Army of the Potomac, to June 27, 1862, when wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Gaines's Mill, Virginia, prisoner of war to July, 1862; absent on account of wounds and on parol to October 23, 1862; assistant instructor of tactics and commanding cavalry detachment at the Military Academy, West Point, New York, to August 23, 1864; special inspector of cavalry, military division of the Mississippi, from September, 1864, to December 23, 1865; joined and in command of regiment at San Antonio, Texas, from February 20 to May 9, 1866, and on duty with regiment at same place to October 19, 1866, and on leave of absence (not sick leave) to date of resignation, November 1, 1867.

His resignation was tendered on account of the condition of his wife's health.

Copy of surgeon's certificate, given by Surgeon J. F. Hammond, United States Army, dated August 20, 1862, describing nature of wounds received June 27, 1862, by Captain Chambliss, herewith.

SAMUEL BRECK,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Captain W. P. Chambliss, of the Fifth Regiment of United States Cavalry, having applied for a certificate on which to ground an application for leave of absence, I do hereby certify that I have carefully examined this officer, and find that he is suffering from gunshot wounds and from dislocation of right shoulder. The latter is reduced. One wound is from a musket ball in left shoulder, one from buck-shot in upper part of right side of chest in front, one from a rifle-ball through the abdomen, and one through the left thigh. The wounds of the shoulder and abdomen are still open and discharging; they confine him to bed. They were all received in battle at Gaines's Mill, near the Chickahominy, Virginia, the 27th June, 1862, and that in consequence thereof he is, in my opinion, unfit for duty. I further declare my belief that he will not be able to resume his duties in a less period than sixty days.

J. F. HAMMOND,
Surgeon, U. S. A.

Dated at New York City this 20th day of August, 1862.

Literally riddled with balls, he was left for days on the field of battle at Gaines's Mill, only to be taken thence to the Libby Prison.

Escaping death as by a miracle, he has for several years past been in wretched health—the consequence of his many wounds, of exposure on the field of battle, and of a still unextracted ball.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, Mercer County, ss:

On the 21st day of April, before me, a notary public in and for said State, personally appeared George B. McClellan, who, being by me duly sworn, declares and says that he is personally acquainted with William P. Chambliss, late captain, Fifth United States Cavalry, and that the said Captain William P. Chambliss was present with his company and regiment at the battle of Gaines s Mill, Virginia, on the 27th day of June, 1862, the Army then being under my command, and that he was left on the field suffering from a wound from a musket ball in the left shoulder, and from a buck-shot wound in the upper part of the chest, and from a rifle ball through the abdomen and another through the left thigh.

He had also received other injuries, among them the dislocation of the right shoulder.

He remained some days on the field of battle, and was finally taken into Richmond as a prisoner, but was exchanged a few weeks afterward. His condition when exchanged was such that his recovery seemed impossible, and I think that very few survived such wounds and exposure as fell to the lot of Captain Chambliss. He further declares that he has no interest directly or indirectly in this matter.

GEO. B. McCLELLAN.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 21st day of April, 1880; and I certify that I have no interest, either directly or indirectly, in this matter.

FORT WAYNE, MICHIGAN, July 19, 1880.

SIR: At the battle of Gaines's Mill, Virginia, June 27, 1862, I was twice wounded, made prisoner, and carried into Richmond, and placed in the sick ward of the Libby Prison. Four days afterward Captain William P. Chambliss, Fourth Cavalry, was brought into the same ward and laid alongside me for nearly three weeks. He was wounded with one bullet and six buck-shot, and had lain out on the battle-field four days and four nights. He was placed on a cot, on which had died the day before a Union officer sick with erysipelas, and Captain Chambliss was soon attacked with the same disease in all of his wounds.

I saw his wounds dressed and his body painted with iodine almost every day. The bullet wound was in the belly, ranging from left to right. He must have had his left side toward the enemy when shot, for the buck-shot entered his left shoulder, his left breast, neck, and one of them, if my memory serves me rightly, entered beneath the left shoulder-blade, and just above the region of the kidneys, and about three or four inches from the spinal column, and lodged where I do not know.

I knew Captain Chambliss well. I had seen him with his regiment in the Army of the Potomac but a short time before the battle of Gaines's Mill; he was laid on a cot alongside of me, and I heard from his own lips a description of the charge in which his horse was shot and he was wounded, as narrated above, at the same time.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. B. CLITZ,
Colonel Tenth Infantry.

To the honorable COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C.

CINCINNATI, June 25, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to state that I was wounded at the battle of Gaines's Mill in June 27, 1862, and taken to Libby prison as prisoner of war. In this prison, and lying next to and very near me was William P. Chambliss, then a captain of the Fifth United States Cavalry. He was very dangerously wounded, and for several weeks it was thought impossible that he could live; being so near to him, I became perfectly familiar with his condition; daily saw his wounds dressed, and perfectly well knew the nature and extent of them, and expected that each day would see his suffering relieved by death. He was wounded in the abdomen by a gunshot, and in the left thigh gunshot, charge of buckshot, and right shoulder dislocated from fall from his horse; also a gunshot wound in the back close to one of his kidneys, the ball remaining in his body; it could not be extracted, and no doubt entirely disables him. Captain Chambliss, Major Clitz, Twelfth United States Infantry, and myself were paroled and taken to Westover Landing the same day, and came to New York in the hospital ship towed by the Vanderbilt. Captain Chambliss was even then so critical in condition that he had to at once enter hospital in New York City.

From my personal knowledge of his condition, resulting from wounds received in battle, I do not consider him capable to perform any duty of a character requiring a reasonable amount of physical exertion; and that he is still alive is a remarkable case and exceptional in every way.

I certify the above to be a true statement of the facts in this case so far as my recollection serves at this time.

P. W. STANHOPE,
Major, U. S. A.

To the honorable COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington D. C.

COBURG, CANADA, March 15, 1880.

Colonel Chambliss has been attended by me professionally for seven years. I first attended him for a severe attack of pain, which resembled nephritic colic. It was, as I supposed, caused by an unextracted musket or rifle ball lying in the vicinity of the left kidney. Since then his health has been tolerable for some days and other days miserable. I consider his present state of health arises from the severe wound he received in battle, from exposure on the field for ten days afterward, and also from subsequent confinement in Libby Prison.

GEORGE WATERS, M. D.

I certify that the foregoing papers are true copies of the originals on file in claim for pension certificate No. 172002, of William P. Chambliss, late captain Company D, Fifth United States Cavalry.

Examining surgeon's certificate in the case of an original applicant.

[No. of application, 347,140.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1880.

We hereby certify that we have carefully examined William P. Chambliss, late a captain, Company D, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, in the service of the United States, who is an applicant for an invalid pension by reason of alleged disability resulting from gunshot wounds of abdomen and back and injury of right shoulder.

In our opinion the said Chambliss is totally incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from the cause above stated.

Judging from his present condition, and from the evidence before —, it is — belief that the said disability did —— originate in the service aforesaid in the line of duty.

The disability is ——

A more particular description of the applicant's condition is subjoined:

Height, 5 feet 11 inches; weight, 142 pounds; complexion, light; age, 53 years; pulse, 84°; respiration, 18°; gunshot wound, ball entered just in front of anterior inferior spinous process of left illium, and passing to the right came out at a corresponding point on right side; cicatrices large and adherent, with loss of substance, (one-half.) Gunshot wound, ball entered an inch to the left of spinal process of ninth dorsal vertebra, and he says lodged and still remains; cicatrix depressed and adherent; loss of substance; tenderness on pressure in region of left kidney; complains of much pain in that region with dysuria most of the time, movements of body painful, and particularly stooping, (one-half;) some thickening of tissues about the right shoulder joint and its motions impaired; atrophy (slight) of muscles of right arm, one-fourth of an inch less than the other; loss of power in arm and hand, (one-fourth.)

President Board of Examining Surgeons.
J. O. STANTON, M. D.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioner, William P. Chambliss, a citizen of Tennessee, late a major in the Fourth United States Cavalry and brevet lieutenant-colonel, United States Army, respectfully asks Congress to pass an act authorizing the President of the United States to reinstate and place his name upon the retired list of the Army, with the rank of major, to date from the passage of the act.

In support of this petition he has the honor to submit the following statement of facts:

He first entered the service of his country, when a mere youth, as an officer in the Tennessee volunteers, and served throughout the war with Mexico; he re-entered the Army as a lieutenant of cavalry in 1855, and served continuously until he resigned in 1867, sharing the dangers of the peninsular campaign, during which, at the battle of Gaines's Mill, he was dangerously wounded, literally riddled with balls, and left on the field of battle for ten days, whence he was removed to Richmond and confined in the Libby Prison until paroled, and subsequently underwent treatment for several months at Saint Luke's Hospital, New York, in the language of General McClellan, "escaping death as if by a miracle."

At the time of his resignation of his commission as an officer in the Army his services, wounds, and sufferings gave him, under the law, the right to be placed upon the retired list with the rank he then held. By his voluntary resignation he waived this right, not then supposing his constitution was so undermined by the effects of his wounds, sufferings, and exposure as to eventually destroy his health; and he now prays the passage of an act removing the disability to his retirement caused by his resignation, with no compensation for the time he was out of the service.

In support of the foregoing prayer attention is respectfully invited to the following papers, which are made a part of this petition.

In conclusion he submits, with confidence in the wisdom and justice of Congress, the question of his reinstatement and retirement, satisfied if its judgment should be adverse, profoundly grateful if favorable.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS,
Late Major, Fourth U. S. Cavalry and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Trenton, March 22, 1880.

Independently of his services, when a mere boy, in the Mexican war, the admirable, gallant, and soldierly manner in which Colonel William P. Chambliss performed his duty during the recent war merits high appreciation and reward.

Literally riddled with balls, he was left for days on the field of battle at Gaines's Mill, only to be taken thence to the Libby Prison.

Escaping death as by a miracle, he has for several years past been in wretched health—the consequence of his many wounds, of exposure on the field of battle, and of a still unextracted ball.

If under any circumstances an officer who has voluntarily resigned his commission can be placed on the retired list, I think that Colonel Chambliss, by his services and sufferings, eminently deserves to be of the number.

GEO. B. MCCLELLAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SPARKS. I object to the consideration of this bill under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late in making his objection, the committee having entered upon the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I rose immediately as soon as the report was read and sought the attention of the Chair that I might object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman having permitted the reading of the report without making any objection is too late now in making it. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment be reported and that the bill be then read as it will be if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "rank," strike out the words "to which he would have attained in service at the date of the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of major;" so that it will read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate William P. Chambliss, late a major of the Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, and place his name on the list of retired officers of the United States Army with the rank of major: Provided, however, That he shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance of any kind under the provisions of this act for the time intervening between the 1st day of November, 1867, the date of his resignation, and the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the committee rise.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 41, noes 58.

Mr. SPARKS. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. BAYNE. The vote on the motion that the committee rise does not require a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think a quorum is necessary on that motion.

Mr. SPARKS. How can the committee transact business without a quorum? I make the point to the Chair that a quorum has not voted and that the committee cannot transact business without a quorum.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman how we could get out of the Committee of the Whole if it required a quorum to do it?

Mr. SPARKS. The fact being developed that there is no quorum, business cannot be transacted.

The CHAIRMAN. That must be on a vote that requires a quorum. The question before the committee is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not want to be factious, but I ask when a vote makes it apparent to the Chair there is no quorum, is it not the duty of the Chair to report that fact to the House under the rules of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that is the case on any motion except a motion that the committee rise, which does not require a quorum. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SPARKS and Mr. HOLMAN called for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 96, no 1.

Mr. SPARKS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPARKS, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. STEELE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 103, no 1.

Mr. SPARKS. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the second paragraph of Rule XXIII, which provides that whenever the Committee of the Whole finds itself without a quorum the Chair shall cause the roll to be called.

The CHAIRMAN. But a motion that the committee rise is always in order.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS LITTLE.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HORR reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1691) to authorize the restoration of Thomas Little to the rank of captain, and had directed him to report the same to the House with a recommendation that the enacting clause of the bill be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, that is equivalent to a rejection of the bill.

The report of the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill accordingly rejected.

Mr. JOYCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the Chair will submit sundry requests of members to the House.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ERMENTROUT, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. BLACKBURN, until Tuesday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. MOREY, for one week, on account of important business;

To Mr. DARRELL, until the 15th of March, on account of important business; and

To Mr. BRUMM, until Tuesday next, on account of sickness at his home.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ROSECRANS asked and obtained leave for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers relating to the claim in the Forty-sixth Congress of the Mission of Saint James, in Washington Territory.

COMMITTEE ON VENTILATION AND ACOUSTICS.

The SPEAKER announced the following as members of the Select Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics:

Mr. DARRELL, Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania, Mr. VAN AERNAM, Mr. BREWER, Mr. HEWITT of New York, Mr. MCKENZIE, and Mr. COVINGTON.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to submit a privileged report.

Mr. BLAND. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit some Executive communications.

There was no objection.

WAR ON THE PACIFIC.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 6th instant, requesting a further compliance with its call for correspondence respecting the war on the Pacific, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State and its accompanying papers.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 17, 1882.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a progress report of the Mississippi River Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, and ordered to be printed.

TRIAL OF CAST-IRON GUNS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the House resolution of January 26, 1882, a report on the trial of two cast-iron guns; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Agriculture a bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I now insist upon my motion to adjourn.

Mr. MARTIN. Pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 50, noes 43.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 61, noes 46.

The SPEAKER having announced the vote as reported by the tellers,

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, said: No quorum has voted. This question has been decided once to-day in a full House on a yea-and-nay vote, and I want that decision to stand.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will continue the count, and the Chair requests gentlemen to vote on one side or the other.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I understood the Chair to announce the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced the report by the tellers.

Mr. BLAND. And then the point of order was made that no quorum voted, and I rise to a privileged motion that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is already pending, and it is pending that motion that the gentleman from Delaware moves to adjourn over until Monday next.

Mr. BLAND. Does the Chair decide that it is necessary for this House to remain in session until a quorum does vote on that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so decide.

Mr. BLAND. Then why not vote on the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that pending a motion to adjourn a motion to adjourn over may be made, and it is upon that motion that the House is dividing.

Mr. BLAND. And the Chair announced the vote, and the point was made that no quorum voted.

The SPEAKER. It does not follow that the motion is lost. A further count may develop a quorum.

The tellers continued the count, and reported—ayes 76, noes 50.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is the point made that no quorum has voted?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There being no quorum, I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to adjourn. If there be no objection, the Chair desires to submit a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order, the vote on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 62, noes 60.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 61, noes 62.

Mr. TAYLOR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 64, not voting 157; as follows:

Mr. HAZELTON with Mr. WISE of Virginia.

Mr. PAGE with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. WARD.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4240) supplemental to the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the final expenses of the tenth census."

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: The petition of 1,420 citizens of Chicago, praying Congress to abolish the tax on bank deposits and the two-cent stamp on checks and drafts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ATKINS: The petitions of Martha W. Hughes and of Mrs. M. Rone, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late rebellion—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petitions of William H. Brown, of F. Spah, of Fidel Spah, of William Van Treese, and of Jane M. Williams, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late rebellion—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. BAYNE: The resolutions adopted by the joint committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the Coal Exchange of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, opposing the passage of House bill No. 204, amending the Ohio River bridge law of 1872—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, memorial of 500 citizens of Pittsburgh and Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and stamp on bank-checks—severally to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the resolutions adopted by a meeting of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, requesting Congress to take steps to obtain a protest from the Government of the United States against the treatment inflicted upon the Jews in Russia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BERRY: The petition of George Frazier, praying for an enabling act giving him a standing in the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of John Kepley, of Delaware County, Indiana, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUCKNER: The petition of 1,800 merchants, manufacturers, and others, of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and two-cent stamp on bank checks and drafts—severally to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. C. BURROWS: The petition of D. R. Hibbard and others, citizens of Michigan, for legislation for the suppression of polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CANDLER: The petition of selectmen of Saugus, Swampscot, Nahant, Lynnfield, and Revere, for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Lynn, Massachusetts—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DEUSTER: The petition of James McCarthy and others, citizens of Port Washington, Wisconsin, for the further improvement of the harbor at that place—to the same committee.

By Mr. ERRETT: The petition of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in favor of the early passage of the McKinley bill, fixing the rates of duty on manufactures of iron, steel, &c.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EVINS: The petition of T. E. McLure and others, of Chester, South Carolina, for the erection of a public building at that place—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GARRISON: The petition of William Crow and others, for an appropriation for dredging Piscataway Creek, in the State of Maryland—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of C. P. Baker and others, for an appropriation for deepening the York River, in the State of Virginia—to the same committee.

By Mr. GEDDES: The petition of Z. T. Smith and 30 others, citizens of Wyandot County, Ohio, for such legislation as will prevent unjust discriminations in railroad charges for transportation—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of L. Rothnan and 29 others, citizens of Benton, and of S. Irwin and 29 others, citizens of Mount Hope, Holmes County, Ohio, for the suppression of polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARMER: The resolution adopted at a meeting of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, protesting against the treatment now inflicted upon the Jews in Russia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the resolutions adopted at a meeting of the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and vicinity, declaring polygamy a violation of the laws of the United States, a high crime against society, and in antagonism to Christian civilization, and recommending such action by Congress as will place the Territories where polygamy is recognized and fostered in the hands of the Government, not for injustice and oppression, but to insure just and humane government for all people—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEPBURN: The petition of Benjamin Clair and 100 others, citizens of Imogene, and of Rev. J. M. Conrad and other citizens of Farmer City, Fremont County, Iowa, for legislation for the suppression of polygamy in Utah—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. HERNDON: The petition of Theodore G. Fowler and others, citizens of Mobile, Alabama, for the passage of Senate bill No. 1056, to grant lands to aid in the construction of the Gulf and Chicago Air Line Railway Company—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. G. W. JONES: The petition of citizens of Milam County, Texas, for legislation regulating charges for freight and passenger traffic on railroads—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KETCHAM: The petition of Smith Sherman, attorney for the heirs of Abraham Tompkins, deceased, a soldier in the Revolutionary war, for pension to which said Tompkins was entitled—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNOTT: Memorial of Gouverneur Morris, executor of S. I. Morris, deceased, asking reimbursement for the amount paid by him for certain real property and furniture purchased by him at a sale made by the United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia, in the city of Alexandria, under a confiscation proceedings against Dr. Orlando Fairfax, and from which he was ejected by an order of the district court—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LORD: The petition of citizens of Michigan, for the amendment of section 3282 of the Revised Statutes, so as to permit the use of vapors of alcoholic spirits in manufacturing vinegar—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MANNING: Memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi, asking for an appropriation for the improvement of the pass leading in Biloxi Bay—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of many citizens, praying for the building by the Government of a macadamized roadway from Memphis to the national cemetery—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MORSE: The petition of citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Massachusetts, urging action on the Geneva award—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NEAL: Papers relating to the claim of Francis M. Fullerton and of John Jordan—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RAY: The petition of Hon. W. H. H. Allen and others, of the third district of New Hampshire, for the relief of the widow and children of the late Hon. Evarts W. Farr—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. RITCHIE: The petition of 56 citizens of Lyons, Fulton County, Ohio, urging legislation for the relief of C. E. Cannon, postmaster—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SCOVILLE: The petition of 700 merchants, manufacturers, and others, of Buffalo, New York, praying for the repeal of the law imposing a tax on bank deposits and to abolish the two-cent stamp on bank checks and drafts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLITS: The petition of 44 citizens of the second Congressional district of Michigan, for the amendment of section 3282 of the Revised Statutes to permit the use of vapors of alcoholic spirits in manufacturing vinegar—to the same committee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 18, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. URNER, by unanimous consent, was granted indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness.

MEMORIAL FROM UTAH.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House it is in receipt of a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, which relates generally to the subject of legislation affecting the disfranchisement of certain citizens of that Territory. The memorial has been received in the form of a telegram. If there be no objection it will be submitted to the House. The Chair has also been requested to ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLS. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. To receive, read, and have printed in the RECORD a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Utah.

Mr. MILLS. And for its reference?

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the appropriate committee.

There was no objection, and the memorial was read, as follows:

Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas there are now pending in the Senate and House of Representatives of the National Congress bills having in view the disfranchisement of citizens in Utah and the appointment of commissioners wholly irresponsible to the people but empowered to legislate for and generally to control the affairs of the Territory; and

Whereas we have deeply at heart the interests of peace and general prosperity now prevailing throughout the Territory, the interest of freedom and loyalty, justice and humanity; the interest of an industrious, happy people, whose quiet homes are gladdened with the voice of daily praise, and who, having enmity toward none, feel good-will to all; in the interest of charity, love, and religion, and by the cherished memory of Washington, Adams, and Jefferson; in the name of the declaration of rights, which cost so much precious blood, the broad provisions of the Constitution, and the glorious stars and stripes, so often baptized in fire, we desire to implore the Congress of our great nation to pause, reflect, and investigate before responding to the wild, unreasoning pressure of public opinion, wrought up by misinformed and misguided religious influences, the promoters of which wish to rest upon the limbs of citizens of Utah the chain of slavery: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Council and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, That we do most earnestly memorialize Congress not to act hastily upon extreme measures, radical in interest, and which would be hurtful in application; but to appoint a commission of honorable gentlemen to come to Utah empowered to send for persons and papers and otherwise authorized to fully investigate the affairs of the Territory, the citizens thereof, and every matter bearing upon the questions at issue. And, as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray.

Adopted February 16, 1882.

FRANCIS M. LYMAN,
Speaker of the House.
JOSEPH F. SMITH,
President of the Council.

SALT LAKE, UTAH, February 16, 1882.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the memorial of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, representing 1,000,000 persons, be read and printed in the RECORD. It is on the subject of polygamy in the Territories.

Mr. SPRINGER. Except the names.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The memorial has no list of names attached to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it is a memorial of a religious society on the subject of polygamy. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to its reference, but it seems we are referring this one question to several committees. One committee ought to have entire charge of the subject. The Committee on Territories have the subject before them at this time, and yet we here find bills and memorials on the same subject referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. One committee, in my judgment, should have the investigation of this whole subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the printing and reading of the memorial.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. There was no objection to the printing and reading of the memorial of the Legislature of Utah, and I was glad there was none. I should like to see the fullest investigation of the subject and the largest liberty to all sides.

Mr. MILLS. I certainly have no objection to the reading of the memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

A memorial to the President and to the Congress of the United States.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, representing a church membership of about one million persons, and a constituency of five times that number of residents, chiefly of the Northern States, at its last annual meeting in May, 1881, authorized and instructed its executive board "to address a memorial to the President of the United States, and through him to the National Congress, asking, in behalf of the great Baptist constituency in the land, that early measures be taken to remove and prohibit the practice of polygamy and its accompanying vices throughout all our borders."

In pursuance of these instructions, the executive board of this society, noting with profound satisfaction the popular feeling which has been aroused against this arrogant and blighting institution of Mormonism, hereby respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to take advantage of the present favorable state of public sentiment for the immediate passage of such acts as will effectually subdue this pestilent system, so far as it makes against good government and good morals.

As representatives of a society which seeks to extend the pure and loyal influences of the gospel of Christ over the very lands that are threatened by the presence of this evil, we have an especial interest in its due restraints; and we are authorized to pledge "the moral support of our society to the National Government in the exercise of its constitutional rights and legal obligations in taking early and vigorous measures to suppress and overthrow polygamy and its attendant monstrosities wherever they exist in our country."

As Baptists it is our pride to have been among the foremost champions of religious liberty. But the book from which we draw our inspiration and our warrant for maintaining the freedom of the human conscience, teaches us submission to righteous authority and the paramount blessedness of the marriage relation as established between one man and one woman; and it is our conviction that to admit the right of Mormonism to non-interference is to defend lust and treason behind the sacred ramparts of religious liberty.

Respectfully submitted.

By order and on behalf of the society:

H. L. MOREHOUSE,
Corresponding Secretary.

NEW YORK CITY, February 13, 1882.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask, Mr. Speaker, at this time, by unanimous consent, to report back from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. No. 1049) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck, and to move the reference of the bill to the House Calendar, and that, with the accompanying report, it be ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does not that go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as it makes an appropriation?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. No, it does not make an appropriation directly.

Mr. HUBBELL. But it increases the service and provides for new stations, and ought, therefore, to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken if it requires an appropriation, though it does not make one.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Yes, it does require an appropriation.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL ASCERTAINMENT OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, reported, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2870) to provide for the adjudication of claims against the United States, a bill (H. R. No. 4467) for the judicial ascertainment of the facts in cases of private claims, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the said committee.

HARBOR OF NEW BUFFALO, MICHIGAN.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the House any additional report or reports from officers of the Engineer Corps as to the condition of the harbor at New Buffalo, Michigan, and what appropriation is necessary to make said harbor available as a harbor for commercial purposes.

MONUMENT TO REAR-ADMIRAL DU PONT.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request of yesterday, which was presented perhaps at an inopportune time, to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 977) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, of the United States Navy, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 977) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking the bill from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration?

Mr. KASSON. That, I think, ought to go to some committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Iowa as objecting to the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. KASSON. I am just informed that a similar bill has been before one of the House committees. I objected in the first instance upon the theory that no committee of the House had considered the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I was about to state for the information of the House that the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, if I was permitted to ask the present consideration of the bill, would make a statement in regard to it which, I am sure, will be convincing and satisfactory to the House. I hope if there is objection to the consideration of the bill that he will be permitted to do so, as I think it would take but little time, and I am sure upon that statement all objection will be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Delaware whether or not a bill similar in substance has been considered by one of the committees of the House.

Mr. MARTIN. A similar bill has been considered.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill. Does the gentleman from Delaware desire the bill to be read at length?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not, unless it is desired by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the circle at the intersection of Massachusetts and Connecticut avenues in Washington City shall hereafter be called the "Du Pont Circle;" and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in the preparation of the circle and of the base for a proposed statue of the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy, to be erected thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand from the reading of the bill this money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. That is the language of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why should this be under the direction of the Secretary of War? I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Delaware how it happens that the erection of a monument for a naval officer is placed under the direction and control of the Secretary of War? I see no reason for that.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the only reason is, perhaps, that these circles or parks, which are known as Government reservations, in the city are under the control of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, who is an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army, and therefore under the control of the War Department. I believe that statues and monuments heretofore erected have been erected under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Samuel Francis Du Pont entered the Navy as a midshipman when a lad, being scarcely fifteen years old, and served his country faithfully and well for nearly half a century. In that service he earned his promotion through every rank to that of rear-admiral. Frequently he was intrusted with the command of some of the most important expeditions, and in his ability and efficiency, stern virtue and patriotic devotion to duty he was universally recognized as a fitting representative of our Navy when it was the object of just pride to every American. I know of no man, therefore, whose memory is more entitled to commemoration. This is conceded on all hands. I will not detain the House but will yield for the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE and Mr. HISCOCK demanded the regular order.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I hope the gentlemen will yield to me for the purpose of introducing a bill for reference only.

The SPEAKER. If the demand for the regular order is withdrawn, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. McKINLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the morning hour for the call of committees be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committe of the Whole for the purpose of considering a bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. HISCOCK: I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall object to the first reading being dispensed with unless on the understanding that points of order on this bill can be made when the paragraphs to which they apply are reached.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly; points of order have been reserved.

Mr. HOLMAN. The points of order should be made on the first reading. But I consent to dispense with the first reading if it is understood that they are reserved until the paragraphs are reached.

Mr. BLOUNT. It has not been the practice, I think, to make points of order on the first reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The points of order will be considered as reserved till the paragraphs are reached, that being the practice, as the Chair understands.

There being no objection, the first and formal reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no desire to occupy the time of the committee in any general remarks on this bill, preferring to explain the paragraphs as they are reached, if any explanation shall be needed or be called for. I ask therefore that the reading of the bill be proceeded with by sections for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and prior years, namely:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, and the Departments, and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $400,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would ask the gentleman from New York to explain how this very large deficiency occurred. The growth of the expenditure for printing is so great as properly to arrest public attention. Of so large a deficiency for this purpose as $400,000 some explanation certainly would be proper; at least as suggesting the necessity of some reforms in the expenditure for public printing.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana, and by way of explanation, I will say this: The appropriation for the current year of 1882 was $300,000 less than it had been for the preceding year. Three hundred thousand dollars of the amount we propose to give added to the appropriation for the current year would be the sum given for the year 1881, a part of which was given by way of a deficiency after the fullest consideration by the Committee on Appropriations and after full consideration by the House or a Committee of the Whole House.

It is also true that the work of the Printing Office is annually increasing; and it is a matter over which the Committee on Appropriations has but little control, and over which the Public Printer has but little control. So long as Congress constantly orders work to be done in excess of the work of preceding years, the cost of maintaining that establishment is necessarily increasing. The committee after full investigation concluded to give the sum named in this bill, and which does little beyond carrying on the current work of the Departments, the printing of Congress, and the printing of the Agricultural Reports. To complete all the work which has been ordered by Congress, some of which has not been touched at all, and some of it having progressed a good deal towards completion, there would be needed somewhere from $800,000 to $1,000,000. We concluded to give the sum in this bill, confining the Public Printer to the branches of expenditures which I have mentioned.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying one word only in response to what fell from my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I am aware the deficiencies in our appropriations are growing. We have this year a book of the estimates of deficiencies transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury which seems to require to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and prior years, an amount of $23,150,690.81. Now, it would seem to the ordinary average Congressional mind that we might make some provision in advance for this extraordinary deficiency. But after all, and especially on this matter of printing, I believe that Congress is more at fault than the Departments, though I will not say that the printing department may not be extravagant in some matters.

I believe I am right, for I was on the sub-committee on the deficiency bill, in saying that they asked for a deficiency of $800,000 in the printing department alone. It was a sum that utterly stunned me. Not being familiar with the matters connected with the appropriation of money, never having served on that committee before, I was at a loss how to reach the mischief and how to remedy it. The chairman of the committee, however, in his wisdom, has seen proper after examination to cut this down nearly one-half, and I think perhaps he will assure the House we may get through this year with the sum fixed in this present bill.

One thing I desire to say here is that the fault for this extraordinary outlay lies first with Congress; next, I think, with the Committee on Printing, which should revise these matters very heedfully; and next with our system. I am advised by men who know the system in England that as regards books that are necessary for the ordinary current service of the government, the printing is done by the government itself; while on all scientific matters, matters outside of the current business connected with the administration of the government, they let out the printing to private publishers, and the publishers sell the books at an advance after giving them full advertisement throughout the country; so that the English Government makes a large surplus sum by the publication of its scientific reports and other matters which are not strictly governmental matters. I believe it would be a wise thing for the Committee on Printing to suggest or bring in some general law by which our printing, not connected with the ordinary business of the Government, should be done outside in the way it is done in England. I refer to books like Hall's Arctic Explorations, and those archæological works and others with which we are all familiar, that do not belong to the ordinary administration of the Government. I think it would be a wise thing for Congress to pass some bill to stop this inordinate expenditure, and thus relieve the Committee on Appropriations, as well as the country, from the burden of having these bills come here year after year.

Mr. BLOUNT. There was a deficiency in the matter of printing in the appropriations of last year to the amount of $400,000, which, with the $1,600,000 appropriated in the regular appropriation bill, made $2,000,000 for the printing of the Government. At the time the appropriation of $1,600,000 was made there was much debate and criticism in the House as to the matter of the increased expenditures in the public printing. The disposition of the work is in the hands of the Public Printer. A large amount of printing, in the way of books and documents, has accumulated during a series of years, and the Public Printer, in his administration of his office, has always found it possible to do first the work most needed and to leave for another time a large part of the work which is printed simply as a matter of favor to our constituents, in the way of documents for distribution.

When the appropriation of $1,600,000 was made for the Government Printing Office it was done on the assurance by the Public Printer that the work would be so arranged in his office that the part most needed would be first attended to, and in that way he could get along for that year with the amount appropriated. But when Congress met, contrary to expectation at the time the general appropriation bill was passed, it was found that much of the least-needed work had been put forward, and we were told that we could not have even the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD unless we appropriated a large sum for deficiency, and a pressure was brought upon Congress in that way. I have no doubt that we may find one of the reasons for this deficiency at this time in some such arrangement as that.

While I claim that a different administration of the Printing Office might have avoided the deficiency at the last session of Congress and largely the deficiency at this session, I am not willing to make a scapegoat of the Public Printer. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has rightly said that the great difficulty lies in the enormous amount of useless publications ordered by Congress. And when we order this vast amount of printing and leave its execution to the discretion of the Public Printer, we have no right to complain and say that he has not used that discretion as he ought to have done. It is our fault that the law is allowed to remain in this way and that we insist upon sending to the Printing Office these large orders for useless publications.

But I cannot see any remedy for it in the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] in regard to the Committee on Printing. Time and again it has occurred here that the Committee on Printing has reported adversely on some proposition and has been voted down in consequence of the efforts of gentlemen on one side of this House or of the other, or the number of volumes recommended by the committee has been largely increased, doubled and perhaps trebled. I therefore think it is our duty to take our share of the blame, instead of endeavoring to place it all on the Public Printer, and to be more careful hereafter in the matter of printing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last line of the pending paragraph. I think there is no question but the Public Printer is a gentleman whose integrity and capacity cannot be called in question. He is an officer of very large experience, one who in other public employment, as well as in this, has shown not only a high degree of integrity, but also great capacity. Therefore I do not attribute this deficiency in any large degree to the improper administration of that office by the Public Printer.

I think it is due to the action of Congress in allowing the various Departments to order unlimited amounts of printing and binding of documents and other forms of printing. It has always seemed to me that in addition to the lavish manner in which Congress has authorized printing to be done, the leaving the different Departments of the Government entirely unrestricted as they are practically now, must lead to the result that deficiencies will be inevitable, notwithstanding large appropriations are made from year to year.

The growth of expenditures in this respect during the last fifteen years has been simply enormous. Not only has Congress year after year ordered large amounts of printing, but the Departments have been left comparatively unrestrained to print documents of every character, with only that responsibility which a sense of duty to the Department might impose upon it. Naturally each Department magnifies its own business, the scope of its employment, the nature of its own works. Therefore an increase in the amount of printing is inevitable year by year, until it seems necessary for Congress to adopt some more systematic plan to determine what shall and what shall not be printed, and the amount that shall be allowed to the several Departments of the Government for that purpose. I have wished to say this because, so far as I am concerned, I am not willing that all the responsibility of these large expenditures and this large deficiency shall be thrown upon the Public Printer, who I believe to be a thoroughly competent and efficient public officer. I will withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew it for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if in other bills which are to come in on the subject of printing the committee has provided for discontinuing the small printing offices in the various Departments of the Government?

I understand that there is a small printing office in the Treasury Department, one connected with the Census Bureau, and one in each of various other Departments. It seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations should provide for the abolition of all these little printing offices, and require all the public printing to be done at one place, so that we may keep some control of the amount of printing ordered, where it is done, and what it costs.

Mr. ATKINS. I will make this suggestion in regard to the Treasury Department: I do not well see how the Department can do without its private printing office. They are compelled to have printed confidential communications and other matters which the public do not know of, and which it would not be proper to have done in the Public Printing Office. These small printing offices might be done away with in the Interior Department; perhaps in the Post-Office Department, but not in the Treasury Department.

Mr. HISCOCK. Legislation of that kind would hardly be proper, it seems to me, upon a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was about to reach the point in my remarks where I would suggest that perhaps some of the deficiencies we are called upon to meet arise in these small printing offices in the different Departments of the Government. As to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee that some kinds of work in the Treasury Department could not be trusted to the Public Printer, I think it is not well taken.

It is well known to every gentleman acquainted with this subject of public printing that there are classes of public printing which, although highly confidential, can be as well intrusted to the Public Printer as to employés in any Department of the Government. I remember a notable instance. When a joint committee of the two Houses was in session three or four weeks preparing the bill which was finally known as the electoral commission bill, the committee sent to the public Printing Office every night the draft of its proceedings and the bills pending before it, with all the various amendments, which were confidentially printed at the public Printing Office and returned to the committee-room next morning. During this period of several weeks—a period of great anxiety on the part of the public as to what was being done by the committee, and with the Argus eyes of the whole press of the country turned in that direction to obtain information, not one word or syllable of what was being done by the committee was ever divulged from the Printing Office. I say, therefore, that confidential printing can be done there as well as at any other place.

One remark further. Upon examination of the bills now pending in this House which have been referred to the Committee on Printing, I find it is proposed to appropriate in this Congress more than a million and a half of dollars for the printing of extra documents—documents the usual number of which is already provided. Members can hardly realize the difficulty which the Committee on Printing has in scanning the various propositions on this subject. The public printing ought to be carefully looked into. The whole department needs revision; the whole system is loose—disjointed; and the work is so diversified that few members of Congress can understand what is being done there.

I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. It occurs to me that the Committee on Printing, which is represented by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, ought to inaugurate some measures of reform if they are needed, and I shall expect to see that committee report some measure to correct these abuses if they exist. I am rather surprised that the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] a member of the committee, should himself in this informal way allude to the manner in which the public printing is carried on. I am unable to discover, Mr. Chairman, how it costs any more to do a certain quantity of printing in the Interior Department than at the office on H street.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can inform the gentleman.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is a certain amount of printing that is peculiarly and wholly adapted to that Department. Of course, if the work be done in the Interior Department, the transportation between the Printing Office and the Department is saved. If the printing material be taken directly to the Interior Department and the blanks and other papers used by that Department are printed there, no transportation of those articles will be needed. I am unable to discover why a certain amount of printing may not be done as well there as anywhere else. The gentleman from Illinois does not undertake to say that it costs any more to do this printing in the Interior Department than at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SPRINGER. It necessitates the use of another set of machinery, another set of types, another set of all the instruments necessary for carrying on a printing office—an additional superintendent and other officers to manage the concern.

A MEMBER. Another bureau.

Mr. SPRINGER. In fact it necessitates the existence of another bureau.

Mr. DUNNELL. Very well; then I shall expect that the Committee on Printing will inaugurate a reform in this respect.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire merely to say that I am glad the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has made this suggestion. I hope that this little discussion will be profitable to the country. I trust that my friend will originate the reform that he speaks of; and when he comes to do so he will find upon examination the truth of the remark I made with regard to the necessity of certain printing being done in the Treasury Department under the exclusive supervision and control of the Secretary of the Treasury through officers responsible to him. I did not make that remark without authority. I know the fact to be as I have stated. In the course of investigation which I have given to this subject, I long ago discovered that it is absolutely essential to have certain printing done in the Treasury Department, because it must be confidential, and the work must be done by subordinates responsible to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I hope, therefore, the suggestion made by the gentleman from Minnesota will be adopted by my industrious friend from Illinois; and I believe it will be. I am glad that he is on the committee. I say this without any reflection whatever upon the very distinguished gentleman who served on that committee heretofore, because I am sure he discharged his duties, as he believed, faithfully to the country, though I differed with him somewhat in regard to the necessity of the amount of printing ordered during the last two or three Congresses.

I do hope that the chairman of the Committee on Printing and my honorable friend from Illinois will be in their places when so much printing is ordered, and that they themselves will not request Congress to publish and print so much matter, worthless as I believe it to be, at the cost of so many thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars—matter which is never read by anybody, but is bunched up, sent down town, and sold in this city. Documents, the printing of which costs hundreds of thousands of dollars, are not distributed to the country, but are sold in this city, and resold by hucksters—men who want these documents as waste paper, &c.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will ask the gentleman whether these documents that are sold to hucksters——

Mr. ATKINS. I take back the word "hucksters."

Mr. HISCOCK. I trust the members of the committee will not wander off too far from the subject. Certainly on this bill legislation of the character suggested would be improper. The arraignment of the Committee on Printing would in my judgment be unprofitable to the House. I make this remark because I see the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] chairman of the Committee on Printing of the Forty-sixth Congress, ready to take the floor, as I suppose, to defend that committee. I therefore ask the members of the Committee of the Whole House to content themselves by confining their remarks to the discussion of the pending paragraph.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly cannot refuse to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, but I hope the discussion on the subject will not be prolonged.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I renew it, and I should not have said a word, Mr. Chairman, on this subject but for allusions made to the Committee on Printing of the last Congress by the gentleman from Tennessee. That gentleman ought to know, if he does not, that the Committee on Printing of the last Congress attempted time and again to bring this House to practice economy in the matter of public printing, but by reason of its action the committee was not successful in accomplishing their purpose.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman does not understand me as having adversely criticised the conduct of the committee on Printing of the last Congress.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I did so understand.

Mr. ATKINS. I did not do so.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Very well. Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known fact to gentlemen on this floor who were in the last Congress, that on several occasions it was undertaken by the Committee on Printing to check the printing of certain maps and documents referred to that committee for report, and on which adverse reports were made, and yet the House took possession of the matter and over the heads of the committee ordered the printing to be done.

I will say further, Mr. Chairman, that three years ago I introduced into this House a bill for the purpose of reducing the expense of the public printing. The bill was approved by every department of the Government, and it was shown by a statement of the Public Printer himself that we might thereby save to the Government every year $275,000 on public printing alone. The House, however, differed with me, and I could not get the bill passed. But I have again introduced that bill at the present session of Congress, and it is now in the hands of the Committee on Printing. I hope that committee will consider it and report it back favorably. By investigation they will find we can cut off a large amount of printing entirely unnecessary, by refusing to print many bills introduced, touching every conceivable subject, and which are referred to some committee and never expected to see the light of day again.

If they will take up that bill and look carefully into its provisions they will find, as I declare from my own knowledge of the public printing, for I have been chairman of that committee for four years and was a member of it before the war and since, that by its enactment into law the Government can save every year over $275,000, and that without doing any injury to the proceedings of this body.

Now, sir, so far from the Committee on Printing of the last Congress having been extravagant in the matter of public printing, we endeavored on all occasions to practice economy and to keep the public printing down to the lowest possible figure. As I have remarked already, on more than one occasion the House has taken the matter out of the hands of the committee when that committee reported adversely and ordered the printing to be done, although in our opinion the published matter was entirely useless to the country.

Public printing should be confined to those documents which are necessary to enlighten the people, and I shall vote for the printing of such documents at all times, no matter what the cost may be. If I think there is information which should go to the country there is no sentimental economy which will prevent me from voting for printing the same. Now, if the gentleman himself has been peculiarly an advocate upon this floor of the reduction of the public printing it is a fact which has not yet come to my knowledge.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of opposing the pending amendment, and I do so for the purpose of getting an opportunity to say a few words on the pending subject. It seems to me it is entirely wrong for this House, when a bill comes in to supply a deficiency in appropriation to pay for what the House has ordered, to call that deficiency in question. We know that during the last Congress this Committee on Printing attempted on many occasions to prevent the printing of reports made by committees, on the ground that they were entirely unnecessary. On one occasion I recollect the Committee on Printing succeeded in shutting out the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. I know the House has time and again overruled the Committee on Printing and ordered the printing of reports, in reference to the printing of which that committee had reported adversely. Now, after the work has been done by order of the House, and the Government Printing Office has been choked with that kind of work, taking precedence of all other work, and a deficiency has been created—when a debt has been created, and the creditor asks for his pay—we ought at once to provide for the payment of that deficiency, and not stand here questioning whether we will pay it or not.

We cannot longer stand in that position. We must take one ground or the other, and either make an appropriation for what we have ordered to be printed, or determine that it shall not be printed until the appropriation is made in advance. We must either do this or this trouble will always arise. But, Mr. Chairman, whenever we have ordered such work, let us act as a business man would act in the ordinary course of affairs, and not find fault with the bill which has been sent in for what we have ordered ourselves.

Now a word in regard to the work. If these documents are sold for waste paper, as has been stated here, the fault lies somewhere. We who live in the rural districts know the difficulty that we have in getting public documents. We know that we cannot begin to get enough of the reports printed by the Government to supply our constituency. We know that there are more of these reports and documents read by the people than any man who has not had occasion to look into the subject will probably imagine. I assert, sir, that there is more interest taken in the reports and documents which are printed by the Government and which come from the office of the Public Printer, and that more information is obtained from them and more knowledge and information disseminated among the people, than from any other institution in the whole country. It is surprising to me, Mr. Chairman, that more of this character of information is not disseminated. These people in the rural districts are more directly benefited by these documents published by order of Congress than from any other source. The mail service, with the post-roads and post-offices everywhere, and these Government publications distributed by Congress, are about the only direct benefits they receive from the Government. They recognize the value of these publications and are constantly asking that additional ones be sent them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to say a word——

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi been withdrawn?

Mr. ATKINS. If it has been I renew it. I only rose, sir, for the purpose of replying briefly to the last remark of my friend from Mississippi, which I regard as rather a Parthian arrow. He stated, as I understand him, that he was not aware that I had ever made any effort in the way of reform in the public printing.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him? I said that he had never made any remarks in this House that I was aware of on this subject.

Mr. ATKINS. In this House—well, as the gentleman from Georgia suggests, I did not have charge of the bill.

But I remember on one occasion that I objected to a report made by this Committee on Printing, and I kept it out for some time, and I have no doubt that my friend from Mississippi also remembers that fact.

But the gentleman from Mississippi will remember, and the Committee on Appropriations will also remember, that I co-operated with the gentleman from Mississippi in support of this reform bill with reference to printing by endeavoring to get it placed upon an appropriation bill in the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman will doubtless remember that, although in point of fact I am free to say that I did not believe the bill which was introduced in that connection was entirely germane to the subject-matter. Still so ready was I for reform in that direction that I consented to use every exertion to incorporate that provision in the appropriation bill, and the gentleman knows that. So much for the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi as to my position upon this question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist, Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order that pro forma amendments are no longer in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps I may be able to say something not obnoxious to the point of order.

I move to strike out the last three words. I do not know any more appropriate place—and I do not want my friend, the chairman of my committee, to frown upon me in that way. [Laughter.] I do not know a more appropriate time or place than when a deficiency comes in here of this magnitude, (and I think it very likely that we will be called upon to make further appropriations for further deficiencies, although I hope not,) but there is no more appropriate place than when this question is presented here for some reform by general legislation on this subject. And as my friend, the chairman of the committee, will tell this House, if he chooses to speak with the emphasis he can command, there is now a possibility, in this connection, of applying the ax at the very root of this wrong. Bills are now pending before the Committee on Printing for a great many publications which are entirely alien to the province of the Federal Government in that direction, as I believe. I do not think this Government should open a scientific book establishment, and thereby come in competition with the publishing houses of the country; and until we recognize that fact, that the Government is not a publishing machine, how in the world will we reform that but in the manner proposed by my friend from Mississippi?

What do you suppose is now pending before the Committee on Printing on bills sent them by this House? I have a partial list here which shows a proposition to print 6,000 copies of the report of the National Board of Health for 1880, costing over $10,044; 6,000 copies of the report of the Board of Health for 1881, costing $7,869; 25,000 copies of the second annual report of the Geological Survey, costing over $42,000; 25,000 copies of the third annual report of the Geological Survey, $42,000; 50,000 copies of the special report on the diseases of swine, costing $37,000; 100,000 copies of the special report on the diseases of swine, over $75,000; report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1880, nearly $300,000; 3,000 copies of the trial of Guiteau, costing $7,544; 1,000 copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the War, costing $12,450; and another bill pending for 100,000 copies, amounting to $1,245,000, and so on. Here is a report on geology to cost $2,150; report on the flora of Colorado, $2,025.

Where should we place the knife to prune this great wrong of printing? Is there to be no end to it? Must we publish a book of all the fauna and flora of every locality in this country at the expense of the Federal Government? When will these deficiencies stop if we continue to order all this printing? This House is the only place to stop it. I desire that shall be done with the aid of my distinguished friend from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] If he will bring in a good, thorough reformatory measure, it shall have my hearty support. I recommend, therefore, to the gentlemen of the Printing Committee to consider wisely and well the proposition coming from men of experience who have spoken on this question; and when gentlemen rise with long petitions to fill up the RECORD, let them remember that it is in their power to withhold their little drop from the sea of expenditure.

Mr. BROWNE. What about long speeches?

Mr. COX, of New York. Long speeches! I do not often, I think, make long speeches myself, but I think there is scarcely a private bill before the House on which my friend from Indiana does not speak hour after hour, no doubt to my entertainment and the instruction of the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For freight on bullion and coin between the mints and assay offices, $50,000: Provided, That the amount paid for the transportation of gold coin from San Francisco to New York shall not exceed one-fourth of 1 per cent., and for the transportation of silver 1 per cent., and for intermediate points at proportionate rates corresponding to the distance.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment to the section which has just been read. I desire in line 27, after the word "offices," to insert, "and on coin from the mints to the offices of the Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States." The object of that amendment is to prevent a reshipment from the assay office in New York City to the Treasurer's and assistant treasurers' offices; to provide for a direct shipment, where it is needed, to the Treasurer's office, and where it can be done as cheaply as by transferring the bullion and coin in the first instance to the assay offices.

I propose further to amend the paragraph by inserting after the word "paid," in line 28, the words "from moneys hereby appropriated for the transportation of gold coin to New York;" and after the words "New York," in line 29, to insert the words "after the passage of this act."

The object of that amendment is that in the event there is any contract—I am not aware there is any—providing a different rate of compensation, this clause of the bill shall not interfere with it. I send these amendments to the Clerk's desk in the form of a substitute for the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For freight on bullion and coin between the mints and assay offices, and on coin from the mints to the offices of the Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States, $50,000: Provided, That the amount paid from moneys hereby appropriated for the transportation of gold coin from San Francisco to New York after the passage of this act shall not exceed one-fourth of 1 per cent., and for the transportation of silver 1 per cent., and for intermediate points at proportionate rates corresponding to the distance.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the provision for the transportation of silver includes the transportation of silver bullion or whether it is limited to silver coin?

Mr. HISCOCK. Transportation from what point?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The language of the clause is, "for the transportation of silver 1 per cent." I suppose that means from San Francisco to New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Is that for transportation of silver bullion as well as coin?

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not intended to apply to bullion. I will say in further explanation of this clause of the bill that it is not intended to cover the transportation of any coin or bullion from San Francisco to New York. But this limitation is put in the bill that in the event it should be used for that purpose there should be these limitations upon its use. But this is asked for by the Department solely for the transportation of bullion from New York City to Philadelphia.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will say to the chairman of the committee that this raises an old question which I do not propose now to discuss, the question of the expense of moving coin and bullion from the mints and distant depositories to those that are nearer by. An attempt was made in the Forty-fifth Congress to correct what seemed then to be extravagant expenditure. But this has gone on, and all that I now wish is that the bill itself shall specify clearly that this expense is limited to transportation of coin, and that it does not include the transportation of bullion, if that be the intention of the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I move an amendment after the word "silver" to insert the word "coin."

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to that amendment, and will make it part of my amendment. As thus modified, by inserting the word "coin" after the word "silver," I offer what the Clerk has read as a substitute for the paragraph.

The question being taken on the substitute as modified it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For constructing, repairing, enlarging, and renting vaults and safes for the use of the Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States $75,000,000.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out "$75,000" and inserting "$50,000."

This is the second or third appropriation that has been made by Congress for the purpose of storing the coins of this country, if I recollect aright. I desire to say that it is about time Congress should do something to stop this expense. The very object of coinage as I understand is that it may circulate. That is the great purpose of coin. Now we have in this country of the one and two dollar bills alone $50,000,000; we have of the fives and under $215,000,000 of paper money in circulation. The result of that is, as every one who has given attention to the question knows, that the paper drives out to that extent the coin. In other words, if the channels of circulation are filled with paper there is no place for the coin.

When resumption took place, a provision was made for retiring from circulation all national-bank notes under the denomination of $5, and from that day to this none of the smaller national-bank notes have been printed and circulated. But while small bank-notes under $5 have gone out of circulation, the Treasury Department has increased its circulation of ones and twos to the extent of millions of dollars.

Now, when we consider that we have a circulation in this country of $215,000,000 of bills of the denomination of $5 and under, so long as we make no room in the channels of circulation for the gold and silver we are coining, just so long will this demand be made upon us to erect safe vaults in which to keep our coin.

Now, if we are to strengthen our metallic circulation, our policy is to strike down and prevent the circulation of notes of denominations less than $10. I have heard it said that the people did not want this coin and did not seek it. I say that is a matter of education and habit entirely, as is proved by the fact that on the Pacific coast there is just as great difficulty in circulating paper as we have here in circulating gold and silver coin.

We acted wisely when we got rid of the fractional currency and substituted for it subsidiary silver coin. We acted wisely in requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem and destroy all that fractional currency. But we have adopted no such policy in regard to other notes, and the result is that we have now from $200,000,000 to $500,000,000 of coin in this country not doing any office of circulation at all, simply because of the fact that we have failed to provide a place for it in the circulation of the country.

Mr. HISCOCK. How much do you say?

Mr. BUCKNER. From $200,000,000 to $500,000,000 of gold and silver coin, which is performing no office in the circulation of the country, is stored away in the vaults of the Government and of banks, where it will never perform any office in circulation. And every year, as the gold and silver coin increases, we will be called upon to build vaults to keep it in.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he objects to the issuing of silver certificates?

Mr. BUCKNER. Does the gentleman want an answer to that question?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do object, and I could give my reasons for it.

Mr. ROBESON. Is there not a law on the statute-books which requires the issuing of silver certificates for silver bullion and coin?

Mr. BUCKNER. Not bullion.

Mr. ROBESON. Silver coin?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes.

Mr. ROBESON. Silver coin deposited in the mints and treasuries of the United States?

Mr. BUCKNER. There is.

Mr. ROBESON. Well, of all the silver coin now in the mints and treasuries of the United States, less than $5,000,000 is there unrepresented by silver certificates. There is about seventy-two million five hundred thousand dollars of silver coin in the vaults of the United States Treasury and in public depositories, and of that amount about sixty-nine million dollars, in round numbers, is represented by outstanding silver certificates, in accordance with laws which are now on the statute-book. And if the Treasury Department is to execute those laws it must have the vaults to hold the silver coin. This appropriation is to give the necessary money to construct the vaults.

which we do not now have, for the Committee on Appropriations is informed that silver coin is being rejected, contrary to law perhaps, in some parts of the country, simply because we have not the vaults in which to secure it.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman asked me a question. Will he allow me to ask him one?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. BUCKNER. If we were to pass a law forbidding the Treasury putting out anything in the shape of circulating notes of a less denomination than $5, would not my friend say that a large portion of this silver now represented by certificates would be used by the people?

Mr. HISCOCK. Not a dollar of it.

Mr. BUCKNER. How would they get along without it for change?

Mr. ROBESON. I believe that with a good dollar behind it a silver certificate is the best money the world has ever seen.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not a silver dollar a good dollar?

Mr. ROBESON. No, it is short of it.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. BUCKNER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I renew it for the purpose of saying that there has been a suspicion througout the country, and I think very well founded, that since the law authorizing the coinage of the standard silver dollar the Secretary of the Treasury has so shaped his financial rules and regulations as to prevent the circulation of that dollar. One evidence of his discrimination against that dollar is that he has constantly kept in circulation in this country one and two dollar bills, the effect of which has been to take the place of the silver dollar and to cause that dollar to be hoarded up in the vaults and silver certificates to be issued in lieu of it.

Now, it cannot be contended successfully by any one that, if the one and two dollar bills were withdrawn, the necessities of the case would not bring out the silver standard dollar. The country would be compelled to have it for use, no other dollar being in existence. Yet, in order to discriminate and make that dollar unpopular and lock it up in the vaults, the Secretary of the Treasury has continually kept in circulation one and two dollar bills. The consequence has been that silver certificates have been issued in lieu of silver dollars, and as long as we issue those certificates as a matter of course it is necessary to build vaults in which to keep the coin which those certificates represent. But in order to empty the vaults and let the silver dollars flow out, it is necessary to withdraw at least the one-dollar bills, if not the two-dollar bills. Then you will certainly see the vaults of the Treasury emptied and the silver dollar come into circulation.

Mr. WILLITS. Can the gentleman state what is the amount of one-dollar bills now out?

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman mean one and two dollar bills?

Mr. WILLITS. Well, yes; one and two dollar bills.

Mr. BLAND. I cannot give the gentleman the information.

Mr. BUCKNER. My colleague will allow me to state that the one and two dollar bills now out amount, according to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, to nearly $50,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. Let us say then that the amount is $50,000,000. Now we have about ten millions of silver dollars in the Treasury which are not represented by silver certificates. It has cost the Government not less than $300,000 to transport the silver dollars over the country to be returned for silver certificates. This expense would be obviated if the one and two dollar bills were withdrawn and the silver brought into circulation. My colleague [Mr. BUCKNER] is right when he says that in order to obviate this expense and bring the coin into circulation it is necessary to withdraw these one and two dollar bills. On the Pacific coast the people are accustomed to coin and prefer it to paper as a matter of habit. But in other parts of the country the people have become habituated to the use of paper money, to the use of these one and two dollar bills, and they prefer such money to coin and will use it so long as it is in circulation. But if these small notes be withdrawn from circulation and the coin allowed to flow among the people the habit of using the coin will be established; they will prefer it to paper, and all this trouble will be obviated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I find myself unable to agree with either of the gentlemen from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER and Mr. BLAND,] who have addressed the committee upon this question as to the relative advantage of the circulation of silver and the circulation of coin certificates. From the best investigation I have been able to give this subject, I am satisfied that it is more economical both to the Government and the people that the coin certificates rather than the coin itself should circulate. We have in round numbers $520,000,000 of coin, probably something more than that, in the country. Yesterday I examined for a few moments the work of Professor Jevons on the precious metals; and I find there that, according to an estimate made in the last century, the loss upon coin from abrasion and from the expense of minting from time to time and to keep the coin up to the standard amounted annually, taking gold and silver together, to one part in three hundred and sixty. Now if this estimate would hold good at the present time, and we take $520,000,000 as the present circulation of coin in this country, it would cost the people, counting the loss upon gold as well as silver, over a million and a half dollars a year from abrasion and to keep the coin up to the standard. Now, if the coin is deposited with the Government, I undertake to say that it will cost far less than this to keep up the paper certificates which represent that coin.

But this is not the only gain. The expense for transportations of coin, as everybody knows, is double and treble what it is for paper certificates; and in keeping up the exchanges, as is frequently necessary between the interior and the trade centers, large shipments of money must be made.

I therefore do not deplore the fact, on the contrary I am gratified, that the statement of the Treasurer shows that of this silver in the United States Treasury less than $5,000,000 of it in the vaults is unrepresented by coin certificates. As a matter of economy to the Government and economy to all the citizens of the country, I prefer to have the coin represented by certificates which circulate while the coin remains in the Treasury as a redemption fund. Hence I think the appropriation of $75,000 now asked in order to afford sufficient vault room for this purpose is a measure of economy; and I hope the amount will not be decreased.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BUCKNER. If these certificates are to continue to circulate, would it not as a question of economy be better that they should be issued upon the bullion without the expense of coining it?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that when that question comes up I am ready to meet it. I cannot discuss the whole monetary question in a minute. I will ask my friend from Missouri what he thinks about that?

Mr. BUCKNER. I say that if we adopt the policy which the gentleman from Illinois seems to favor, then we ought by all means to issue the certificates upon the bullion, not upon the coin.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to state that there is no proposition to make the silver certificates representing the coin a legal tender. Perhaps that could not be done under the Constitution, though the certificates are receivable for debts due to the Government. The simple question now is whether we shall provide suitable accommodation for keeping this silver, which under the law is represented by certificates and held to redeem the same.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the amendment is withdrawn, and in order to take the floor I will renew it.

I wish simply to make a brief reply to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] and that is as to why certificates for circulation as currency should be based upon coin instead of upon bullion. I do not object to bullion certificates to be issued for commercial purposes when they are desired, but I am opposed to their being issued for circulation as currency. The certificates of coin, as maintained by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] as I understood him, were to be put in circulation as currency. A Government certificate, dollar for dollar for coin in the vaults of the Treasury, would make, in my judgment, the best currency in the world. It would suit the exigency of this day and age. We are beyond that period of civilization when it is desired to receive or pass in business transactions coin, either silver or gold, which is still much more inconvenient for settlement of balances at a distance. We want the equivalent of coin, but not the coin itself; or, in other words, we want that which answers the purpose dollar for dollar. If you issue certificates for bullion you cannot get for them coin, dollar for dollar, which is what the people of this country want—what the mercantile people, the farmers, and those of all occupations want throughout the length and breadth of the country.

Mr. BUCKNER. Make the law provide they should be redeemed in dollars at the same rate as now.

Mr. STEPHENS. We want no rate about it. We have already certificates of gold bullion. These certificates are, however, not for coin, and are not fitted for circulation as money. What the country wants are certificates based upon coin.

Mr. BUCKNER. I suppose there will be no trouble whatever to give a certificate for the amount that the bullion is worth?

Mr. STEPHENS. That would imply and require an estimate. It would not be a certificate dollar for dollar, but for a dollar's worth, to be estimated, not in coin, but in bullion. I want the farmers, the merchants, the tradesmen, and the laborer in every capacity or character to be relieved from the trouble of making an estimate. They want dollar for dollar when they call for it without estimate, but upon a single count and hand over.

Mr. SPRINGER. We authorize the issue of certificates of gold bullion.

Mr. STEPHENS. We do, but these certificates are not intended to circulate as currency or money. They are used advantageously for many commercial purposes, and I have no objection to like certificates for silver bullion to be used in the same way; but what I am now speaking of are silver and gold, or, in other words, coin certificates, dollar for dollar, to be used for circulation as money. In this way you save the coin from wear and tear, you get rid of the weight and inconvenience of metal, and have all the advantages of coin by having its representative without the inconvenience or expense of transportation. This is true as to small amounts as well as large.

I am for the unlimited coinage of silver as well as of gold, and for the gold and silver to be kept in the vaults of the Treasury, and these certificates so issued to constitute the currency of the country, convertible at any time at the pleasure of the holder into coin, dollar for dollar. This is what I say would be the best currency in the world.

Mr. SPRINGER. The law now authorizes certificates to be issued for gold bullion but not for silver bullion. The gentleman from Missouri and others wish the law to apply to both metals alike, and to provide for silver and gold bullion certificates.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have replied to that. I was specifically answering the question which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] put to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] and showing him that what the gentleman from Illinois was advocating was entirely a different thing from that which he was proposing. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was advocating the view I am presenting, that is to issue certificates for coin which are to circulate as currency. As I have already stated, I do not object to certificates for bullion, silver as well as gold. They can answer and fulfill one function; the other is, in my judgment, however, the great step in currency which the people of this country should now take—that is, to issue certificates for coin, gold and silver, to circulate as currency. That is all I have to say.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the tendency throughout commercial nations of the world is toward the use of representative money, convenient, personal, and commercial. Economy leads to the adoption of representative money. The transactions of the Bank of England, indeed I may say the banks of England, are performed with less than 2 per cent. of metallic money.

Checks, drafts, and bills are used by the people. Without the use of certificates and notes this Government, or the people, would be losing more than $2,000,000 by mere abrasion. The loss of a coin in deep water or elsewhere is an absolute loss, and, so far as it affects the metallic money of the world, is a loss to the world. The loss of representative money is the loss of the individual who loses it, and does not go beyond. What the note, check, or draft represented remains in the hands of somebody.

Let me illustrate by allusion to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.] He felicitated the country on having substituted silver for fractional currency. We pay $2,500,000 a year interest on the 5 per cent. bonds issued for the purchase of the material out of which to make our silver fractional currency; and by the time those bonds mature the fifteen millions of silver will be well nigh worn out. Our fractional currency was a great source of revenue to the Post-Office by reason of its great convenience to the people. One establishment, whose business was generally conducted for sums under $1, represented to this House that its loss would be thousands of dollars a year. Its memorial came through General Butler, of Massachusetts. I think it dealt in seeds. Its orders came for from ten to sixty and seventy cents, and fractional currency was inclosed. When we had substituted silver at the cost of two and a half millions of interest for material, operations of that kind could not be made. You cannot with safety or convenience send coin through the mail. So I know of another house in Philadelphia, largely engaged in the publication of pamphlets on economic and kindred subjects, for two or three years, until it could organize agencies, had its business materially impaired by the substitution of costly silver fractional currency for convenient paper currency. Now, sir, the silver, by reason of absolute loss, by reason of abrasion, is shrinking away and at the expense of the Government, for as fractional silver is not of standard value even with the standard silver dollar, the Government must provide it, while there are fifteen millions of fractional notes outstanding for which nobody will ever call for redemption. The loser loses them, but with silver the loser loses as much and the Government loses a like sum. I do not see the economy or convenience of it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. Then I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia. I have never been, Mr. Chairman, more impressed with the changes of sentiment concerning many of the financial questions that have from time to time arisen in this country and in this House than I have been this morning with the change of sentiment which this debate indicates. Less than two years ago there were standing upon that side of the House not less than a score of Representatives—Democratic Representatives—who were decrying constantly the action of the Secretary of the Treasury, and decrying also the national banking corporations for withholding as far as possible the issuance of the one and two dollar notes. That was the subject of grievous complaint on this floor by prominent members of the Democratic party. The claim was made here, and advocated constantly in this House, that the Republican administration was taking out of the hands of the people—the poor people—of the United States its fractional currency (as stated by my friend from Pennsylvania) and also these one and two dollar notes. But in less than two years, Mr. Chairman, equally prominent Democratic Representatives, I do not know but what they are the same persons, stand upon this floor and criticise a Republican administration and call attention to Republican legislation and Republican delinquency for not destroying these very same one and two dollar greenback notes—the most remarkable change of political sentiment that I have ever witnessed since I have been a member of this body.

Then, again, Mr. Chairman, less than two years ago the Democratic party brought in a bill here to compel the redemption of fractional silver coin. The older members of this House will recollect that bill providing that every quarter, half-dollar, and dime, whether presented in small or large quantities, should be redeemed in greenbacks or gold coin.

I stood upon this floor, sir, for a solid hour when that question for the redemption of fractional coin was up. I insisted that every street-railway line throughout the country, that every small business house throughout the length and breadth of the land, ought to be charged with the duty of pushing out among the people this fractional silver.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HASKELL. Not now.

That was the policy that I advocated then. I held that it was the money of the poor man, the money of the bootblack, the money of the laborer; that there could not be too much fractional silver in circulation among the people, and that to pass this bill for the retirement of that small silver coin would be to take it from the people and lock it up in the Treasury vaults.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the gentleman now permit me to correct him?

Mr. HASKELL. Wait a moment.

Mr. Chairman, that Democratic measure compelling the retirement of the fractional coin has produced exactly the result that two years ago I claimed it would work out. Over $20,000,000 of that currency have been taken from the people, and that sum is locked up in the Treasury vaults to-day under the operation of that law; and the House is called upon to take into consideration the absolute necessity of building vaults to contain that $20,000,000 of the people's money that Democratic financiers succeeded in taking from the circulation of the country and locking up in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does the gentleman not know——

Mr. HASKELL. I cannot yield. I have but five minutes.

Mr. COX, of New York. And does not the gentleman know that fractional currency was got rid of by a measure affecting subsidiary silver——

Mr. HASKELL. I have not time to yield.

Mr. COX, of New York. You have not stated the matter correctly.

Mr. HASKELL. I have no time to yield to the gentleman.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate on this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to say a word or two further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does not the gentleman know that it was a Democratic measure——

Mr. HASKELL. Well, now, if the Democratic side of the House will listen and let me get through, I will show the gentleman from New York that I have stated it correctly.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let me say to the gentleman that I introduced that bill myself, and I know what it was. He has not stated the matter correctly.

Mr. HASKELL. I am not talking about fractional currency.

Mr. COX, of New York. You are talking about silver change.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of moving in the House to close debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto.

Mr. STEPHENS. Before that is done I should like to have two or three minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I prefer to go back to the House, that the House may fix some time within which this debate shall be closed, and then the gentleman from Georgia shall have his opportunity.

Mr. STEPHENS. Perhaps in that case I will not have the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope in that case the gentleman will obtain the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. I also should like a portion of the time.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 80, noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4221) being the urgent deficiency bill; and, pending that motion, I move that all debate upon the pending clause of the bill and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Say half an hour.

Mr. HISCOCK. I adhere to my motion.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was also agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. BAYNE in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield five minutes of that time to my colleague, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. BLAND. I do not understand that the gentleman from New York controls the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me three minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not wish to assume the prerogative of controlling the floor, but I was endeavoring to distribute the time equally between the two sides. I am entirely willing that that shall be done by the Chairman.

Mr. CHALMERS. I rise to a point of order. Is it not the custom that the Chairman shall make a list of who are to speak?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a list which it will follow as much as possible. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS.]

Mr. CHALMERS. I move to strike out the last word.

My attention was attracted by the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] that he was in favor of silver certificates, provided there was a good dollar behind them. Now I ask that gentleman's attention to the fact that the word "dollar" does not represent a natural product; it does not represent anything in science; but the word "dollar" derives its meaning from the statute laws of the United States or of such other countries as use the term. I call the gentleman's attention further to the fact that from 1792 until 1873 there never was any definition of the word "dollar" to be found in our statute-books except that which describes the standard silver dollar of 412½ grains. By what right, then, does the gentleman from New Jersey, or any other gentleman, undertake to say that the 412½-grain silver dollar is not a good dollar? His intimation was that he was a silver man, but he required a silver certificate to represent a good dollar. I stand with the gentleman upon that proposition and I say the good dollar is that which is defined to be a dollar by law and nothing else.

In 1873, for the first time in the history of our country, you find a gold dollar is defined to be 25.8 grains of gold. Never until that statute was there any law defining a gold dollar. In 1849, when the first gold dollar was coined, the statute says a gold dollar shall be of the value of a dollar. What was the value of a dollar then? Four hundred and twelve and one-half grains of silver. There never had been any other definition of the word "dollar."

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. Is there any statute which defines what a good dollar is?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes, sir; the statute of 1792 defined what a good dollar was. The statute of 1873 defines what a good dollar is. The statute of 1873 makes a double dollar in this country—either 412½ grains of silver or 25.8 of gold. Either of these is a good dollar now, because the law says either is a legal tender for its nominal value. The gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. ROBESON. Before the gentleman leaves me I desire to say until there is some law on the statute-book which forbids me having my own opinion of what is a good dollar I shall abide by my own opinion.

Mr. CHALMERS. But the gentleman, being a good citizen, is always bound to obey the law; and when the law says what a good dollar is, he should not disobey that law. As a law-abiding man he should obey the law.

I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that his argument against the silver coinage is as good against gold coinage as against silver coinage. There is as much abrasion of one as the other. His argument also in favor of the paper currency, when he said that when lost it was a loss to the individual and not to the Government, presented to me what seemed a very singular proposition. My idea of a government is that it is composed of individuals; that the citizens of a government go to make up that government; and I cannot appreciate that kind of political economy which says that the citizens may be losers, and yet the government suffer nothing. I cannot understand the nice distinction which the gentleman draws whereby he would argue in favor of a currency which will bring a loss upon individual citizens and claim it is no loss to the Government as a whole.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. STEPHENS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not wish to interfere with my friend from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] but I feel it necessary to say that there are two dollars by law in this country; the one a gold dollar of 25.8 grains, and the other a silver dollar of 412½ grains of silver; that the silver dollar is only worth 87½ per cent. of the gold dollar in the markets of the world.

Mr. BUCKNER. Measured by gold.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It is worth 87½ per cent. of the gold dollar, measured in the markets of the world.

Mr. BUCKNER. In gold.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Measured in the markets of the world. The law compels the Treasury to coin $2,000,000 per month of these 87½ per cent. dollars, to purchase the bullion and coin these dollars for purposes of commerce. But commerce, wiser than Congress, rejects the inferior dollar, will have nothing to do with it, and demands the dollar of commerce, the dollar of the world, which is the gold dollar.

Hence it is that these inferior, cheap, and cheating dollars are piled up in the Treasury; and unless this Government is prepared to give them away, or allow them to be taken away by the first comer, we will be compelled to vote and will vote from year to year the money necessary to build vaults in which to keep them safe from the thief and the burglar.

How long is this to go on? It was predicted when the bill authorizing the silver dollar was brought into this House that those dollars would not circulate. I told the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the only way to make them circulate was to withdraw the one and two dollar bills and to compel the public to take what they did not want. Why do the public prefer the one and two dollar bills? Simply because they are the most convenient instruments of trade and exchange. Why should Congress undertake to say to the people of the country, You shall not have convenient instruments of exchange?

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri. I would like the gentleman to tell the House when the silver dollar was ever any other than it is now.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not know why I should be interrupted by the gentleman to ask that question. He knows as well as I do; if not, he can refer to the statute.

The fact is there is but one standard of value under the law as it stands. The statute declares that the standard of value in the United States is the gold dollar of 25.8 grains. We have undertaken to give the silver dollar of 412½ grains equal value with the gold dollar of 25.8 grains. It is an effort on the part of the Government to regulate values. It is fiat money in its worst shape.

For that reason I trust the attention of Congress and of the people of this country will be drawn to the fact that the coinage of two millions of silver dollars per month is eating into the circulation of the country like a cancer, and will depreciate it until it is debased by the amount of 12½ per cent., and all the transactions of commerce will be subject to the daily fluctuations which occur in the market value of silver bullion.

If the coinage of silver goes on with the steady accretion of $2,000,000 per month there can be but one result: we shall store it until the load of dead capital becomes too heavy to be carried, when it will force its way into circulation in the disguise of silver certificates, and in accordance with Gresham's law drive the gold out of the country. We shall thereafter do business upon the basis of a silver currency, fluctuating in value with every variation in the English market, paying a brokerage or commission on every commercial transaction, and often causing heavy losses on future transactions. The embarrassments to commerce and trade will be incalculable, and until we restore the gold standard we shall be out of harmony with the laws of trade, restricting its transactions, and depriving our industrial army of the just reward of its labors. [Here the hammer fell.] I do not wish to deprive the people of this country of silver dollars to the extent they are willing to use them. I would give them all the silver dollars they want, and I would let them substitute these dollars for paper to the full extent of their wishes; but I would not force them into circulation just as I would refrain from forcing any subsidiary coins into circulation beyond the absolute wants of the people. I have no prejudice against silver, and I would employ it whenever and wherever it is a convenient or desirable tool of commerce. It has fallen in value because other and better instruments of exchange have taken its place in the general exchanges of the world. Gold itself is no longer so necessary as it was, and is mainly required to pay balances between nations. So long as there is enough for this purpose it will always go where it is most worth, and silver will not take its place either as coin or bullion, except as merchandise, and at such value as it may bear as merchandise in the markets of the world. Gold has become the standard of value not by the laws of man but by the development of industry, trade, and of rapid communication by steam and electricity.

The monetary death of silver, except for local and subsidized purposes, has been registered by the inexorable decree of progress, and our legislation cannot arrest the inevitable result that the business of the world shall rest hereafter upon one standard, and that standard must be the most valuable, which is gold.

The sooner we retrace our steps and suspend the coinage of silver dollars the less the final loss and embarrassment will be. It is now nearly certain that the last hope of the bimetallists is gone. The Paris conference will probably not reassemble in April, and the cry will then be "sauve qui peut," "devil take the hindmost." The friends of bimetallism are all anxious that we shall suspend the coinage of silver dollars. We should take them at their word, and not incur any more of the inevitable loss which will steadily increase if we persist in the blind policy of coining money for which there is no more use than there is for its equivalent value in pig-iron.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARSH. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Further debate on the pending amendment is out of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last three words, and will yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] withdraw his amendment?

Mr. CHALMERS. I do.

Mr. MARSH. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in charge of this bill, is recognized by the Chair, and he moves to strike out the last three words and yields his time to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MARSH. I make the point of order that that cannot be done under the five-minute rule; that the gentleman cannot claim the floor and yield his five minutes to another. However I may be indisposed to antagonize my friend from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] I do not think he is in order, especially when gentlemen were on the floor ahead of him demanding recognition of the Chair upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] will be recognized hereafter.

Mr. MARSH. I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York cannot claim the time and yield it to another.

The CHAIRMAN. That point is overruled.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. That has been the constant practice in Committee of the Whole during the last three sessions of Congress that I have been here; it has been done repeatedly.

Mr. MARSH. And done, too, in face of the rules.

Mr. BRIGGS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRIGGS. I supposed when we commenced the consideration of this bill that it was a deficiency appropriation bill, but it seems to be a bill to restore the deficiency of the silver dollar. Is that the purport of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is scarcely a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] and also in reply to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.] The gentleman from New York says that we have but one standard or good dollar, as he terms it, in this country. That is true, as he argues; but how did it come to be so?

From time immemorial gold and silver were money among the civilized nations of the earth. From the earliest settlement of this country gold and silver were both money, holding certain relations to each other as to quantity. It was so in the Revolution; it was so afterwards, when in 1792 the unit was fixed by law. That unit was silver, not gold, and silver in the same quantity or value as is now the standard silver dollar of the United States.

When did the change take place? It was in 1873, when that fell blow of Congress was aimed and stricken at silver. Silver was then stricken from the list of money in the United States. Why is the silver dollar, as the gentleman says, now held at a depreciation? It was because you degraded it; because you struck it from the list of money, struck from it its debt-paying and purchasing power.

Was not silver in 1873, when that act of Congress passed, at a premium? It was. And what have we now to do to restore it to its former dignity and clothe it with all its ancient majesty and power, except to declare it equal in all respects with gold as your fathers did? When you do this, your silver dollar will be restored just as it was, and will be perhaps at a premium.

One word in reply to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.] My advocacy two years ago and before of the redemption of the subsidiary silver coin—the quarter-dollars and half-dollars—was because that coinage is a cheat—I mean no disrespect; a great fraud upon the laboring millions of this country was perpetrated in its issue—a debased coinage. These subsidiary coins, so called, are short of standard weight. Their issuance was no better than an act for clipping the coin. They are a debased coinage. Moreover, by the law providing for its issue, this subsidiary coin is not receivable in the payment of debts, taxes, internal revenue, or postage in sums larger than $5. I was therefore in favor of redeeming it, and taking it up and issuing in lieu of it silver coin of the standard value of 412½ grains of silver to the dollar. Our country has presented the strange anomaly of having 420 grains of standard silver in what was known as the "trade-dollar;" yet when the honest farmer or mechanic or laborer had taken this dollar, believing it to be good, because it had upon it the American eagle and the stamp of the Government, he was obliged to take it to a broker and submit to the loss of 10 or 15 per cent. discount. That was, and is still, a shame to the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. STEPHENS. Three minutes is all I ask.

[Cries of "Go on!"]

The CHAIRMAN. If unanimous consent be given, additional time will be accorded to the gentleman.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object. We have limited the debate on this subject to twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. Have the twenty minutes expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes have expired; five minutes remain; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] is recognized.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, I sought the floor a few moments ago to reply to some propositions submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] which I thought were calculated to mislead the House and mislead the country as to the facts connected with this coinage of silver and its status as money.

The gentleman has stated that the gold dollar is the standard and the only standard of value in this country. Mr. Chairman, if he had been desirous that the people who might read his remarks should know the truth and the whole truth he would have stated that the silver dollar, containing the same amount of pure silver that it contains to-day, was the original unit of value established by the coinage act of Congress in 1792, by which the amount of bullion put into the gold coins from time to time by act of Congress was regulated. That silver dollar continued as the unit from the earliest coinage act of this Government in 1792 down to 1873, when the law was passed which I have charged on this floor and which the country believes was fraudulently passed through Congress—the law which dropped from the coinage the silver dollar—the law by which the gold dollar was made the unit and the standard of value. In the Forty-fifth Congress a successful effort was made here to re-establish the coinage of the silver dollar; but an ineffectual effort was made to constitute it the unit and standard of value, as it had existed from 1792 until 1873.

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. MARSH. No, sir, I have not the time or I would gladly do so. It is time this House should know, it is time the country should understand that this cry against the silver dollar as being a fraudulent dollar is false in fact and untrue in principle. The silver dollar until the act of 1873 was passed was always the unit and standard of value; and when the gold dollar was authorized by the act of 1852 or the act of 1848 (my memory does not enable me to name the date with certainty) the amount of gold to be placed in that dollar was regulated according to the value of the gold bullion as measured by the silver dollar.

The gentleman says that the silver dollar does not circulate; that it is a dishonored dollar; that it is not received in the commercial circles of the country; and he makes this assertion in face of the fact universally known that there are thousands and tens of thousands of silver dollars circulating where there is one gold dollar.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move as an amendment to the pending clause the provision which I send to the desk. I have a right to move an amendment although not to debate it. I regret that I cannot debate it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "fine," in line 35, and inserting at the end of the line the following:

"Provided, That the holders of silver bullion, 900 fine or over, may deposit the same with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in quantities of 1,000 ounces troy or over, and receive the market value thereof in certificates of not less than $20 each, corresponding with the denominations of the United States notes. Such certificates shall be payable, on demand, in coin or United States notes, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and public dues, and when received may be reissued. Any gain or seigniorage arising from the deposit or coinage of bullion deposited under the provisions of this act shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury under existing laws relating to subsidiary coinage. The bullion so deposited shall be coined at the several mints of the United States, as rapidly as can be done consistent with economy, and without interfering with the coinage of gold and silver as now provided by law."

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a point of order upon this amendment. First, it is new legislation and is offensive, under Rule XXI, as not being in the line of the reduction of expenditures; second, it is not germane; and third, I imagine—although I do not know the fact—that it is the substance of another bill pending before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not before the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, at any rate, it is new legislation changing existing law, and is not germane.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say a word on the point of order. If the Chairman will look at the first clause of the amendment he will see it reduces the amount to the extent of $5,000, and then it provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may receive bullion on deposit and issue certificates therefor. The proposition, therefore, is certainly germane. This being an appropriation to provide for building vaults in which to store coin, the provision of the amendment furnishes bullion to put into those vaults when they are constructed. [Laughter.] What are you going to put into these vaults if you do not put silver bullion into them? And this is to put into the vaults which the appropriation provides for the bullion. There can be no necessity for the appropriation unless you have bullion to put into the vaults after they are built. The amendment, therefore, reduces the expenditure to the amount of $5,000, and furnishes something to put into the vaults after they have been constructed. If you will turn to the third paragraph of Rule XXI you will find my amendment is germane, as it retrenches expenditures. It is not one of the bills pending before this House. I will read section 4 of Rule XXI:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

This is not the substance of any bill pending before the House, so far as I know and believe, but it is the substance of a bill pending in the Senate, introduced there by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, which has been carefully prepared, and I hope the gentleman from New York will give his vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is out of order, as it changes existing law. It enacts a new provision of law. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SPRINGER. But it may change existing law, under the rule, if it reduces expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. It does reduce expenditures and it does change existing law, and the rule says that if it retrenches expenditure the point of order does not lie against it if it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. It changes existing law and makes an appropriation to carry into effect that proposed change. It diverts an appropriation from the purpose to which it is now applied by the bill. Obviously, it is not in order for both reasons.

Mr. SPRINGER. Differing from the Chair on his ruling, but not desiring to delay the House in its action, I will not take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of schools not otherwise provided for, $50,000.

Mr. RYAN. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting after the word "for," in line 73, the words "including schools for freedmen in the Indian Territory."

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on that amendment, but am willing to withhold it if the gentleman wishes to be heard upon his amendment.

Mr. RYAN. The amendment does not change in any respect the amount here appropriated. It has been moved at the instance of the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There are some schools for freedmen in the Indian Territory supported by the Government, and it is necessary a portion of the sum here appropriated should be used for that purpose; but it cannot be used unless the amendment I have suggested be adopted. And that is all there is of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt the object is a good one. A large part of the appropriations here are not in pursuance of treaty stipulations. Our obligations toward a large portion of the Indians, so far as treaties are concerned, have expired. Yet, sir, from year to year we are continuing appropriations as though those obligations were still in existence.

What is the proposition here? It is not only to provide for Indians who occupy a peculiar relation to the country, but to provide for freedmen in the Indian Territory. I think it is traveling outside. If there is any purpose to provide generally for this education I am willing to take as broad ground as the gentleman, but I object to legislating in their behalf by piecemeal.

Mr. RYAN. This is not new legislation we are entering upon, but it is what the Government has been doing for years. During the last fiscal year $3,500 was used for this purpose. There were only fourteen schools, having an average of twenty scholars to each school. The Government having maintained those schools, having them now in operation, we must either include this provision, so the Department may continue to maintain them, or we must cut them off at once.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does this amendment take it out of the Indian fund?

Mr. RYAN. The proposition I make takes it out of this appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is what I suppose, and I do not see why, if you are going to do this thing at all, it should not be extended over the whole country instead of being confined to one Territory.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist on a decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has not yet stated his point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. My point of order is that there is no authority of law for this. As the law now stands, the gentleman himself has stated unless his amendment be adopted enlarging one of the Departments of the Government these schools cannot be continued.

Mr. RYAN. In answer to that, allow me to say that it is a continuing appropriation. We have been maintaining these schools for years by annual appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman from Kansas say that an appropriation made one year, because it happens to be repeated the next year, becomes a continuing appropriation?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir; for that specific object.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not so held by the Treasury Department, and I have never known it so held in this House before.

Mr. RYAN. Allow me to call your attention to the clause of the rule:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Here, these schools are in progress. They are supported by the Government by appropriations made in the past. I think that fully covers the point as to this being a continuing appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman says that because the Government appropriated money for this purpose last year and the preceding year, therefore it becomes a continuing appropriation; that the Government is committed thereby absolutely to this matter, and therefore it is not subject to the point of order. That is the doctrine the gentleman holds.

Now the gentleman from Kansas is compelled to give a very broad construction to the meaning of an appropriation which may be repeated in order to sustain his peculiar position; and he and the Committee on Appropriations will find themselves very much embarrassed in the conduct of the appropriation bill if such a strained construction is resorted to. Only the other day we had a similar case, when the Post-Office appropriation bill was up for consideration. The Saint Louis bridge case was brought up in that connection, and it was alleged that because we had been paying a certain sum, under the law, for transportation of the mails across that bridge, therefore it was held to be a continuing appropriation; but, very properly, that construction was ruled out, and it was held not to be a continuing appropriation.

Mr. RYAN. Was the point of order made upon it?

Mr. BLOUNT. The point of order was made, and it was held to be otherwise than a continuing appropriation.

Now, here is a question very different from the case where the Government has commenced the construction of a public building, which was incomplete, and you go on and appropriate until you complete it, or when a fortification has been commenced, and you go on and appropriate year after year until that is completed. But where is there to be an end of this appropriation? No period can be fixed for its completion. The gentleman from Kansas says that there are ten of these schools. According to his construction, it is competent to take the ten, or fourteen, or whatever number you may have there, and we are compelled, under his construction, to continue appropriating for all time, until the law is changed. If we are going to do anything in that direction for the freedmen of the country, I will go as far as the gentleman or anybody else. But I do object to its being done in this piecemeal fashion. I am willing to meet gentlemen on the other side in the very broadest propositions for the purpose of elevating the freedmen in this country; but I am not willing to take a few schools in the Territories and give them benefits and advantages which are denied to other people all over the land.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the duty of this bill is to provide for deficiencies. It does not appear to the Chair that there is a deficiency in the matter of freedmen's schools in the Territories, and consequently this amendment is not germane to this bill. Moreover, it seems to the Chair that there is no authority of law, at least none has been produced so far, authorizing the expenditure of money for this purpose; and if there be any authority of law for the expenditure, it would be improper to tax upon a deficiency bill an appropriation intended to meet future necessities. The Chair holds that the amendment under these circumstances is not germane; that in the case of a deficiency bill like this it is not proper to incorporate an item of appropriation which would properly fall within some of the regular appropriation bills for the next fiscal year. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules that the amendment is not admissible.

Mr. RYAN. I will suggest one word by way of correction as to what the Chair has stated, and then I shall not insist upon the amendment. I simply wish to say that the schools are in operation and there is a deficiency, because if this appropriation is not allowed the schools must stop.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question upon this deficiency. I want to bring before the committee, through the gentleman from Kansas, who is familiar with the question, what sum has been appropriated for these schools in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee propose an amendment?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir. I propose an amendment to strike out this whole section appropriating $50,000 for this purpose. And in that connection I want to ask the gentleman what sum has been appropriated for the purpose mentioned in this bill. I ask the gentleman from Kansas because he is familiar with the subject and can inform the committee, no doubt, what has been heretofore appropriated for the education of these Indians.

Mr. RYAN. My amendment had reference only to the freedmen's schools in the Territory.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not speaking now of the amendment, but of the substantive proposition contained in the bill. I have moved to strike out $50,000 intended for the support of these schools for the education of Indian children, and I desire to bring before the committee what amount was appropriated during the last fiscal year for this purpose.

Mr. RYAN. There was appropriated $85,000 in the last fiscal year for this item, and in addition to that there was——

Mr. ATKINS. Twenty thousand dollars additional taken from the civilization fund.

Mr. RYAN. Yes, $20,000 from the fund known as the civilization fund, and added to that item. The year before last $75,000 was appropriated for this item, and about eighty thousand dollars was taken from the civilization fund and added to it. We made the expenditure under the item for that year. The $50,000 which we now add to the $20,000 which was taken for this year does not, I think, exceed the expenditure of last year. I believe it is some five or six thousand dollars less.

Mr. ATKINS. I simply desire to say with regard to this appropriation that I believe this is money thrown away. I believe that money spent in any attempt to educate the Indians in the Territories, is money thrown away; and I do not believe this House should make an appropriation of $50,000 in addition to the amount already appropriated for the current year to be expended in that way. If we want to educate the Indians, better bring them from the Territories and place them in the States, at the Carlisle school or some other school, and educate them there and then send them out as civilizers in their own tribes. But to attempt to educate them there in the Territories, it has been proven by some of these agents, has been practically to throw the money away. I hope the paragraph will be stricken out.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say a single word in reply to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois. I have no doubt but what a certain sum of money can be expended judiciously on education among certain tribes of Indians. Those Indians that are brought to the Carlisle school for education it is intended shall be used in the future as teachers. The schools that are maintained in the tribes are where they have so far adopted agricultural pursuits that it is deemed wise on the part of the Government to carry on the education of the children there in connection with their parents. There is no doubt that in some tribes where the attempt has been made it has been a failure. But to strike out this appropriation here and now would simply be a revolution in the system which has been adopted by the Government for years, a system which was adopted certainly with the approval of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee in the appropriations which were reported to this House by his committee in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses.

Mr. ATKINS. It is never too late to mend.

Mr. HISCOCK. And whatever may be said for or against the policy, this is no time to agitate the question here upon a deficiency bill. Perhaps, when the Indian appropriation bill comes in, which makes appropriations for the next fiscal year, this question may receive that consideration which the House may deem it wise to give to it. But I appeal to my friend from Tennessee that in appropriating a deficiency for the current year for carrying on the schools for the current year, this is no time for the agitation of a question of that sort.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to offer as an additional paragraph the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 74.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 74 these words:

"For telegraphing and making purchase of Indian supplies: To contract for the Indian service advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, inspection, and all other expense connected therewith, including telegraphing, $10,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that upon an investigation made by the sub-committee having in charge the Indian appropriation bill this has been found to be necessary. It has not been before the full committee, but I believe the amendment is one which ought to be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

PENSION OFFICE.

For the payment of the clerical force in the Pension Office for the remainder of the current fiscal year, $75,000, including $600 as additional salary to the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, and $500 as additional salary to the chief clerk of the Pension Office.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on the latter part of this clause:

Including $600 as additional salary to the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, and $500 as additional salary to the chief clerk of the Pension Office.

It is very evident that is not a deficiency. These are salaries fixed by law for the current year, and this, as I understand it, is a proposition to increase the salary now allowed by law.

Mr. HISCOCK. In this case I yield to the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia. These items were put in the bill because, especially with reference to one of them, it was believed it was just the appropriation should be made. But I say with great frankness it would be an amendment of the appropriation bill for the present current year, and I have no doubt the point of order is well taken.

Mr. ATKINS. The total should be changed.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to say, with regard to the Deputy Commissioner, that appropriation was put in to pay this officer for the work which he did during the sickness of President Garfield, when, although he held the office and did the work, he could not get his commission and draw his pay.

Mr. ATKINS. Has the total been changed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will change the total.

Mr. HORR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] if he insists on the point of order after the explanation of the gentleman from New Jersey? To do so would be to inflict an injustice on this officer. This is an actual deficiency, an accident having prevented the man from getting his pay for the work which he performed.

Mr. BLOUNT. The merits are not under discussion.

Mr. ROBESON. All right.

Mr. REED. I think unless the gentleman from Georgia makes an explanation he does an injustice to himself.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Georgia can take care of himself. I am opposed to any attempt in an appropriation bill to increase salaries.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman from New Jersey says this is to pay a man who did work, and owing to the illness of President Garfield did not get his salary.

Mr. BLOUNT. And this is not the proper shape to put it in.

Mr. REED. What difference does it make what shape it is put in, if it gets through?

Mr. McKINLEY. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, as the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has been sustained, and that portion of the paragraph ruled out of order.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to amend the pending paragraph by increasing the amount appropriated by $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the clerical force in the Pension Office for the remainder of the current fiscal year, $173,900.

Mr BROWNE, Mr. Chairman, it is to be regretted that deficiency bills ever become necessary. Our annual appropriations should always be equal to the wants of the Government, and a true economy requires that every department should be provided with the means necessary to make it efficient. It is as much the duty of Congress to make prompt and adequate appropriations as it is that of the public officer to keep his expenditures within the sum given him. The most profligate expenditure is the inadequate one—the one that gives but a starved and crippled public service. Economy is not to be measured only by the sum of money appropriated, for the most important factor in the problem is how much and what kind of service will the expenditure secure? In reaching a correct conclusion we must consider as well the quantity and quality of the labor as the price we pay. That which costs the least is not necessarily the cheapest.

I believe that to be economy which, at the least cost, will secure to the people the best, most prompt and honest discharge of official duty. Niggardliness is no less hurtful to the Republic than profligacy. These observations are general, and are simply introductory to the subject I propose to briefly discuss. There is no actual deficiency in the appropriations for the support of the Pensions Bureau; but to continue the present clerical force until the end of the present fiscal year and to maintain its efficiency will require an appropriation, to be made immediately available, of some seventy-five thousand dollars. The force of that office might be cut down and a deficiency avoided, but such action would be at the expense of sound economy and a due regard to the public interests. When the present Commissioner took charge of the Pension Office there were in its employ seven hundred and eighty-four persons, a force larger than could be kept without creating a very large deficiency. To avoid this, something over one hundred employés were discharged, reducing the number of clerks to six hundred and seventy-five. At about this number the clerical force has been maintained up to this time.

Sir, I will not only vote the money necessary to make up this deficiency, but I will, at the proper time, support a measure providing for a large increase of the force of employés for this bureau. I hope to show such an increase necessary, that its employment will give the long delayed claimant a less tardy justice and will save millions to the Treasury.

Up to January 1, 1882, there had been filed 795,201 original pension claims. Of these, 454,363 have been allowed, and 73,001 rejected. To-day, sir, there are 266,383 claims unadjudicated, many of which have been pending in the Pension Office for years. We are adding to this huge number of untried cases at the rate of 2,500 each month. During the six months immediately preceding the 1st of January, the average monthly receipts of original claims was 2,710. When will the end come? When will the last of these claims be tried, and the business of this great and expensive bureau close?

Every claimant who has a demand against the Government is entitled to justice without delay. If our present system of passing on pension claims is tardy, if it obstructs their trial and delays their payment, we ought to reform it without hesitation. I repeat the question, When may we hope to reach the end of this pension business? Sir, during the months of October, November, December, and January just past, there were adjudicated by the Pension Bureau a total of 18,517 claims, or a monthly average of 4,629 cases. Now if we were actually cutting down the volume of these claims, at this rate it would be equal to an annual reduction of 55,548 cases, and we could settle the last claim in a little less than five years. But we are not reducing the number of pending claims by 55,000 each year, for although we adjust over 4,600 per month, the places of 2,500 of these are immediately occupied by new claims.

From July 1, 1861, to January 1, 1882, a period of twenty-one years and six months, we closed 527,000 cases, or an average of about 25,000 per year. As stated a few moments since, we have now on hand 266,000 untried cases. Under existing methods—making the progress we are now making only—we have ten or eleven years of hard work still remaining for the Pension Office to do. I make this statement with a knowledge of the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions, for whose judgment I have the highest respect, believes it possible with his present force to adjudicate all cases now pending, as well as those that may hereafter be filed, within a period of six years. The President states the case as follows in his message to Congress:

As has been stated, with the present force of the Pension Bureau, six hundred and seventy-five clerks, it is estimated that it will take six years to dispose of the claims now pending.

It is stated by the Commissioner of Pensions that by an addition of two hundred and fifty clerks (increasing the adjudicating force rather than the mechanical) double the amount of work could be accomplished, so that these cases could be acted upon within three years.

Aside from the considerations of justice which may be urged for a speedy settlement of the claims now on the files of the Pension Office, it is no less important on the score of economy, inasmuch as fully one-third of the clerical force of the office is now wholly occupied in giving attention to correspondence with the thousands of claimants whose cases have been on the files for the past eighteen years.

I hope the Commissioner may be able with his present force, if need be, to make the progress he promises, and reach the end of this immense undertaking within the period he has named. He realizes, I know, the importance and the embarrassments of the work before him; and more than all he feels, as I do, that too long already has many a meritorious claimant been denied the relief which the laws of his country were intended to afford him. I am sure, from my knowledge of his zeal, industry, and great administrative ability, he will do all these characteristics made possible to secure an early settlement of the cases in his department, but in my judgment the work cannot be done within six years. The record of more than twenty years is against it. Unless there is an increased force in the Pension Office—unless its opportunities for taking evidence are materially enlarged and new methods are enforced, there is little hope that the end will come in this generation.

The progress made by the Commissioner during the past few months in disposing of business proves that his bureau is reaching a high degree of efficiency. In the month of January he made final disposition of 6,583 cases, against 3,208 in October, and 6,166 in November. The record in his office shows a steady and most gratifying increase in the number of cases closed. Notwithstanding this, I am still unable to see the conclusion of these invalid-pension investigations, unless we get an expedited service, under eight to ten years. It is nearly seventeen years now since the last gun was fired, since the last man incurred a disability in battle, or on the march, or in hospital, and it is high time the books were closed. We all want to know how the account stands. If pensions are due the gallant men who fought in our armies, or to their widows or dependent children, they should be paid, and a patriotic people will not hesitate to pay them. These claims should be paid to the last penny, and paid without delay. The system of payment should secure equal justice to both claimant and the Government. It should be a system securing the most expedition possible compatible with the safety of the people. As the years pass by witnesses, important alike to the claimant and the Government, are disappearing forever. A few years more of delay and it will be impossible to ascertain the exact truth in any case, and then either the claimant or the Government must suffer. To delay this business much longer will result in a practical repudiation of this sacred debt. Why delay? The justice of the obligation to pay a pension to the worthy claimant is unchallenged. Nobody desires to avoid it. We are, however, either too indifferent to the question or we are too much engrossed with other matters to give it attention.

As before stated, we have over 266,000 cases pending in the Pension Office, and new ones are coming in at the rate of 2,500 each month. What are we to do with them? To me there seems but one answer, we must try them; allow those that are just, and reject those that are not. The rules adopted should be such as will most efficiently execute the law by giving pensions to those who merit them, and denying them to those who do not. A wholly ex parte examination will seldom secure this result. Such a system will do reasonably well where the disability for which the pension is claimed is the loss of a leg, an arm, or an eye, or a wound on the person received in battle. Such disabilities always leave a record behind them, and they are easily proven. The ex parte system is dangerous in a large class of cases, and especially in that class to which the claims recently filed mostly belong, a class where the pensionable disability is said to have been occasioned by exposure or sickness in the line of military duty from seventeen to twenty years ago.

Is it safe, is it right, that such cases should be disposed of without careful and thorough investigation, or that they be tried upon wholly ex parte proofs? To state the question is to give the answer. In saying this I am not joining in the cry of fraud, nor am I attacking the integrity of any person or any class of persons. I am merely trying to get at a practical, common-sense solution of a very important question. Here we are appropriating year after year millions upon millions of the people's money to be divided among certain persons to whom it is due—to persons to whom it is given by the provisions of the pension laws. It is for these persons and none other. If others share it the law is violated. It is our duty to this sacred fund to guard it so that it will not be despoiled by those to whom it does not belong. No honest man will attempt to defeat the payment of a claim known to be just, and no honest man will demand payment of one known to be otherwise. In the settlement of these claims all desire the adoption of that method that will most certainly secure an honest execution of the law. The claimant is entitled to this because he gave the country his services in the hour of its extremest peril, endured the hardships and challenged the dangers of the soldier's career.

The Government has a right to demand fairness and honesty, because it has been generous to its soldiery, because it has made most liberal provision for its disabled and wounded heroes. Look at the palatial homes that have been provided by the nation's bounty for the aged and indigent soldier of the Republic. See what magnificent contributions the people are cheerfully making year after year to pension their wounded and disabled sons. What other people ever paid $50,000,000 a year on a pension-roll? On one hand we have to deal with a patriotic and heroic soldiery, on the other with a generous government; and it is our duty to ask right and justice for each.

Before I proceed further, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that the indiscriminate insinuations of fraud made against pension claimants are wholly unjustifiable. Indeed, sir, while I sincerely believe that many cases have reached the pension-roll that should not be there, I believe also that but comparatively few of them were procured by either perjury or fraud. They are there largely as the result of a loose and ill-devised method of securing the facts on which the bureau is compelled to act. And, sir, the ex parte system of examinations encourages the presentation of bad claims as well as those that are fraudulent. But it would be a grave injustice to thousands of good and honest men to assume that all claims that should be rejected under the law are therefore dishonest ones. Let me explain. Under the law, before one is entitled to an invalid pension he must have been in the military service, and while in the service and in the line of duty must have incurred a pensionable disability. All the above facts must not only exist, but in the very nature of things they must be proven in conformity with law to the satisfaction of the Commissioner before the pension can be allowed. Now, many honest, conscientious men file claims—and file them in the utmost good faith—that cannot receive favorable action.

First, the claimant may have been disabled in the service, but under such circumstances that he is not able to prove it either because no one but himself has knowledge of the fact or for the reason that death or some other cause has removed his witnesses beyond his reach.

Second, the disability may have arisen in the service but not in the line of duty. The claimant states the exact truth in his declaration and is defeated on his own showing. He was simply mistaken as to what was in the line of military service.

Third, thousands of claims are defeated where there is not the slightest suspicion of fraud because the claimant cannot by his proofs bring his case up to that standard of certainty which the law rightfully requires.

Again, there are cases, and these are numerous, where the claimants were sick in the service and of infirm health when they left it, but who received no medical treatment while in it nor soon after their discharge. After a time they wholly break down in health. They attribute their disability to the service, but are unable to connect the two by evidence. These cases are not allowed and cannot be without a disregard of law. A large majority of the rejected cases belong to some of the classes I have given.

But, sir, it will not do to say that no fraudulent claims are presented, and that the Treasury has not suffered from frauds and perjury. Palpable frauds have been perpetrated. They have come to the knowledge of us all. All honest men denounce them and unite in asking us to provide against their recurrence. In all case where large sums of money are concerned the temptation to commit fraud is strong, and under an ex parte system of examination its commission is easy. No system will wholly prevent it, but that one is best which, being fair to the claimant, will make it most difficult. No one can make even an approximate estimate of the number of cases now improperly on the pension-rolls, nor how much may be saved the Treasury by purging them. We do know, however, that our annual pension payments have reached the sum of $50,000,000. A small per cent. of saving on this vast sum made annually would reach many millions.

Since 1860 we have paid out on this account $506,345,000. At this point permit me to give a statement of our yearly pension payments:

Year.	Total number of applications filed.	Total number of claims allowed.	Number of pensioners on the roll and the amount paid for pensions, with the cost of disbursements.

Now, a saving on this vast aggregate of 5 per cent. would have reached $25,000,000 at least.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am less concerned about the past than about the future. The five hundred millions are gone, and whatever wrong, error, or fraud has been done the people is measurably irreparable. The present is ours, and we can now do much to shape the future. All I want, all the people want, is that we provide such a method of examinations as will secure the claimant the relief due him with the least possible delay, and at the same time secure to the Treasury of the people the least possible harm.

We have already paid more than $500,000,000, and what is there before us that admonishes us to be vigilant while we are being just? According to the estimates more than $300,000,000 are yet to be paid for arrearages. If at the end of seven years the survivors of the Mexican war are added to the rolls at $8 per month, the grand total at the end of twenty-five years yet to be provided for will reach the enormous sum of $1,347,651,593. In this connection I give the estimate of the Commissioner of Pensions made in response to a resolution of inquiry made by the House of Representatives:

Estimate of the cost of pensions for the next twenty-five years, provided the survivors of the war with Mexico, &c., be pensioned at the end of seven years at $8 per month.

Add to this sum the amount already paid and the pension-roll at the end of the year 1906 will have taxed our resources $1,853,996,637, or to an amount exceeding the present national debt. To be sure this is an estimate only, but it is as likely to be under as above the sum that will be demanded. Whatever portion of this vast sum may be found to be due must be paid, no more and no less. No man that loves his country or respects its laws will demand more. Now, sir, in view of this extraordinary expenditure, let me put the question to this House and to the country. Does not a true regard to the public interests demand that great caution be exercised in its distribution so that waste, whether from carelessness or fraud, may be prevented?

The remedy for the evils of the ex parte system is easy. Existing law makes provision for the employment of special agents, who are authorized to take evidence and fully investigate pending cases. The Commissioner has been taking evidence and conducting examinations in this way for a long time, but necessarily on a small scale. The present Commissioner has organized the division of special examinations upon a plan that must commend itself to the considerate judgment of the people. His corps of special agents are doing an excellent work in taking evidence in the field of their operations. His plan is briefly as follows: he first causes the claimant to be notified of his purpose at an early day in the future to take evidence in his case. Subsequently notice is given of the time and place of the examination, and the claimant is admonished of his right to be present with his own witnesses and to thoroughly cross-examine those of the Government. He may, if he wishes, be represented by an attorney, or if he requests it the special agent will assist him. The examination is open, full, and fair, and is made in the interest of the claimant as well as of the Government. The evidence is all carefully reduced to writing, signed by the witnesses, and forwarded to the Pension Office for the consideration of the Commissioner. These depositions are supplemented by other evidence. Affidavits are received as formerly, and the case is made up from the whole record. When evidence is taken in this way the Pension Bureau is a court trying causes in which both parties have had a hearing.

This plan in my opinion needs but to be made more general to meet the wants of the hour. That which is needed now is to give the Commissioner a larger force of examining agents and to somewhat enlarge their duties and powers. These agents do not go into the country as secret spies, but openly, as trusted and accredited ministers of the law, clothed by it with authority to take evidence and ascertain the truth. They do not go under circumstances calculated to cast suspicion on the honesty of any claim or the integrity of any man. Their high mission should be to protect the rights of both the claimant and the people and secure impartial justice to each. I would make it as great a crime on the part of these officials to intentionally defeat an honest claim as to rob the Treasury by passing a dishonest one. I am in favor of this plan. The men who may be commissioned to perform this delicate and important duty should be honest, intelligent, and discreet; such men as will challenge the respect and confidence of the communities into which they may be sent, by the correctness of their habits, their courteous behavior, and the fidelity with which they perform their mission.

All that is now needed to make this plan efficient is to provide for a larger force of special examiners. Testimony subjected to the ordeal of a cross-examination should be taken in all cases that are wholly dependent upon the recollection of witnesses—those cases where there is no sustaining record proofs. I do not say that all the testimony in this class of cases should be so taken, for in many instances that may be found unnecessary. There, however, should be no unfair discriminations. If we pick out a case only here and there in a neighborhood for investigation, and omit others of like character, we may cast unjust suspicion on most worthy claims and claimants. A slight amendment to section 4744 of the Revised Statutes, and a reasonable appropriation is all that is now required to enable the Commissioner to do this work thoroughly.

Section 4744 provides that—

> The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to detail from time to time clerks in his office to investigate suspected attempts at fraud on the Government, through and by virtue of the provisions of the pension laws, and to aid in prosecuting any person so offending, with such additional compensation as is customary in cases of special service; and any person so detailed shall have the power to administer oaths and take affidavits in the course of any such investigation.

Some days ago I introduced a bill, which has been favorably reported and is now on the Calendar, proposing to amend this section so that it will read as follows:

> SEC. 4744. The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to designate from time to time clerks or special examiners in his office to make special examinations into the merits of such pensions or bounty-land claims, whether pending or adjudicated, as he may deem proper, and to aid in the prosecution of any party found on such examinations to have been guilty of fraud, either in the presentation or in procuring the allowance of such claims, with such additional compensation to such clerks or special examiners as is customary in cases of special service; and any person so designated shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits in the course of such examinations, and may employ a stenographer, when deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions in important cases, such stenographer to be paid by such clerk or special examiner, and the amount so paid to be allowed in his accounts.

This amendment will give all the power necessary.

In my judgment Congress should appropriate a sum sufficient to enable the Commissioner to employ at least two hundred and fifty additional agents for service in the division of investigation. This is the number suggested by himself. This will probably require an additional annual outlay of $500,000. The pay of the clerical force of the Pension Office for this fiscal year, including the deficiency, will be $869,630. The adoption of the Commissioner's suggestion will increase the expenditure to the sum of, say, $1,500,000; but who doubts that it would be good economy to do this? This addition to the force would greatly expedite the settlement of the pending claims. It would secure the claimant a prompt hearing of his cause. It would enable the Pension Bureau to close the investigation of pending cases in from three to four years, instead of protracting the work from eight to ten. Promptness is the duty of the Government to its creditors, and we should not hesitate in the discharge of that duty. It will secure accuracy in this important work. It will deter the unscrupulous from presenting false claims and protect the Treasury from spoliation. No man can predict what it will save. How much will it cut down the immense estimate now standing at nearly $1,300,000,000?

No one questions the propriety of our putting safeguards about the Treasury; the people demand that the public funds shall not be touched except in pursuance of law. While a due administration of this system will tend largely to eliminate from the files bad claims, it will aid in procuring an early allowance of good ones; it will enable the office of the Commissioner to dispense with a vast amount of correspondence now imposed upon it which contributes but little if anything toward the adjustment of its business. From whatever standpoint we view this system of inquiry by examinations in the presence of both parties, it commends itself to us. It is expeditious; it is economical; it secures fairness; it upholds the truth and exposes falsehood; it is simple and inexpensive; it is surrounded by no legal technicalities, for the most unlearned may protect himself under its rules from harm. It is said, however, that we are proceeding with this pension business rapidly enough; that if we increase the annual allowance our resources will be taxed more than they can bear. There are those also who will oppose all attempts at reform because they favor the repeal of the acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879, granting arrearages of pensions. Let us examine these objections dispassionately. Now, should we close these examinations in four years, the maximum of the annual pension payments will not exceed $90,000,000. From this point these payments will be diminished gradually for a time, and then rapidly until the last name will disappear from the roll.

Why, sir, during the last fiscal year nearly 11,000 names left the roll forever. In making this estimate of cost I include arrearages and all. Large as the sum is it can be paid, and every penny due should be paid without hesitation. What are our resources? The total revenue the last fiscal year was over $360,000,000. The President says:

It is estimated that the receipts during the present fiscal year will reach $400,000,000, and the expenditures $270,000,000, leaving a surplus of $130,000,000.

This surplus will be left after paying on account of pensions this year the sum of $70,000,000. If we were to add to this the further sum of $30,000,000, there would still be a surplus of $100,000,000. All our obligations for pensions under existing laws can be discharged promptly without adding a penny to our public debt or the rate of taxation. We raise an annual revenue from spirits, malt liquors, snuffs, cigars and tobacco alone of over $110,000,000. Our resources are steadily increasing, and now when our industries are thriving and our people are prosperous is the time to discharge the obligation due the deserving claimant. Shall it be done? More than this, we can relieve the people from certain taxes that are unjust and vexatious and still have an abundance of revenue left to meet this demand. Indeed, sir, such taxes as I would repeal would be more than reimbursed in a few years from the sources of revenue still remaining.

Mr. Chairman, when I began it was not my intention to discuss the arrearage act, but as that act has been vigorously assailed and its repeal demanded, I may say a word upon this subject, I hope, without trespassing too much upon the indulgence of the House. By our law, and by the laws of every civilized nation in the world, a soldier who is disabled in the line of duty is entitled to a pension. That pension is due the moment the Government declares by the soldier's discharge that the disability unfits him from further service, provided the injury continues and impairs his ability to labor. The pension is the sum the Government pays to make the man each month equal in his ability to labor to what he would have been had the disability not been incurred. On the very day the injury drives him from the Government's employ his right to demand a pension exists, and if it were possible to perfect his proofs then his pay would begin at once. Should his failure to make application at once, or his inability to collect his evidence, or the procrastination of the Pension Office in examining his claim, defeat his just demand? Does not the damage begin to run from the very day the injury deprived him of his ability to earn full pay?

Suppose two soldiers receive similar wounds in the same engagement; one files his claim immediately, his pension is allowed and is paid him regularly ten years before the other makes application. Now, what element exists in the one case that is wanting in the other? Why should these two pensions not begin at the same time? Is it just that one of these gallant men should have ten years' more pay for exactly the same disability than the other? It was to give equal merit equal pay that the arrearage bill was passed. It was enacted to do justice to all, to make all pensions cover, as they should, the whole period of disability. In principle the law is right; I voted for it, and stand by it, but I insist now and shall always insist upon such methods as will secure its faithful and economical administration.

In my public life in determining my action I shall apply but one test—the only true one—and that is, is the thing right? I have applied this test, and my conscience approves my vote and my present position. There is but one serious danger confronting the arrearage act, and that is an increasing popular discontent arising from the belief of many good people that bad men are, in its sacred name, robbing the Treasury of the people. It is not the heroic men of the Army, but a few unprincipled knaves who are putting this law, and indeed all pension laws, in peril. I think I do not mistake the sentiment of those who faithfully served in the battalions of the Republic when I say they despise frauds and perjury. To a man they will come to the rescue of our generous pension laws, by upholding the Government in their honest and fearless execution. Patriotic and heroic men who periled their lives to save the nation from its armed enemies will not now turn it over to be pillaged by rogues who, if they were in the Army at all, were ready to take either side and steal from both.

No, sir; in the name of the gallant dead who fell on our battlefields; in the name of the heroes who survive the conflict; in the name of the imperishable achievements of the American soldiery, I protest, earnestly protest, against the charge that the men who followed our flag to the front and into the center of the fight are capable of plundering the fund provided by a magnanimous people for the support of their disabled and maimed comrades, or the helpless widows and orphaned children of the dead.

[During the remarks of Mr. BROWNE the following occurred:

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BROWNE. Very well.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the main cause of delay in the settlement of these pension cases? Is it the want of clerical force in the Pension Office, or the want of necessary information from the Surgeon-General's and Adjutant-General's Offices?

Mr. BROWNE. It arises to some extent from both causes, and from another cause which I propose to mention, if I can reach it. The present method is one of inefficiency and delay. The cases go upon the files of the Pension Office and await the slow process of calling for evidence from the claimant instead of sending out into the neighborhood where the claimant lives an agent authorized to take testimony, both on the part of the Government and on the part of the claimant, so that the whole case might be tried by a special agent of the Pension Bureau in three days, all the testimony presented to the Pension Office, and the case closed, either by its allowance or its rejection.]

Mr. McKINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the sum proposed in his amendment is asked for by the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. BROWNE. I do not know whether it has been asked for to supply this immediate deficiency.

Mr. McKINLEY. Then I would inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] if the sum which the committee proposes to give is not the sum asked for by the Commissioner?

Mr. BROWNE. To be frank with the gentleman I will say that I do not expect the committee now to adopt the amendment which I have suggested. I offered it for the purpose of enabling me to place before the House some observations in this connection which might influence its future action.

Mr. McKINLEY. The gentleman, then, does not offer it for any particular purpose, and I suppose will withdraw it.

Mr. BROWNE. I will withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

That the sum of $35,000 of the amount appropriated "for mail-route messengers" under the act approved March 1, 1881, "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," is hereby transferred and made available as follows, viz: For route-agents, $20,000, and for postal clerks, $15,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out, after the word "route-agents," the words "twenty thousand dollars, and for postal clerks fifteen thousand dollars," and inserting in lieu thereof "thirty-five thousand dollars." Also to insert as a new clause the following:

For route-agents $10,000 and for railway post-office clerks $40,000.

I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move this amendment. When the bill was first reported to the House we supposed that we were appropriating upon the basis of the estimates for the current fiscal year. After investigating the matter, and after the superintendent of the railway mail service had been before us, we became satisfied that we had not done that, and now propose to increase the appropriation and apply it as indicated by the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that in the Post-Office appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, for which this is a deficiency, the full amount estimated for these several items was granted by Congress?

Mr. HISCOCK. My recollection is that it was. But I will say further that the unexampled, unexpected, and unestimated-for increase in the postal service of the country has rendered this necessary.

The amendment of Mr. HISCOCK was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move as an additional paragraph that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Postmaster-General to rent a suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order offices of the Post-Office Department and of the money-order division of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $3,000 in addition to the sum appropriated by the act making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1881; and so much of the proviso of said act as limits the amount that may be paid for the annual rental of such building or buildings to the sum of $5,000 is hereby repealed, and the limit extended to $8,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For the pay of watchmen, laborers, fuel, ice, gas, and miscellaneous items, $3,000.

And the sums thus appropriated shall be paid from the proceeds of the money-order business.

Mr. HOLMAN. That portion of the proposed amendment except the last clause seems to me to be new legislation. It does not seem to be for the carrying on of any public work already in progress. And unless it is found to be in continuation of some public work already in progress I make the point that it is new legislation and not in order.

Mr. CANNON. I will send up to the desk, to be read by the Clerk, a provision of existing law touching this question. This whole matter was provided for and appropriated for in the Post-Office appropriation bill for the current year. I ask the Clerk to read a provision from that act.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items in the office of the Postmaster-General, $2,000; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to take the necessary steps to rent a suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order office of the Post-Office Department and of the money-order division of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department: Provided, That the rent of such building or buildings and the cost of necessary furniture for the same, to be procured under the supervision of the superintendent of the money-order system, shall be paid out of the proceeds of the money-order business: And provided further, That the annual rental of such building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $5,000, and the cost of the furniture for the same shall not exceed $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Another ground of objection to this amendment upon the point of order is that it does not appear to be a deficiency, and therefore is not germane.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to be heard upon the point of order. The provision just read was inserted in the Post-Office appropriation bill for the current year and is now law. It provides for the removal of the money-order bureau and that portion of the auditor's office pertaining to money orders from the Department building into some other building to be rented for the purpose. This provision was adopted at the last session upon very full investigation. The clerks are now crowded in a manner prejudicial to health, and they cannot properly do their work. The matter was fully considered in the committee and by Congress before the enactment of this provision.

Now it is ascertained that the Department cannot obtain a suitable building for a rental of $5,000, but can obtain one for $8,000. Hence the amendment proposes merely an additional appropriation to carry out existing law for the current year.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it is not a deficiency, I submit to my friend, and therefore is not germane.

Mr. CANNON. Not a deficiency? Why, Mr. Chairman, none of these items are deficiencies in the proper sense of the term. We speak of bills of this kind as "deficiency bills;" but there is a general statutory provision under which it is a misdemeanor for any official to make a deficiency. In fact, therefore, while this is called a "deficiency bill" all these appropriations are simply additional appropriations; and if you do not authorize them the expenditures which they contemplate will not be made. There is no deficiency as to any one of the items contained in this so-called deficiency bill, nor will there be any deficiencies in the proper meaning of the word in the other deficiency bill which is to follow this. The phrase "deficiency bills" is merely a designation, when in fact all these items are simply additional appropriations for the current fiscal year.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that the amendment be again read.

Mr. CANNON. Upon the merits of the amendment I have some communications to submit which, however, I will not present at present.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is not only not germane to the bill as a deficiency bill, but it repeals existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. ATKINS. Before the Chair makes his decision——

Mr. CANNON. After my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has submitted his remarks on the point of order, I would like to ask unanimous consent to have read a couple of communications to show that even if the amendment be subject to the point of order an appropriation of this kind is absolutely necessary. I am satisfied that my friend from Indiana if he knew the necessity for this appropriation would not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to having those communications read.

Mr. ATKINS. I concur fully with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that this amendment is not liable to the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress the provision which has been read was enacted authorizing the Department to rent a building for this purpose. It is found that a suitable building cannot be rented for $5,000. But there is the provision of law authorizing the Department to rent a building for this specific purpose, and the only thing necessary is the appropriation of an additional amount. The law authorizing the renting of a building is already in existence; it is only necessary to increase the fund to be expended under that law.

I believe, further, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is germane, just as much so as any other amendment that has been offered to the bill or any provision in it. It is germane for the simple reason that the appropriation of this money is necessary in order that a law of Congress may be executed by the Department.

While I am on the floor, if I may diverge from the point of order, I would say to my friend from Indiana that the necessity for this appropriation would be manifest to him if he would go into the Post-Office Department and look at the large quantity of money-order books, amounting to several hundred, piled up as high as these desks for some two hundred feet in some of the corridors, obstructing transit through those corridors. The necessity for some building in which to place these books must be apparent to any one acquainted with the facts. Accounts involving hundreds of thousands of dollars belonging to the Government, as well as to other parties, are embraced in these books thus piled up in corridors so that the clerks can scarcely pass. It is absolutely necessary to provide some place where these books may be put so that they can be examined, the accounts in them adjusted, and the parties interested paid what belongs to them.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is clear this proposition is not in order on this bill, but at the same time, when a clear case is presented of providing for a necessary appropriation, I do not think proper to insist upon the point of order. If the gentleman from Illinois has communications which show the importance and necessity of this proposition, I will let them be read. I withdraw the point of order for the present, so those communications may be read.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, let the communications which I send to the Clerk's desk be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1882.

SIR: The act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, authorized the Postmaster-General to take the necessary steps to rent a suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order office of this Department and of the money-order division of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department; and provided that the annual rental of such building should be paid out of the proceeds of the money-order business, and should not exceed $5,000. The Postmaster-General was also authorized by the same act to pay out of the proceeds of the money-order business the sum of $10,000 for furniture for the building in question.

It has been ascertained upon investigation that the sum of $5,000 per annum is insufficient to pay for the rent of such a building as will be required, which must accommodate about one hundred and sixty clerks; and that if a suitable building be rented it cannot be made available for occupancy unless provision be made for the necessary watchmen and laborers to take care of the rooms and perform the manual labor required, and for the cost of fuel, gas, and such other miscellaneous expenses as may be necessary for the comfort of the occupants.

I have therefore the honor to recommend that in the immediate deficiency bill which has just been reported by your committee the amount at the disposal of the Postmaster-General for the annual rent of the proposed building or buildings, to be paid from the proceeds of the money-order business, be increased to $8,000; and that in the same bill authority be given him to pay out of the said proceeds the following expenses:

Pay of four watchmen for the new building, at $720 per annum, each	$2,880
" " five laborers " " " " " $660 " " "	3,300
Cost of fuel, gas, ice, and other miscellaneous expenses	3,000
	9,180

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1882.

SIR: Referring to my letter to you of the 13th instant in relation to an additional appropriation to enable me to lease a suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order office of this Department, and the money-order division of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, I desire to submit the following suggestions why this appropriation should be made as early as possible:

In the first place, Congress has already recognized the necessity for providing additional accommodations for these two bureaus. By the act of March 1, 1881, making appropriations for the Post-Office Department, the Postmaster-General was authorized to expend $5,000 for the rent of a suitable building for this purpose, and $10,000 to furnish the same, to be expended out of the proceeds of the money-order business.

It has been found impossible to rent a building of the capacity required for these two bureaus (to accommodate one hundred and sixty clerks) for $5,000. Since coming into office I have made diligent inquiry to ascertain what can be done in this direction, and I find that the lowest sum for which a building of the requisite size can be obtained is $8,000.

This appropriation should be made immediately, to enable me to effect the transfer of these two bureaus to their new quarters before the warm weather sets in. The board of health of this city has several times complained of the manner in which the employés of this Department are crowded together.

To give instances, in the division of finance, in the Third Assistant Postmaster-General's Office, there are nine clerks packed in a room containing but four hundred and fifty square feet of surface space. One or two divisions of clerks are compelled to do their work in the corridors of the Department. These are a few of the instances only where clerks are provided with inadequate and improper accommodations for their work.

The Post-Office building is very poorly ventilated. The hardship upon the clerks resulting from this fact, and from their crowded condition, is especially severe in the hot season. From complaints made by the board of health on this subject, I judge it to be dangerous to the health of the employés in this Department to continue another summer packed together as closely as they now are.

There are seven hundred and forty employés at the present time at work in this Department. I am credibly informed that there are nine hundred and thirty-four employés in the Interior Department, a building more than twice as large as this.

If the legislation necessary to enable me to effect the transfer of these two bureaus is delayed to one of the regular appropriation bills, it will be impossible to afford relief before next fall. I therefore consider it very necessary that the additional appropriation suggested in my letter of the 13th instant should be made in the special deficiency bill now before the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the facts stated by the Postmaster-General in the communication which has been read from the Clerk's desk, perhaps the point of order should not be insisted on, however well taken it may be. If it is understood that the Postmaster-General cannot rent the building for $5,000, then I shall withdraw my point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say one word in connection with the point of order, even though it is withdrawn, and that is to enter my protest against the ruling, for I think I can satisfy the Chair the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. DUNNELL. I should like to ask a question before the amendment is voted on, and it is as to whether it is not unusual to provide, as the amendment does, that the money appropriated shall be taken from the money-order office of the Post-Office. Why not take the money directly from the Treasury?

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman I will say that most of the expenses of the money-order office are paid by appropriations from the Treasury out of the revenues of that office, and the reason this amendment runs in that way is because the original clause in the appropriation bill for the current year is in like phraseology. We thought it easier to amend in that way than any other, as it would give rise to less confusion. So far as I am concerned I do not care which way it is put. It costs the Government as much one way as the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move at the end of line 126 to add the following:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay George A. Bacon, second assistant doorkeeper, under the resolution of December 21, 1881, from that day until June 30, 1882, $1,039.78.

Mr. HOUK. Is that in order as an amendment to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order if it be under a resolution of the House.

Mr. HOUK. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOUK. I desire to ask whether that question is not now before a committee of the House, as to the propriety or necessity of Mr. Bacon's employment here? Why, then, anticipate the action of that committee in making an appropriation for an officer before it has been reported whether he is necessary or not. Is this House to make an appropriation to provide for an officer, when the Doorkeeper states that he does not need him and does not want him? If we are coming to that kind of ecomony, then I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to answer the gentleman, whether the question is pending before the committee or not.

Mr. ATKINS. I will answer that question. It is true that a resolution has been introduced proposing to repeal a resolution which was almost the unanimous action of the House. That resolution has been referred to the Committee on Accounts. I did not deem it at all serious, for I could not suppose this House intended to reverse its almost unanimous action in regard to that matter. As there is no appropriation to pay the officer it is right and proper it should be made. If, however, the Committee on Accounts shall come forward with a proposition hereafter to abolish the office and the House shall ratify the action of that committee, then the balance of the appropriation will fall, as a matter of course.

I do not suppose my colleague wants Colonel Bacon to serve as an assistant doorkeeper of the House without provision being made to pay his salary. The laborer is worthy of his hire.

Mr. HOUK. In reply to my colleague I desire to say that my information is that the whole question has been referred, by resolution, to the Committee on Accounts to inquire and report whether such officer is necessary. And further, my information is that the Doorkeeper of the House has gone before that committee and stated he had no use for his services, that he did not desire him. I wish to know if my colleague, who has always been known to be in favor of economy, retrenchment, and reform, is in favor of appropriating $2,000 for some man who will render no service for it, and who is not desired? But I will send up an amendment to the amendment to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 136, insert:

"For increase of compensation to certain employés of the House of Representatives, $11,965: Provided, That the said sum shall be disbursed under the order of the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives in such manner that no employé of the House shall receive a less amount for his services than is paid for similar services in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. HOUK. I desire to say a word upon the merits of the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has not the gentleman from New York made the point of order upon the amendment?

Mr. HOUK. The gentleman made a point of order, but reserves it, as I understand.

Mr. HISCOCK. I made the point of order directly, but I yield for the purpose of allowing the gentleman, if he desires, to say a word upon his proposition. I hope that courtesy will be extended to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be considered as pending.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, here is a proposition of my colleague from Tennessee to appropriate $2,000 for, at least, a doubtful project. My proposition and amendment looks to doing justice to a number of employés of the House, who receive a less salary than similar employés receive for similar or less services at the other end of the Capitol. The purpose of my amendment is to place the employés of the House of Representatives upon the same equality and to give them the same pay for—I will not say the same services—but the same character of services of a greater amount, involving more labor, in the same capacity. The employés of the House of Representatives work more hours, they do more work, they have more work to do, they labor longer, and render more service than is rendered by employés holding similar positions in the other end of this building; and the object of my amendment is to simply place them upon an equality, so far as the salaries or pay for services rendered are concerned. And I will submit to gentlemen who are objecting and raising the question of order that this is about the only way that I see to raise this end of the Capitol to an equal dignity with the other end. [Laughter.] The only way that I now see to do that is, that we shall pay our employés the same salaries for similar services, whether the Representatives can claim to be equal in dignity to the Senators or not. [Laughter.] I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order and let us have a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will now state the point of order. This is a change of existing law and not in the direction of retrenchment of expenditures.

Mr. ATKINS. I only want to say a word, but a single word, in this connection before the point of order is decided. I have nothing whatever to do with the right or wrong of the resolution employing the gentleman in whose behalf I have offered the amendment. That was the action of the House itself. Now, in pursuance of law, I say that that officer ought to be paid his salary, and that is all there is of my amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I made the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman's colleague.

Mr. ATKINS. As to the amendment of my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has made the point of order. I say nothing of that proposition, and had no reference to that in my remarks. I only speak of the justice of the amendment which I have submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order has been raised upon the proposition or amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUK.] The Chair does not understand the gentleman from New York has raised the point of order against the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

Mr. HOUK. I raised the point of order upon that amendment myself.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The first proposition will be disposed of by the Chair—the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair intend to hold that it is now in order for the gentleman from Tennessee, after discussion has been had upon the pending amendment offered by himself, to go back and make a point of order upon my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide that point of order when it comes up. The point of order made by the gentleman from New York against the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUK,] that it changes existing law and is not in the direction of retrenching expenditures, is sustained, and the amendment is ruled out.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now a word in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.] I do not desire to make any point of order upon that. I do not know that it is liable to the point of order.

I suppose the facts of the case are these, that this man is now in the employ of the House, and by the authority of the House, under a resolution, and whatever subsequent action shall be taken with reference to that employment, whether he be discharged or not, certainly during his term of service he is entitled to compensation.

Mr. HOUK. I ask to have the amendment of my colleague read.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Tennessee insists upon the point of order?

Mr. HOUK. I want to renew the point of order, and call the attention of the Chair to the ground upon which I base it.

It will not be denied by any gentleman on this floor but that the question——

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask if at this point it is proper for the Chair to decide whether or not it is admissible that this point of order can be made, an intervening subject having been discussed?

Mr. HOUK. I made the point of order in the beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HOUK. I made the point of order when the amendment was first presented, and repeat it now.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he did not abandon his point of order by offering an amendment?

Mr. HOUK. I did not.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman proceeded to discuss an amendment covering additional ground.

Mr. HOUK. Well, there may be some construction in these rules that I am unfamiliar with, and the gentleman from Georgia seems to study very little else, that might warrant that position. I am reminded I sent it up to be read for information. So they say; but I do not remember, and I do not wish to make any statement on this floor if I do not recollect the exact fact.

But what I want to say is this, and it seems to me it is directly in point; that it is good law and a good rule. The question before the House is as to appropriating a sum of money by the amendment of my colleague to pay for certain services until the 30th June, 1882. Now, it will not be denied while the gentleman to whom this money is to be paid may be on duty, the question is before a committee to determine how long that service shall last. It may terminate to-morrow, and I insist that no amendment is in order in this bill or in this connection that appropriates for a time beyond which the House may stop this man's services and cut them off and say they do not desire him any longer. Suppose the Committee on Accounts comes in to-morrow, as I have reason to believe they will come in on an early day, and report there is no necessity for his services.

Mr. MARTIN. By what authority does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. HOUK. I say so because I presume the committee would do right in so reporting.

Mr. MARTIN. It is likely that the committee may differ with the gentleman as to what is right.

Mr. HOUK. Perhaps a minority of them may differ with me as to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] whether it will not be satisfactory to him if his colleague strikes from his amendment the name, leaving simply an office to be provided for?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause to be read for information the resolution which was adopted by the House on this subject.

Mr. SPARKS. Would it not be well to hear from the Committee on Accounts?

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George A. Bacon be authorized to act as second assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives and to receive the same pay as the present assistant doorkeeper of the House until further orders.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now I ask the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay George A. Bacon his salary as second assistant doorkeeper of the House, under resolution of the House of December 21, 1881, from that date until June 30, 1882, $1,059.78.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it not be satisfactory if the amendment was made to read, "to pay the second assistant doorkeeper," without stating the name?

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection to that modification. But I desire to say I drew the amendment in accordance with the resolution adopted by the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. And as is suggested to me by a gentleman near me, the amendment might be further modified by adding the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." That would meet the case if the Committee on Accounts shall come in and report in favor of the discharge of this man.

Mr. HOUK. But the amendment provides for paying him to the 30th of June, 1882.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no; not to pay him, but to pay the office. If the Committee on Accounts should come in and report in favor of rescinding the resolution, then as a matter of course this is not an appropriation to pay a particular man; the office is abolished, and the appropriation falls with it. Let the Clerk read the amendment as now modified.

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the second assistant doorkeeper of the House, under resolution of the House of December 21, 1881, from that date until June 30, 1882, $1,059.78, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ATKINS. I am entirely willing to accept that modification.

Mr. HOUK. That is not entirely correct yet. That is still a provision to pay him till the 30th June.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I submit that this question of order has already been decided. I remember that when the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] his colleague [Mr. HOUK] rose and inquired of the Chair if that amendment was in order, and I remember that the Chair distinctly announced that the amendment was in order. So I submit that question has already been disposed of.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand we have got by the point of order, and that we are now trying to relieve this amendment of objections on the merits, some of which, perhaps all of which, have been pointed out by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUK.] Now, I desire to make this further suggestion: if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] will strike out the period for which the service is required, and for which this appropriation of $1,059.78 is to be made to pay the second assistant doorkeeper, then the amendment will be subject to no objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw my consent to modifying the amendment. I drew the amendment in accordance with the law, which I will read:

That George A. Bacon be authorized to act as a second assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, and to receive the same pay as the present assistant doorkeeper of the House until further orders.

All I want is to pay that man his salary.

Mr. HOUK. That is not a law.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the amendment be read as it will be if modified by leaving out the name and date.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the second assistant doorkeeper of the House, under resolution of the House of December 21, 1881, $1,059.78, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ATKINS. Do you not require the name to be inserted?

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will not that compel the payment of the salary whether he serves that time or no?

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no. That is what I am desiring to avoid.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I think it would have that effect; as originally drawn it would not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order to be withdrawn.

Mr. HOUK. I doubt the propriety of the amendment, even in its present shape; in other words, I believe, in its present shape, it will continue this payment till the 30th June, 1882, regardless of the action of the Committee on Accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. That portion of the amendment has been stricken out.

Mr. SPARKS. How does it read now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment as now modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the second assistant doorkeeper of the House, under resolution of the House December 21, 1881, $1,059.78, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

To reconstruct the Jefferson school-building on the present site, with fire-proof corridors and staircases, the sum for which said building and furniture were insured, namely, $55,500, which, when received, shall be paid into the Treasury specially to be used for this purpose only, and the additional sum of $14,500, making in all $70,000: Provided, That the work shall be done under the superintendence of the commissioners of the District, and in such manner as shall be approved by the board of trustees of public schools: And provided further, That the entire cost of reconstructing, heating, and furnishing said building and all expenditures on account of said building and grounds shall in no event exceed the sum of $70,000; and the work shall be completed by the 15th day of August, 1882; and the half of the sum of $14,500 aforenamed shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the amendment I send to the desk as a substitute for the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. HAWK. I notice the word "heating" is used. For what length of time is this building to be heated?

Mr. HISCOCK. This is simply for the apparatus.

Mr. HAWK. Better express that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the substitute for the pending paragraph which has been offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] in charge of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reconstruct the Jefferson school building on the present site, with fire-proof corridors and stair-cases, the sum to be received from the insurance of said building and furniture, namely, $48,664.21, which when received shall be paid into the Treasury, specially to be used for this purpose only, and the additional sum of $21,335.79, making in all $70,000: Provided, That the plans and specifications for said building shall be prepared by the Architect of the Capitol, to which end the commissioners of the District shall furnish him all necessary means, and that said work shall be constructed by the commissioners in strict conformity therewith: And provided further, That the entire cost of reconstructing, heating, and furnishing said building and grounds shall in no event exceed the sum of $70,000; and the work shall be completed by the 1st day of September, 1882; and the half of the sum of $21,335.79 aforenamed shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will state briefly the reasons for this amendment. The increased sum which the amendment provides for results from the adjusting of the amount of loss from the burning of this building, by which adjustment the sum to be paid by insurance companies is $48,664.21, instead of $55,500, which we supposed when the bill was prepared would be the amount to be received from the insurance companies.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. How does that difference arise?

Mr. HISCOCK. There was a conflict between the insurance companies and the school commissioners who had charge of this matter in reference to the value of the furniture in the building. I believe the difference was confined to the furniture alone. That question was finally referred for arbitration, and this is the amount agreed upon. I believe it was also claimed that there was not a total loss of the furniture, and there was some abatement on that account. For these reasons the amount to be paid by the insurance companies was reduced to the sum of $48,664.21.

Now, in reference to the other feature of the amendment, as to the way in which this work shall be done, the committee in the first place drafted the bill as reported and printed. Upon the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, [Mr. NEAL,] and upon the suggestion of several gentlemen who have previously served upon that committee and are very familiar with the affairs of the District, and upon consultation with such members of the Committee on Appropriations as I could meet before this bill came up for consideration to-day, I concluded to offer this amendment, and for the reasons urged by those gentlemen, that it would be safer and more economical to put the reconstruction of this building in charge of the Architect of the Capitol than to leave it with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, as provided for in the bill as printed.

I will say in all frankness in reference to this matter that it is taking from the commissioners of the District of Columbia a power which might seem to belong to them. I will follow that up by saying that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the chairman of the sub-Committee on Appropriations, to which is referred all estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia, and the chairman of the District of Columbia Committee of the last Congress, all pressed me to offer this amendment, and I have done so.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I would inquire of the gentleman upon what principle and for what reason one-half of the expense of this school building is to be paid by the District and one-half out of the general Treasury?

Mr. HISCOCK. It is in pursuance of a general law which we passed, I think, in the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. The general law passed in the Forty-fifth Congress is broad enough in all conscience. I know that it requires one-half of the expenses of this District government to be paid out of the United States Treasury. But that law as I understand it went on to define what were the expenses of the District government, enumerating the improvements of streets, avenues, and alleys, the furnishing of water to the city, and the furnishing of light to the city; providing that one-half of the expense for those purposes was to be paid by the District government and one-half by the Government of the United States.

Now, I do not understand that the law requires us to educate the children of this District. If it does, then I have misread it. If it does not, then it seems to me that we ought somewhere to reach a point where we may determine that people less favored than the people of this District—people living in districts in which thousands only are annually expended where millions are expended in this District—shall not be called upon in addition to educating their own children to pay taxes for educating the children of this District.

Mr. HISCOCK. In reply to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] I would say that my understanding of the law is that this burden, in excess of the sum which comes from the insurance companies, will fall one-half on the District Government and one-half on the General Government. I have not the law before me but I have sent for it.

I will say, however, as bearing very strongly on this subject, that the Committee on Appropriations of the Forty-sixth Congress reported an appropriation for the support of schools in the District of Columbia upon this same plan—one-half of the expense of the schools to be borne by the District of Columbia and the other half by the General Government. And the fact that that appropriation bill escaped the attention and censure of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] and also of any member of the Committee on Appropriations, argues strongly at least that we in this case have done nothing contrary to the general law and practice.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to strike out the last word. It is generally understood by the House that whenever the authorities of this District assume a debt we appropriate for one-half of it. Our constituents pay it. Whether or not that should be done with reference to the support of schools here, I will leave to my friend from Indiana, [Mr. COBB.] He is now looking up the law with a view to its proper interpretation.

But whether that be the law or not, I now renew the protest which I have made here for twenty years against taxing the people of the several districts of this country for the support of this District and its school and other systems. If such is the law, it ought not to be. It ought to be repealed. It is not equitable taxation. Certainly it is not fair in respect to the education of children here by the funds of others not resident here.

In New York City we pay our own school taxes; even those sects who do not use the common schools pay their share of the taxes, even when supporting their denominational schools. There is, moreover, a surplus of near a million dollars that goes out of the city into the interior of the State to educate children outside the city. This would not be grudged. Certainly not, if some of them were better educated, as we saw the need of it by an exhibition of a member from the interior here, day before yesterday. I do not mean my friend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Citizens who have no children are compelled to contribute by taxation first to pay for the education of children in the city of New York; then to pay for educating the children of the interior; then to pay for the education of the offspring of impecunious members of Congress, and of others in this District.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. COX, of New York. No, sir; not now. Wait until I get my time extended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any proposition by which this moiety system is to be kept up in the District of Columbia. We already are paying out of the Treasury one dollar and fifty cents for every one dollar and fifty cents raised by taxation in the District. This District has all the advantage of the location of the capital here. It is a great and moneyed advantage; it has all the advantage of our outlay for the Government and public buildings. Millions and tens of millions are thus spent; yet by persistency, by wining and dining members of the District Committee and others, the people of this District, after years of laborious festivity, [laughter,] have now succeeded in fastening themselves as leeches on our Treasury for one-half of all that is paid here for lights, police, debt, schooling, and what not. Some day that may be reversed. No doubt members to-day will vote this appropriation through. They seem to be pleased with the meretricious splendors of a grand capital.

See what, by this appropriation, you are doing! You are making the United States Treasury the agent for the people of the District, in the first place, to recover the insurance for this Jefferson school building. That may be all right. It is one of the cunning wedges to open the Treasury. Then you pay the other sum required to build again out of the Treasury, or one-half of it, $14,500, for local education and not Federal purposes. Is this not all wrong? Why not let these people here with all their advantages educate their own offspring, like other districts and the States and counties? Have we any right to compel the people of Kansas to pay taxes for this purpose? My friend from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] who is an old school commissioner, is, I see, interested in this subject. I say to him we have no right to tax his people in Minnesota to pay to educate the children of favorites in power, whether Cabinet officers, clerks, or Congressmen.

Let the people sustain education generally and locally, in States and school-districts; but let them pay for it according to the benefits received by them in their own locality. That is the old doctrine. I am not going to unlearn it for any glamour of Federal magnificence at this center of ostentation and power.

Somehow or other our Treasury is full, and we have a surplus of over $100,000,000 according to the Treasury report. All the lobbyists in the country are swarming here to obtain largesses out of this money. Schemes and jobs for buildings, rivers, canals, railways, not to speak of subsidies and other excessive prodigalities, are hungry for our full Treasury. I believe, sir, in General Jackson's idea, that the money of the people is safest in their own pockets. No spoilers can reach it there. [Here the hammer fell.] I would like to publish some statistics about the immense lobby schemes going on right here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will a few remarks be in order in opposition to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in order if he rises to oppose the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Since I have been in Congress I have had the pleasure of hearing frequently remarks in the same strain as those just submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX;] but I have never met with any of this great temptation of "wining and dining" on the part of the people of the District of Columbia to entice men from their duty as legislators in the American Congress.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is because you are a temperance man.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Ah! I wish somebody else was also, and then there would be no temptation for him. [Laughter.] I do not think that we should vote upon this question under the belief that there is any great "lobby" around these doors in the interest of the education of the children that live in this District.

Mr. COX, of New York. I did not say that. I wanted to show you in regard to the lobby when I was cut off.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. My friend wants to print something about the "lobby;" I wish he would submit it right here.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would be glad to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Why should not Congress appropriate out of the national Treasury one-half of the educational and other current expenses of this District? We have exclusive power of legislation over this District. Not a dollar can be raised by taxation and expended here except by our authority and under our permission. True, we erect great public buildings; but is that a blessing or a protection to the people residing here? Does that educate, or clothe, or feed the people living in the shadow of those buildings? Who fill the schools of this District? Not alone the absolute residents of the District, but also the children of gentlemen on this floor—gentlemen residing in the various States of this Union. And more, the many clerks and other employés in the Departments have their children here. Their residence is elsewhere, they vote elsewhere, but they come here and get the benefit of the schools established in this District of Columbia.

I say it is time this House should vote once on this question and pay its one-half without any grudging at all. I don't care about the question of establishing a precedent. There is no complaint in the country about it. The people at home are proud of the national capital. They want good streets, they want good buildings, and they would feel it to their everlasting shame if the educational facilities of this District were not as good as any place in the country affords. [Applause.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. And I renew it. I do it, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of saying that I could not but feel a degree of surprise to hear the clear-headed and sensible gentleman from Massachusetts asking the question why should we not pay out of the general Treasury one-half of the cost of the education of the children of this District? The best answer I can make would be to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why should not the people of the State of Massachusetts pay one-half of the cost of the education of the children of Connecticut? Are the children of Washington entitled to privileges that the children of Connecticut are not entitled to?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit me to answer?

Mr. REAGAN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But I can do it in half a minute.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; go on.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Because the people of Massachusetts have no control over the legislation of the State of Connecticut, while they do have over the legislation of this District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, Congress is charged with the duty of legislating for the District of Columbia, and so is the Legislature of each State charged with the duty of the legislation of each State, but the fact that Congress is charged with the duty of legislation does not make it necessary they should support the population of the District of Columbia. If we are to furnish this District with education, if we are to furnish it with water, as we do now, then upon the same rule and according to the same philosophy and by the same logic we should pay one-half of the board of the people of the District of Columbia.

This is a country of law, and it ought to be a country of law. It ought to be governed by principles of justice. The law and principles of justice and the theory of our Government are that all men shall be alike and equally protected, and that private property shall not be taken from any person and given to another. But you do by this very legislation take the private property of citizens of one part of the country, for you take their money which is their property, and give it to citizens of another part of the country without compensation to those from whom it is taken.

Now, whatever expense the seat of Government being here entails upon the District of Columbia should be met by Congress. I do not object to appropriations for necessary public buildings, nor do I object that the Government should contribute toward the improvement of the streets and alleys of the town. I do not object that it should improve its own property here and its own ground as it now does; but I insist there is no good reason why it should contribute to the support of the people of this District. It is wrong, it is unjust, it is cruel, to the extent that it goes to impose additional taxes on people elsewhere in the country for the education and support of the people who reside in the District of Columbia.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the last clause of the pending amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the floor, and wish to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a pro forma amendment pending.

Mr. DUNNELL. And I rise to address the committee in opposition to that amendment. It has not been withdrawn.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not withdraw it if the gentleman wishes to be heard upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has been recognized. If the gentleman from Texas does not withdraw his amendment a vote will have to be taken upon it.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not wish to cut off the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HOLMAN. Read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "and the one-half of the sum of $21,335.21" and insert in lieu thereof "the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. ERRETT. I rise to a point of order. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is not withdrawn how does the gentleman from Indiana get the floor to move an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been withdrawn, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve all points of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ERRETT. The gentleman from Texas refused to withdraw his amendment, in order to give the gentleman from Minnesota an opportunity to reply to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. DUNNELL. It had not been withdrawn when the Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana, which I respectfully insist he had no right to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot see why he was bound to recognize any particular gentleman to oppose the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Texas; but having had a request previously presented by the gentleman from Indiana, the Chair recognized him in pursuance of that agreement.

Mr. HASKELL. If the Chair will permit me to say a word on the point of order I will do so. The rule provides, when an amendment is pending one gentleman shall be recognized for and one in opposition. Now, a pro forma amendment under the rules is the same as any other. The gentleman from Texas moved a pro forma amendment and spoke in favor of it. Under the rules somebody must be allowed to speak against it. That the gentleman from Minnesota proposed to do, but the gentleman from Indiana took the floor and offered another amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing to yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair had the power to read the minds of gentlemen he could have anticipated what they desired, but not having that faculty he could not do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Minnesota is recognized to reply.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have no desire, Mr. Chairman, to speak at any length in this connection. It will be remembered by all gentlemen present who were members of the Forty-fifth Congress that the rate of 50 per cent., to be paid by the Government of the United States, was fixed upon after a very elaborate debate. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] will remember that it was decided by a very emphatic vote in this House that the Government of the United States should assume one-half of the expenses of the city of Washington, or rather of the District of Columbia.

Now, on almost every appropriation bill in which the District of Columbia at all figures, this law is alluded to in very severe language. The gentleman from New York ought to remember that his friends were in the majority in the Forty-fifth Congress in this House. He ought to know that this is a law properly chargeable to the Democratic party. It was voted through the House by his party, and I think it is hardly fair for the gentleman, on every occasion, to hurl over at this side of the House such charges in the manner that he does. It was a measure for which his party is responsible.

Mr. COX, of New York. Your side voted for it.

Mr. DUNNELL. But your side is held responsible for the legislation of the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. COX, of New York. You voted for it. Now my friend from Minnesota is not usually disingenuous. Your side voted for it, the majority of them, and comparatively a few on this side of the House.

Mr. VALENTINE. About as many, I presume, as usually vote in behalf of any matter of education. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. That man wants education himself who speaks that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNNELL. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the people of this country have found no fault with the law, or with those who voted for that bill by which the Government assumed one-half of the expenses of this District, as passed by the Forty-fifth Congress. Since the passage of that law there has grown up in all parts of the country a great deal of interest in the growth of Washington City; and I have never found that they have made any complaints against those who framed the law or about the amount of the expense which they are called upon to pay.

I am amazed that the gentleman from New York, with all his learning, with all his taste, with all his love of the beautiful—a love so strong that he is compelled every year to visit the old cities of the world—I say that I am surprised that he is unwilling that we should pay 50 per cent. of all these improvements, that are so honorable to our country, so honorable to our civilization, and which are an honor to us who voted for them.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. COBB. I shall not detain the committee——

Mr. HOLMAN. My proposition, Mr. Chairman, is that this shall be appropriated, but appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. I make the point of order that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is not germane to the subject-matter of this bill, which is to provide for deficiencies.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the point of order is a little late, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point of order was made and reserved at the time the amendment was submitted.

Mr. ROBESON. Besides, the amendment was not offered in the ordinary manner.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been reported by the Clerk. It will now be reported by the Clerk, after which it will be competent to raise the points of order upon it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "one-half of which sum of $21,325.21," and add at the end of the amendment the words "the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. ROBESON. Now I make the point of order upon that amendment, that it makes a new code for this District on a deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be heard a moment upon this point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman wish to speak now on the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say but a word or two as to the limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to speak to the point of order. This, Mr. Chairman, is but a limitation upon the application of the money to be appropriated for this purpose; and I think the gentleman from New Jersey never heard that a limitation upon an appropriation of money was not germane to the subject-matter of the appropriation of money. It will be seen that this amendment simply places a limitation upon this amount to be appropriated, and it is clear that it is not only germane but also that it accomplishes the other object of that paragraph of Rule XXI, that is, that it will reduce expenditures. For that reason I claim that it is in order, that it is not subject to the point of order, being germane to this bill. It is germane to the measure because it applies to the same subject-matter. It is in order, too, because it reduces the charge upon the general Treasury and applies it to a special treasury. It seems impossible that such a proposition shall not be held to be germane if it be within the province of Congress to force any restraint or apply any limitation whatever upon the appropriation of money.

Mr. REAGAN. The point of order made against this amendment is that it is in violation of a law of Congress framed for the government of the city of Washington.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order was that it was not germane.

Mr. REAGAN. And I hope the Chair will not decide it disregards the provisions of that law, but allow the gentleman, if he can, to present any provision of law which justifies this appropriation. The law defines what the expenses of the city shall be. It embraces the improvement of streets, avenues, and alleys, the building of bridges, the making of aqueducts, the sewerage of the city, and the watering and lighting of the city, and if it embraces schools I never yet heard of it. I have been trying to look up the law to see whether it applies as the gentleman wishes to apply it, but I cannot find it, and my recollection is that it does not embrace schools. The provision itself, then, is liable to the point of order, as not being justified by any law.

But the amendment brings it back to a legitimate position, and it cannot be subject to the point of order unless the gentleman shows a law that makes the schools of Washington a charge upon the Federal Treasury. To sustain his point of order he must show the law. I would have referred to it, and sent for the law but got the wrong volume. It is not for me, but for the gentleman making the point of order, to show what law the amendment violates.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair will permit me, I desire to suggest that the fact a proposition affects another law does not make it out of order. You have a right to impose a limitation on any appropriation. You may do so even though you repeal another law in doing it. But it must be a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. COBB. This question, I presume, is not a very new one. When Congress took in hand to pass a law reorganizing the government of this District they passed certain provisions of law. Congress ever since that act was passed has put a construction upon that law. It has done so by making appropriations, and quite large ones, too. Not less than $100,000 a year has been appropriated for the sole purpose of constructing school buildings in the District of Columbia. For the present fiscal year we appropriated $174,000 to build schoolhouses. Now that is a construction put upon the law by the legislative department of the Government.

I think that that ought, to some extent, to estop us. But at this point I want to say further, in justification of my position, that when this law was passed I opposed it. I am opposed to its principle now. My judgment is that 50 per cent. of the expenses of the government of the District is too much for the United States to bear. I believe you would have more economy if a larger proportion was thrown upon the citizens of the District. They would then pay more attention to the expenditure of their money.

But to the point of order. We have a law which provides that the commissioners shall make estimates. I will turn to the original law. It says:

> The said commissioners shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1879, and annually thereafter, for his examination and approval, a statement showing in detail the work proposed to be undertaken by them during the fiscal year next ensuing, and the estimated cost thereof; also the cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining all bridges authorized by law across the Potomac River within the District of Columbia, and also all other streams in said District; the cost of maintaining all public institutions—

"Public institutions." Now a school is a public institution, I take it, within the meaning of this act, and it is a part of this District government as much as any other department of the District—> the cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons belonging to or controlled wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported wholly or in part by the United States or District of Columbia—

Now that covers public schools—> and also the expenses of the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances; and also an itemized statement and estimate of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year.

Of course a part of the expense of the District of Columbia is the expense of maintaining the public schools. Now I am willing when an act is passed to stand by it, and I believe this act covers the public schools as much as it covers any other matter involved in the government of the District of Columbia. I believe the law ought to be changed. I do not believe we ought to pay one-half of the expenses, as I have said; but that is the law as we have construed it. Therefore I think the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. HOLMAN,] I say it respectfully, is out of order. It proposes to change existing law. It may be in the line of economy. There is not much economy in the running of the Government of this District; and if I get time when that point arises I shall explain to this House some things in regard to the District of Columbia which may require its attention in the future to an extent to which this House has not given its attention in the past. That is all I desire to say on the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I concur in the statement of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. COBB,] that under the law now there must be paid out of the Federal Treasury one-half of the expenses of the public schools of this District. I do not think there can be any question about that from the reading of the law itself, and from the uniform construction put upon that law from the time of its passage, both by Congress and by every Department of the Government which has had anything to do with the subject. But my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] concedes this to be the law, and his proposition is to change it pro tanto as to this appropriation; no more.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] says that this is to change the whole code of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman will pardon me. I said it was a change in the code of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. It is, then, simply a proposition to change the law as to this sum of $17,500. Therefore it is in order. The appropriation is for this service, for these very schools. It is here before the House. We are considering it, and the proposition is to change the legislation as to this identical appropriation. And it certainly does retrench expenditure because it prohibits the taking from the public Treasury of the United States this sum of money, and lays the payment on the people here instead of upon the public generally. I think, therefore, the amendment is very clearly in order.

Whether there is anything to be accomplished by this narrow struggle I have very grave doubts; for time and again this question has been raised, and the issue has been made as to whether or not the law ought to have been passed. Uniformly it has been affirmed by this House. Therefore I doubt very much whether the question ought to be raised again in this way.

Mr. ROBESON. If the Chair does not require any further advice, I do not desire to add anything to what has already been said on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide.

Mr. HOLMAN. An additional remark on the point of order. Now, if it is conceded that there are two funds out of which Congress could pay a given indebtedness, that is to say, the general fund of the United States and the particular fund of the District of Columbia, can it be said that a direction to pay the money out of either of these funds is not in order?

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VALENTINE. My point of order is that this debate is out of order, as the Chair has announced his readiness to decide the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair can take care of itself.

Mr. VALENTINE. And the members of this committee have some rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Where there are two funds from which to pay a given indebtedness is it not perfectly in order to say that a given sum of money for a specific purpose shall be paid out of either of those funds?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order against the amendment offerpd by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is sustained. As the Chair understands, it has been the practice of the Secretary of the Treasury to send in estimates embracing the schools of the District, which estimates have been acted upon, and appropriations made by Congress in accordance with those estimates.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I offer the following amendment——

Mr. HISCOCK. May I not appeal to my friend from Indiana to let us pass the appropriation contained in this item? If any radical change should be made in the appropriations for the District of Columbia, would it not be better to consider the subject in connection with a general appropriation bill, rather than upon a small deficiency appropriation, which may put some sort of confusion into the organic law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think myself that appeal would have been good an hour ago. But, after a discussion of the subject for an hour, in which I believe my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has taken some part——

Mr. HISCOCK. I have taken no part.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has spoken upon the point of order. I submit that this whole paragraph is subject to a point of order. It is not in order in this bill; it is not a deficiency.

Mr. ROBESON. That point is too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know it is too late, and need not be told so by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Further debate upon the pending amendment is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by adding the following:

And the one-half of said sum which shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States shall be restored to the Treasury of the United States from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the same point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move to strike out the entire paragraph. I make that motion with the full knowledge of the fact that it is a motion to strike out a proposition which is necessary to be acted upon to enable the District of Columbia to rebuild this building which has been destroyed; and that it does not comport with the duty of the Representatives on this floor——

Mr. ROBESON. And yet the gentleman moves to strike out the whole provision for the rebuilding of this school building?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that speech will not be taken out of my time. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that his remark is an impertinent one.

Mr. ROBESON. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. HOLMAN. I said it was an impertinent remark.

Mr. ROBESON. But is it not true that the gentleman moves to strike out the whole provision for the rebuilding of this school building?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yield for these interruptions. I was going on to say, not with the spread-eagle eloquence of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] that it did not comport with the duty of this House to prevent the District of Columbia, which is exclusively under the control of Congress, from providing proper facilities for the education of the children in this District. Of course every gentleman here has understood from the beginning that this sum of money should be appropriated and this school building rebuilt. But I hold that it should be done by this District, and that it would be no more an outrage upon the people of this District to strike out this entire paragraph than it will be on the people of the whole country to charge the building of an expensive school-house in the District of Columbia upon them, and compel them to contribute to a local institution of learning established in the midst of one of the wealthiest populations of this country.

Here is a District, one of the wealthiest communities in the United States, a District favored in every conceivable manner, where the public property is under the exclusive control of Congress, and protected exclusively by the United States without imposing the least expense on the resident population, and yet the Government is called upon because of its public property in the District to reduce the taxation of the people of the District almost to nothing by making large appropriations out of the public Treasury for the local government, and even to provide for the education of the children of the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know what other gentlemen may be willing to do, but by my vote not one dollar shall ever be paid by my constituents for the purpose of building up institutions here of purely local interest which ought to be built up and maintained by the people of the District, as such institutions are built up and supported elsewhere. Why should the wealth of this District escape the duty of educating its children?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I suppose there is no principle better settled in this country, certainly none in the State of New York, than that the education of the children of the country is chargeable upon the property of the country. The doctrine that those who have children shall pay for their education has long since passed into oblivion, under the inexorable dispensation of Providence, that usually gives children to those who cannot pay for their education, and usually gives property to those who have no children. [Laughter.]

Now, having settled the principle that the education of children shall be chargeable upon property, there remains only the additional consideration, how the tax shall be levied in the District of Columbia. This District is under the control of the Government of the United States. The property of the United States is exempt from taxation. There is no power except Congress that can impose a tax upon the property of the United States in this District. This question was carefully considered in the Forty-fifth Congress, when the Committee on the District of Columbia submitted a measure which divided the taxation of this District between the United States and the property of the District. That measure having become a law, the Committee on Appropriations, on which I had the honor to serve in that Congress, brought in an appropriation bill in which the taxes were absolutely divided. There is no distinction in the present case between this and any other taxation which can be imposed in this District. It is a legitimate tax. The property of the United States is fairly chargeable with one-half the cost of the education of the children of the District; and this cost includes the erection of school-houses and the supplying of all the educational appliances which should be offered to the children who are born in this District, whether they be rich or poor.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it appear to the gentleman just that all the public property located in this District should be taken into account in determining the proportion of taxes to be borne by the Government? In New York City, for instance——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am not speaking of New York City. I answer the gentleman by saying that here in this District a bargain has been made, after fair and careful consideration, by which the Government of the United States assumed to pay half the expenses of this District; and this is one of the obligations of which it assumed to pay half. That is the answer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman think that law was fair to the people of the country?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Ah! if the law is wrong, bring in your proposition to repeal it. It has not been repealed. It is an obligation binding upon us until it is repealed; and it was obligatory on the Committee on Appropriations to bring in the clause as reported in this bill.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise. We ought to limit debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I had intended to make some reply——

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HISCOCK. I claim the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order upon any pending proposition. Debate has been exhausted.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. An amendment to the amendment is pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I renew it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. REAGAN. I only want a minute or two.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I understood that the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] would be all the debate desired on this question I certainly should not insist on my motion.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire only a minute or two.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield the floor to the gentleman for a few moments.

Mr. REAGAN. In reply to the remark of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] that there is a contract by which the Government of the United States is to pay one-half of the expenses of this District, I wish to say that he will remember, as I remember, and as will be remembered by every gentleman who was here at the time of the passage of the act referred to, that in ascertaining the responsibility of the United States Government to pay this proportion of one-half the Government was charged with the ownership of the streets, the alleys, and the avenues as its private property, while it was not credited with all the real property—public buildings and public grounds—maintained and improved exclusively at its own expense. Not only was this fraud of computation made, but the personal property, the personal assets of the entire city, as was stated by members of the committee at the time, was kept out of the calculation. The realty alone of the citizens of the District was taken into account, while the Government, in the determination of its realty, was charged with the ownership of the public streets, alleys, and avenues.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question before he takes his seat. If this appropriation be now omitted, while the law stands as it does, imposing the obligation upon the Government, do we not simply postpone this appropriation to come up as a deficiency hereafter?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know that I am able to answer that question from the gentleman's stand-point. From my stand-point, I will state what is known by most of the members here, that I fought this bill for the government of the District of Columbia when it was under consideration; I have fought it at every session since, and unless I lose my reason I expect to fight it on account of its fraud and injustice so long as I am honored with a seat on this floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, some time ago, in this debate, I suggested to gentlemen proposing amendments that they should defer their propositions until the general bill shall come in. I desire to supplement that with this remark: we now see that in the Forty-fifth Congress this question of the proportion of the taxes which each should pay was fully considered; and we also see that the criticism of my colleague [Mr. COX] is hardly fair, when we at the same time see his colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT] taking the floor as the champion of this measure, and when we see it indorsed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

This question which we have been discussing here so long was fully discussed then and was passed upon, not by decisions arrived at about wine-tables or at dinners, but by such men as those to whom I have called attention. It seems to me I have the right now to appeal to gentlemen here to forbear attacks on this system until a more proper time and another occasion.

Several MEMBERS. Vote!

Mr. HISCOCK. Let us have the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. All pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. HISCOCK'S amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

For care of and repairs to the Executive Mansion, and for furniture, as follows:
For furniture, upholstering, carpets, rugs, glassware, silverware, and kitchen utensils, $13,693.99.
For papering, painting, blankets, quilts, table-linen, and lace curtains, $2,640.20.
For two force-pumps, repairs to roof, and ordinary care and repair of mansion and green-houses, $3,665.81.
For lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds, for new gas-fixtures, repairs to the old gas-fixtures, and for purchase of wax candles, $1,000.
For removing snow and ice, $1,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of making an inquiry, I move to strike out the last paragraph. There is appropriated in this deficiency bill, so called, $23,935 for the Executive Mansion. There was appropriated last Congress, as I notice, for the present fiscal year something over $65,000 for the purpose contemplated by the items enumerated in these various paragraphs. The sum appropriated for a single year is so enormous and beyond all former experience of Congress—during the first period of Mr. Lincoln's term of office, as well as in preceding times, the amount being about $13,000, and running up by this appropriation to $100,000 for one year—that it may well arrest attention. I trust the gentleman from New York will explain how it becomes necessary, after such ample appropriations have heretofore been made, to appropriate $23,000 additional for the Executive Mansion?

Mr. HISCOCK. My answer to that is this: there is no doubt the sickness and death of General Garfield, late President of the United States, rendered the duplication of appropriations for the Executive Mansion necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. To the extent the sickness and death of General Garfield involved this expense the appropriation is eminently proper. I conceive from the character of these items no very large amount of this $23,000 can be attributed to the sickness and death of the late President. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask whether this increase entirely grows out of the sickness and death of the late President?

Mr. HISCOCK. I would not say it entirely grows out of that, I do not say that, but I say it grows largely out of that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word, and I shall not detain the committee long. The appropriation last year was about double the usual amount for several years, and rightly so, because the furniture in the Executive Mansion was in a bad condition and it was necessary to a certain extent to replace it. Therefore I now ask the gentleman from New York whether this large additional expense entirely grows out of the sickness and death of General Garfield, or is it intended to enlarge the amount to be expended for furniture?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not suppose it grows entirely out of the sickness and death of General Garfield, our late President, but it does largely. I am frank to say I have, as the committee has, looked through the estimates submitted to Congress by the Executive, and no ground has been seen why they should be reduced. We believe he is not seeking to maintain an establishment beyond what is proper for the President of the United States, and we believe that every dollar that will be expended under his direction will comport with the dignity of the United States and will be honestly expended.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not suppose the gentleman knows how it is to be expended.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. If no separate vote is demanded upon any of the amendments, I ask that the question be taken in gross upon them.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the previous question or the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. Does this bill require a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill. I submit, under the rules of the House, this being a general appropriation bill in contradistinction to the specific appropriation of money for a specific purpose, that it is necessary to take the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to hold, (although there is some doubt about the rule, but looking to the reason and purpose of having such a rule as applicable to general appropriation bills, some of which appropriate a small sum of money,) that this, within the meaning of the rule, is a general appropriation bill. If there is reason in the rule it should apply to this. The Chair will consider the matter further, however, but, unless there is objection, will order the roll to be called upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. By unanimous consent the bill might be passed without the necessity of calling the roll.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent can dispense with the rule.

Mr. MILLS. We can pass this bill early Monday morning.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; let us pass it now.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll upon the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 26, not voting 130; as follows:

Mr. OATES with Mr. CULBERSON.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. SHERWIN.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am paired with Mr. MULDROW, of Mississippi, on all political questions; but not deeming this a political question, I have thought proper to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must judge for himself as to that.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARGE OFFICE IN HOBOKEN.

Mr. HARDENBERGH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4468) to provide for a barge office in the city of Hoboken, New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. COX, of North Carolina, until the 24th instant;
To Mr. ATHERTON, for one week;
To Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, until Wednesday next, on account of important business; and
To Mr. ARMFIELD, for one week, commencing on Monday next, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The resolution adopted at the recent meeting of the National Board of Trade, held in Washington, District of Columbia, relative to the Japanese indemnity fund—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIS: Papers relating to the claim of D. O. Rousseau—to the same committee.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 20, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JOHN BAILEY, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to be excused from service upon the Committee on Education and Labor, to which the Chair appointed me on Friday. I find that it is impossible, with due regard to the performance of other duties which I have already undertaken, for me to serve on that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the Senator from Massachusetts be excused from further service upon the Committee on Education and Labor? If there be no objection, he will be excused.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancy occasioned by Mr. HOAR'S retirement.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from Captain Charles F. Powell, Corps of Engineers, of examinations and surveys of certain rivers in Oregon and the Territories of Idaho and Washington, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 16, 1882, a supplemental report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with accompanying copies of complaints, charges, and reports of revenue agents in relation to irregularities in the collection of internal revenue in the sixth collection district of North Carolina; which, on motion of Mr. VANCE, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of the Indiana Bar Association, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 420) to establish a court of appeals; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of citizens of Cooper County, Missouri, praying for the erection of suitable public buildings at Jefferson City, in that State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Missouri, praying for the removal of taxes on national banks and other banking corporations; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Missouri praying that pensions may be granted to soldiers of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS presented a memorial of the Memphis Cotton Exchange in favor of the abolition of import duties on iron ties; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of L. C. Webster and 181 others, students of the College of Oberlin, Ohio, praying for the passage of a bill providing that appointments to subordinate executive offices, with such exceptions as may be expedient, shall be made from persons whose fitness has been ascertained by competitive examinations open to all persons properly qualified, and that no removals be made except for legitimate causes and not for refusal to render party service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of citizens of California, praying for the passage of a bill regulating appointments to subordinate executive offices; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of McKean County, Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a soldiers' home at Erie, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions of a mass meeting held at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in favor of Congressional action for the suppression of polygamy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will lie on the table, a bill upon the subject having passed the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that other bills relating to the subject are before the Committee on the Judiciary; and I move that the resolutions be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home Committee, of Erie, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a bill establishing a soldiers' home in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Albany, New York, praying for an increase of pensions to those who lost an arm or leg in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of the New York State Association of Union Prisoners of War, praying for the passage of a bill granting pensions to certain Union soldiers and sailors of the late war of the rebellion who were confined in so-called confederate prisons; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Livingston County, New York, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of New York City, praying for an amendment to the Constitution so as to extend the right of suffrage without distinction on account of sex; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented a memorial of the Albany Board of Trade, in favor of the permanent organization of the signal service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Mrs. C. B. Lambert, Marian C. Porter, Harriet A. Claflin, and about one hundred other women, citizens of Massachusetts, praying for a reform in the method of appointments to the civil service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented the petition of Susan E. Alger, of Worcester, Massachusetts, mother of Warren A. Alger, deceased, late of Company D, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROVER presented the petition of La Fayette Lane and 378 others, citizens of Southern Oregon, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a wagon-road from Roseburgh, in Douglas County, Oregon, to Fort Klamath, in Lake County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of Joseph C. McCracken and others, citizens of Missouri, praying for legislation to regulate charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROOME presented additional papers to accompany the bill (S. No. 1083) referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Addie B. Bacon to the Court of Claims; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 22) to compensate the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for lost time, have instructed me to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It involves an appropriation of money, and relates to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Printing.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. McDILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 926) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 872) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, of the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia, a bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] have directed me to report it back, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, a similar bill having already passed the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. I have no objection to the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 911) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices in the city of Carson City, in the State of Nevada, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a memorial of citizens of the United States, remonstrating against the confirmation of the Socorro land grant, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 589) for the relief of Sarah McDonald, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 311) granting to California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands in that State, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WALKER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a message of the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas, to report it back with a statement that the committee are of opinion that all net proceeds arising, or that may arise, from said reservation should be appropriated to the improvement thereof. We ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the communication and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GROVER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. SAUNDERS, recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 698) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. HALE. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Census, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census, to report it with a recommendation that it pass without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Why not take it right up and pass it?

Mr. HALE. I ask now, both in accordance with my own judgment and at the request of many Senators about me, unanimous consent to take the bill up at once, in order that it may be put upon its passage. Everybody realizes how important the bill is. Everybody realizes how protracted has been the delay, and how thorough was the discussion in the other House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall have no objection to the consideration of the bill at a later hour, but I shall object to its consideration until we have time to read it. The bill having been only recently printed, I think it ought to be discussed this morning if pressed. There are some points that some of us want to examine, I do at least, and I shall object to the present consideration of the bill. I may withdraw my objection after a while.

Mr. HALE. The bill is printed; it is not long, and can be easily read. I would be very glad if Senators would send for it and examine it, simply saying that it is the identical bill passed by the House of Representatives, and that it comes here with the unanimous report of the Committee on the Census, we believing that, all things considered, it is the best bill that Congress will pass. It is very important that the bill should be passed at once, because several Legislatures are now hanging in waiting for action here in order to district their States.

As the bill is objected to now, I give notice that later in the morning, perhaps after the proceedings under the Anthony rule, I shall ask the consent of the Senate to consider it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator that he had better give notice that he will call the bill up to-morrow morning. Several Senators wish to examine it, and it would be better to take it up to-morrow morning, giving the notice for that time instead of to-day.

Mr. HALE. I would be very glad if I could bring it up to-day. I do not think much discussion will arise upon it, after it has been examined, and a day is important.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As the Senator knows, a single objection carries the bill over to-day.

Mr. HALE. I am well aware of that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest that the Senator call up the bill to-morrow morning after the close of the morning business. I think perhaps by that time all will have looked at it. There may be some Senators who are not in their seats this morning who will want to give some thought to it.

Mr. HALE. I will give notice that at half past one, after the morning hour, I shall again call it up, and seek unanimous consent for its consideration. I know I cannot proceed to-day without unanimous consent. It may be by that time that every Senator wishing to look at the bill will have taken the opportunity to read it, and will be ready for action on it. I am very desirous to push it along as fast as possible.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to my friend to put off the consideration of the bill until to-morrow, because it will be objected to to-day, and by to-morrow morning all will be ready to consider it.

Mr. HALE. Let it stand at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the honorable Senator from Maine will press the consideration of the bill at the time he has indicated to-day. I wish to add also to what he has said, that the governor of Michigan has called a special session of the Legislature for the 23d of this month in anticipation of the passage of the bill, for the purpose of redistricting the State, and, in common with other States, we are anxious that the bill shall be passed at once.

Mr. COCKRELL. I objected to the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Maine, but since the matter was called up I have read the bill, and I shall withdraw any objection I may have to its present consideration.

Mr. HALE. I will see that copies are sent for and placed upon the desk of each Senator, and I will ask each Senator, if he has the time, to look at the bill during the next hour or two.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to say, in connection with what was said by the Senators from Michigan and Maine, that my own State is ready to have its Legislature called together at any moment this bill passes, and my colleague and myself have been requested by the governor to notify him immediately upon the passage of the bill, so that he may call a special session of the Legislature at once.

PURCHASE OF THE ROCHAMBEAU PAPERS.

Mr. HOAR. In behalf of the Committee on the Library, I desire to submit a report on the Rochambean papers, which recommends the purchase of those papers. I desire that the report may be printed in the RECORD as well as in the usual form. It is a brief report and a very interesting one. The report should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, I suppose, as it recommends an appropriation.

The report was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Joint Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the Senate resolution of 25th October, 1881, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be authorized to receive, and to deposit in the Library, to be carefully preserved, the papers of the Count de Rochambeau, general in the French army in America, a catalogue of which is now with the Librarian, to await the action of Congress on the proposal of the Marquis de Rochambeau to sell and convey such papers to the United States," have considered the subject, after examination of the papers, and submit the following report:

The Rochambeau collection, now offered to the Government of the United States, consists of the military papers, letters, letter-books, and maps, which belonged to the Count de Rochambeau, marshal of France, who commanded the forces sent by the Government of France to aid the United States in the war for independence. These papers, first offered in the year 1877, through the legation of the United States in Paris, were brought over by their owner, the Marquis de Rochambeau, at the request of the Joint Committee on the Library, who desired to examine them before coming to any conclusion as to the matter referred to them. The catalogue of the papers previously furnished was accompanied by the following letter from Hon. E. B. Washburne, then representing this Government at the capital of France:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Paris, June 2, 1877.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It is a long time since I received your letter of date the 2d August last, in regard to the Rochambean papers. I have been waiting all this time to see the Marquis and find out exactly what he proposed. I have this day seen him and I learn that his idea is to sell the whole collection to the Government. He has sent Mr. Spofford a complete inventory of all the documents embraced in the collection, seventeen hundred or eighteen hundred in number. You understand that these papers are all original and in a historic point of view are of immense interest. I have myself gone over the collection and read most of the letters of Washington to Rochambeau, and I have no hesitation in saying that I consider them of vast interest to our Government, not only for publication, with notes, but as original letters of Washington to be guarded forever in the archives of our Government. The Marquis is willing to aid in editing and annotating the papers, and he is very familiar with the events of that epoch. The price he names is $20,000, and he says he has fixed upon that sum after consultation with experts who advised him what the original documents would sell for if put up at auction. I have no doubt that some of the letters of Washington would sell in England, if not in our own country, for $500 or $1,000 each.

I understand that the Marquis has submitted his proposition to Mr. Spofford. It is therefore for your committee to determine in the first instance what it will recommend in the premises, and then for Congress to act, if it should be thought proper to purchase.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. B. WASHBURNE.

Hon. T. O. HOWE,
Chairman Joint Committee on the Library.

The collection, as received under the resolution of the Senate, and placed for safe-keeping in the custody of the Librarian of Congress, embraces:

First. The original letter-books of the Count de Rochambeau, in nine volumes, covering the period from 1780 to 1784, and containing copies of multitudes of letters to and from that general, relating principally to the conduct of the war in America.

Second. About fourteen hundred original letters and documents, covering the years 1780 to 1794, and embracing letters and military papers by French and American officers, besides numerous letters of instruction, &c., from the French Government to the Count de Rochambeau, concerning the details of outfit, payment of troops, rank, and military operations generally. Among these interesting documents are one hundred and fifty-two letters from General Washington to the Count de Rochambeau, all upon military affairs or topics of public interest. Out of the mass of more than fourteen hundred manuscript documents it has been found that less than sixty have been printed.

Third. A manuscript "Mémoire pour l'Historie de la Guerre eu Amerique," with corrections in the hand of the Count de Rochambeau.

Fourth. A "Mémoire du Roi pour servir à l'instruction particulière à M. le chevalier de Ternay, chef d'escadre des armées navales."

Fourth. A "Journal des opérations du corps français."

Fifth. A series of sixty-nine military and topographical maps, all of the period covered by the operations of the French land and naval forces in America. Of these, thirty-eight are original charts or maps carefully drawn to scale by engineers of the French army, and colored, with accompanying legends. This precious and unique series of original maps, delineating, as it does, the entire series of campaigns in which the French forces were engaged from Rhode Island to Virginia, presents authentic contemporaneous memorials of battle-fields, camps, marches, and sieges of the highest interest and value to the historian of the war of the Revolution. They serve to fill many gaps in the chartography of that war, and in the judgment of some of those who are well qualified to pronounce upon their worth they are even more valuable than the original manuscripts themselves. The latter combined with the maps and charts furnish a series of most interesting, authentic, and complete materials for the history of our allies in conjunction with the American forces during their long and most creditable service in America. In the united judgment of the committee they should be acquired by our Government to form a permanent portion of our historical archives. The committee recommend that the sum of $20,000, for the purchase of the Rochambeau collection, to be preserved in the Library of Congress, be appropriated.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1256) for the relief of Cyrenus Beers or his personal representatives, and also the personal representatives of Vail & Robinson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1262) making appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Missouri River opposite the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1263) to amend the act establishing a Territorial government for Utah, and to change the name to Altamont; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1264) to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1265) for the relief of G. E. W. Sharretts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1266) appropriating money for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a custom-house, post-office, land office, signal station, and other Government offices in the city of Duluth, State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1267) to correct the Army record of certain officers named therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1268) relating to certain lands in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GROOME. At the request of a prominent resident of this District, and without any knowledge of its provisions, I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1269) to incorporate the Columbia Manufacturing Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1270) granting arrears of pension to Laura J. Prine; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1271) to authorize the issuing of silver certificates of certain denominations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) authorizing the printing of 15,000 additional copies of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. TELLER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 40) directing the cancellation of the one and two dollar United States notes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. ANTHONY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN (by request) submitted an amendment to the bill (S. No. 1181) to regulate promotion in and to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Lewis Downey, Evan Jones, and James McDaniel be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. LAPHAM, it was Ordered, That the papers and documents in the case of Joseph Segar be taken from the files of the Secretary and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON, it was Ordered That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of F. E. Stewart, administratrix of Michael J. Stewart, deceased, of Tennessee, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

On motion of Mr. BAYARD, it was Ordered, That 500 copies of Senate bill No. 86, providing for a commission upon the tariff, be printed for the use of the Senate.

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS OF CITIZENS.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That Article 6 of the Constitution declares "that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States;"

That any act of Congress which deprives or denies the right to vote, or makes ineligible to office or public trust under the United States the members of any church or denomination or form of religion, or those who do not believe or practice or profess the faith or observances or rites of any church, society, or form of religion, is not a law in pursuance of the Constitution and is not the supreme law of the land, and the judges are not bound thereby.

That section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution declares that "no bill of attainder * * * shall be passed;" and article 5 declares that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury," * * * "nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law;" and the fourteenth article, section 1, of the Constitution declares that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, * * * and no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

That these provisions forbid Congress from enacting any law by which any person shall be deprived of or denied any right, privilege, or immunity conferred by law on other citizens, because of any alleged criminal or other act, without judicial ascertainment by due process of law; and all acts of Congress having such force and effect are not laws in pursuance of the Constitution and are not the supreme law of the land, and the judges are not bound thereby.

That the free exercise of religion without any law of Congress respecting the same according to each man's conscience and freedom from responsibility under the law for his acts until they are judicially ascertained by due process of law, whether such acts are criminal and concern the States or are such as concern individuals, whether they are punishable by taking life, liberty, or property or by the denial of some right, privilege, or immunity, and the right to hold office or public trust without being subject to any religious test as a qualification, constitute that "justice" to establish which and as the substance of that "liberty" to secure which the Constitution was ordained and established and acts of Congress denying or depriving any of the people of them or of any part of them are not in pursuance of the Constitution and are not binding on the judge.

PROPOSED AMERICAN CONGRESS.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the interests of peace between nations, the obligations and rights which are reciprocal between the United States and all the other peoples or governments of the Americas, as well as the commercial interests of the people of the United States, render it proper that the Government of the United States should in some proper form adopt measures to settle the controversy between Chili and Peru, and prevent the forcible dismemberment of Peru; that a Congress, to be convened in Washington City, and composed of representatives from the peoples and governments of the different States of North and South and Central America, for the purpose of agreeing on some just method of settlement of all questions now existing or that shall hereafter arise between these governments, would be a wise and beneficial measure.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the resolution be printed and laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table, subject to the call of the Senator from Florida.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 977) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, of the United States Navy.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Grand Island, Nebraska, in the month of August, 1882; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of Julius E. Hilgard, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1881, for distribution by said Superintendent.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the usual resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

LUCY BURCH AND OTHERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the call of the Calendar under the Anthony rule is in order.

Mr. PLATT. I ask to take from the Calendar the resolution reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, paying six months' salary to the widow of John C. Burch, late Secretary of the Senate; six months' salary to the widow of Andrew D. Banks, late keeper of the stationery, and six months' salary to the mother of William H. Manly, deceased, who was a page in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution indicated by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McPHERSON. I object to the consideration of the resolution. Under the Anthony rule, I think we should go to the Calendar and proceed with the regular order of business.

Mr. PLATT. I claim that the resolution which I wish to have taken up comes under the Anthony rule.

Mr. McPHERSON. The bill now under consideration on the Calendar has been reached four times, and until the Senate shall conclude its judgment on that bill I shall object to the consideration of every other question urged upon the body out of its regular order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to remind the Senator from New Jersey that the bill in which he is interested was passed over twice, to my certain knowledge, because of his absence from the body; and I think it is becoming that we should dispose of this matter, which is of an unusual character, before an objection is interposed of the kind made by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. The bill to which I refer has been passed over twice when I have been present. I do not know what has been done in my absence; but it has been twice passed over while I have been in the Senate. I do not wish to press the bill to a vote of the Senate if any other matter more important is to be considered; but as to postponing it for everything that any Senator may see fit to call up, I certainly cannot do so longer.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not the slightest objection to the bill in which the Senator from New Jersey is interested. I do not object to its consideration, for I am not in the habit of objecting to bills that Senators wish to have considered; but I think under the circumstances the Senator from Connecticut ought to have the right of way.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not understand the purport of the resolution, as we could not hear the Senator on this side of the Chamber. Certainly, for the consideration of the matter I am now informed it is, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate. The Chief Clerk will report the substitute reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in lieu of the two resolutions which had been referred to the committee.

The Acting Secretary read the following resolution, reported on the 16th instant:

Resolved, That the Acting Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Lucy Burch, widow of John C. Burch, deceased, late Secretary of the United States Senate, the sum of $3,048, being an amount equal to six months' salary as Secretary aforesaid. Also, to Mrs. Virginia Banks, widow of Andrew D. Banks, deceased, late keeper of the stationery of the Senate, the sum of $1,051.20, being an amount equal to six months' salary as keeper of the stationery aforesaid. Also, to Mrs. Mary E. Manly, mother of H. W. Manly, deceased, late page in the Senate, the sum of $360, being an amount equal to six months' salary as page aforesaid. The above sums to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. PLATT. The initials of the page's name, "Manly," are transposed; they should be "W. H." instead of "H. W. Manly." I wish that correction made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution having been twice read is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Grand Island, Nebraska, in the month of August, 1882, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. LOGAN. A few days ago during the consideration of the Calendar, when I was absent from the Senate on account of illness, the bill (S. No. 59) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army, was passed over, as I am informed, without losing its place on the Calendar. I should like to have the consent of the Senate to take that bill up now and have it acted on. I do not wish to discuss it at all, but I desire to have the bill taken up so as to let the Senate act on it. It will take but a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In lines 6 and 7 it is proposed to strike out the words "retired list of the," so as to read "to appoint him to the Army, with the rank," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. VEST. Is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the Anthony rule it is.

Mr. VEST. Is there a motion to take it up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate under the Anthony rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rise to a question of order. I do not understand that the bill is under the Anthony rule. It has been passed over, and is not the first bill on the Calendar under the Anthony rule; and I do not understand that the Senator from Illinois moves to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Chief Clerk that the bill was informally passed over by reason of the absence of the Senator from Illinois, without losing its place on the Calendar. Therefore it stands first on the Calendar. Hence the Chair recognizes it as being before the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. I suppose a bill stands first on the Calendar whenever a Senator is present who was absent and the bill was passed over on account of his absence. The Senator from Illinois being here the Chair has explicitly stated that the bill comes before the Senate as being first on the Calendar. Let it be understood, so that it will not occur again, that when a case is passed over on account of the absence by sickness or otherwise of any Senator, the bill still holding its place, it is the first case to be considered whenever the Senator is present and calls it up.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; and I call up the bill now.

Mr. VEST. I only want to say to the Senator from Illinois that I desire to make no sort of factious opposition to the bill, but I hope he will let it pass over to-day. I am opposed to the bill, as is very well known to the Senate, but I have no disposition to make any sort of factious opposition to it. If it can be passed over to-day and be taken up to-morrow——

Mr. LOGAN. At the last session of Congress, it will be remembered, I called the bill up time and again, and it was objected to and had to go over. It has been on the Calendar now ever since the first of the session, and I have not called it up before. I was absent when the bill was reached under the Anthony rule, and it was passed over until I should return to the Senate. I was absent on account of sickness. This morning I ask that the bill be taken up. I have no disposition to prolong debate upon it, but I ask to have it voted on by the Senate. It merely provides that General Grant shall be nominated to the Senate by the President of the United States with the rank of General to be retired with the retired pay of the rank of General, which is three-quarters of the active pay, the same as applies to all other officers. That is the bill and all there is of it.

Mr. VEST. I understand the provisions of the bill very well, and I desire to give some reasons why I shall not vote for it. I do not want to have the bill taken up to-day. I did not expect it to come up to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. I insist on taking it up.

Mr. VEST. For the reason I have stated I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to, and the next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

Mr. LOGAN. How is the bill passed over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the Anthony rule a single objection carries a bill over "at any stage of the proceedings."

Mr. INGALLS. "Unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for a vote of the Senate on taking up the bill. I do not wish the bill to be postponed continuously by objection, as it was at the last Congress. The Senator from Missouri said he would make no factious opposition to it, and yet on his objection at the last session of Congress it was put over time and again until Congress adjourned; and it was done on his motion alone. Now, the same objection is made again. I ask that the bill be taken up, and I ask a vote of the Senate for that purpose. I move to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves to postpone all pending and prior orders, giving notice that if that motion is carried he will move to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know that I am opposed to the bill, but it is very unusual for the Senate to take up a bill when a Senator states that he wishes to submit some remarks and will be ready the next day to proceed with it. I believe it is almost the uniform practice, when a Senator simply says "I did not know that the bill was coming up, I shall not object to it to-morrow," that the bill is passed over for the day; and it is very unusual to force a bill upon the Senate when a Senator says that he wishes to submit some remarks upon it, or wishes to examine it. I hope that the Senator from Illinois will let the bill go over until to-morrow, when I will promise to help him to take it up.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that I have been about as generous in the Senate as anybody else about bills. I have never tried to force a bill on the Senate. But this bill has been before the Senate for nearly two years. It has been postponed by precisely the same tactics that are adopted this morning. I will say that the Senator from Missouri had the opportunity last session to speak on the bill. I called it up then several times. He has an opportunity now to speak on it. I do not desire to discuss it. He can only speak under the rule to-morrow the same as he can to-day. The rule gives a certain length of time for debate, and he can only speak the same time to-morrow that he can to-day. It is out of no discourtesy whatever that I insist on taking up the bill, but I insist that I shall be treated in the Senate the same as other Senators are treated, in reference to bills of which I have charge. No other bill that I know of has been objected to as this has been, so as to put it over through a whole Congress. However, I submitted to it. Now the same tactics are resorted to again. I understand it perfectly. I say to the Senator from West Virginia that it is out of no discourtesy to him or to any other Senator that I insist on a vote now; and I will not agree to postpone the bill so far as I am concerned.

Mr. VEST. I want to make just one statement in reference to the word "tactics," used by the Senator. Everything that I have done has been inside of the rules of the Senate, openly and fairly.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree to that.

Mr. VEST. I told the Senator from Illinois at the last session that I would oppose the bill by every sort of legitimate means, and I propose to do so now. I am as ready to make what few remarks I propose to make to-day as at any time. The only thing that I needed was a very few minutes to get a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the reference to which I could not find. That is the whole of it. If the Senator insists under these circumstances upon proceeding with the bill, let the Senate determine. I still make the objection, as I have a right to do under the rule.

Mr. LOGAN. I can only say to the Senator that in using the word "tactics" I did not use it in any offensive sense, but I certainly was authorized to use language of that kind from the practice adopted that he mentions now, because the Senator said at the last session he would oppose the bill by every means that were legitimate. Tactics is one of the means, as we call it. It is a military term, but yet it applies sometimes here in the Senate Chamber when means are resorted to for the purpose of delaying propositions or bills. It is not out of any desire to antagonize any one, but I desire a vote on this proposition, and I have had it here long enough to justify me in demanding a vote.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I beg leave to suggest to the Senator from Illinois whether it would not be well to take this bill up and then let it stand to be discussed at the close of the routine business to-morrow morning. I should feel very unwilling myself to vote to take up a bill when it has been passed over in consequence of the illness of a Senator to be taken up when he returned. The Senate generally could not know when that Senator would return until he appeared in his place, and when another Senator rises and says that, while he wishes to address himself to that bill, he has mislaid a document which he has not got under his hand at this moment, and that the bill shall be considered to-morrow as it is now without any further opposition which would postpone it, I should think myself guilty of a discourtesy to the Senator from Missouri if I voted to take up the bill under these circumstances, that is provided he will assent to considering it to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I have not the slightest desire to delay a vote of the Senate on this subject; but last session when the honorable Senator from Illinois brought forward this bill from the Military Committee I favored (although I did not offer it myself) a substitute for the bill. I understand the bill to be a personal bill of respect and advantage to a distinguished citizen. The question is, how you shall extend that. I thought then and I think now that it would be a great deal wiser and accomplish a great deal more if there were a retiring pension established by law for every man who has held the position of President of the United States. Among those I proposed to embrace ex-President Grant. I believe it is a good opportunity for making a provision, the justice and good sense of which would be recognized by the American people. It was not with the intent to delay any mark of advantage or respect to the individual in question that I was in favor of the substitute to which I refer. I will say now that if this bill is to be discussed, I shall, or I hope some other member of the Senate will, move the amendment that I have referred to.

It would be a very easy matter I think to give reasons, strong and controlling, why a man who ever has been called on to exercise the executive powers of this Government ought after his retirement from office to be beyond the reach of either want or inconvenience by reason of the lack of personal fortune. This would tend to secure the exercise of that very independence necessary and proper for the execution of the duties of his high office.

I hope therefore that if the Senator from Illinois desires to take this bill up, it may, on the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, lie over for the present and be taken up to-morrow again. I mean by "lie over," to be passed by informally, in order that the matter may be met and discussed. And I trust there will be nothing in the mind of the Senator from Illinois to make him suppose there is anything like a disposition to make irregular opposition to the consideration of this measure. I remember his calling the question, perhaps half a dozen times at the last session; but I also remember that it was toward the close of the session and it never on any occasion, by a vote of the Senate, was brought before the Senate. As I understand, the question always arose upon taking it up, and in so far as that there was discussion such as was permitted under the rules, but the merits of the question were never before the Senate, because there was other business which the Senate preferred to consider in advance. As far as I am concerned, and as far as those around me are concerned, there is not the slightest disposition to delay the discussion. I think enough has been said by the Senator from Missouri to make me desire, upon his statement, not to take it up this morning. There would be at any rate but twenty minutes for the discussion. I think the Senator from Illinois must be aware that the full hearing of this bill would occupy longer than that.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know any Senator who has yielded oftener than I have in reference to matters of this kind, but it will not do for Senators to say that there has been no opposition to this bill but merely a desire to have it discussed. The RECORD shows differently. Now the Senator from Delaware makes a suggestion that he desires, and that others desire to have a different kind of bill, so as to retire all ex-Presidents. Why has not the Senator proposed such a bill? I have not heard of anybody proposing it. This bill has been antagonized in divers and sundry ways by mysterious bills that were going to be proposed, but I have never heard of any being proposed.

Mr. BAYARD. I will tell the Senator why I did not propose it. It was to be proposed by another Senator, a member from Massachusetts.

Mr. LOGAN. I am opposed to the bill that the Senator suggests, for reasons that I could give. As I said before, this is an exceptional case, and I propose the retirement of this individual on his military record, as I deem that the only character of record upon which an Army man should be retired. It is the only pride in retirement that any man has who has been in the Army, to be retired on his military record. That is the reason why I propose the bill as I have done.

So far as giving the Senator from Missouri an opportunity of making a speech is concerned, I have no desire to interfere with his speaking. I always like to hear him. I certainly have no objection to hearing him; and if he desires to make a speech in opposition to this bill, and says the objection he has to going on now is because he has not a RECORD now with him that he wants, and the Senate will agree unanimously that this bill shall be taken up after the morning business to-morrow morning and acted upon, I have no objection. But if the bill is to be met by dilatory motions and objections as it has been ever since it came before the Senate, then I propose to proceed with it now, if the Senate will allow me. If the Senate will unanimously agree that it shall be acted upon to-morrow, either defeated or passed then, I will agree to postpone it till then; but I want to at least intrench myself in some way, so that I shall not be baffled any more in reference to this bill. I will ask the Senator now if he will assent that that agreement be made, so that this bill be taken up and acted on to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. I have not asked that the bill go over to enable me to make a speech. I have no set speech to make on this question. I am as ready now as I ever shall be to give my views on this question. I shall not need more than a minute to refer to the RECORD I need. I have already found the RECORD.

Mr. LOGAN. Then there is no reason why we should not proceed.

Mr. VEST. I leave the matter to the Senate. I do not want the bill to go over in order that I may make a speech.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator does not wish the bill to go over, I do not know anybody else that does. I am willing to accommodate the Senator, but he says he has found the RECORD he wanted and does not wish the bill to go over now. I ask the Senate to take it up. I ask unanimous consent now that the bill be considered, inasmuch as the Senator from Missouri is ready to discuss it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the Senator's motion to postpone prior orders.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, then; let the yeas and nays be taken.

Mr. ALLISON. Unanimous consent may dispense with the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALDRICH's and Mr. ALLISON's names were called.

Mr. ALLISON. Can we not have unanimous consent to take up this bill although the yeas and nays have been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion cannot be withdrawn, as the Chair understands, after the ordering of the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. By unanimous consent we can settle every thing. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up, so as to dispense with the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the motion to postpone the prior orders be withdrawn and that the bill be taken up. Is there objection?

Mr. BAYARD. I thought the yeas and nays had been ordered, and that the call of the roll was proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the roll was interrupted by the Senator from Iowa to ask unanimous consent that that motion be withdrawn, and that the bill be considered by unanimous consent. No response, however, had been made on the roll-call. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and the roll-call will be suspended, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely rise to ask the Senator from Illinois on the bill now before the Senate if he will allow a day's consideration. I do not like to present my views now as to whether it is or is not a preferable mode of dealing with this subject to pass a measure that shall pension ex-Presidents, and I should like to offer a substitute for the bill in that respect. I am very clear of the propriety of the measure to which I have referred, in the abstract. I do not know whether it will meet the approval of the Senate or not; I am inclined to think from some things I have heard that it may not; but I think it right to bring before the Senate and before the American people the question of pensioning ex-Presidents. I do not know of any better occasion to do so than the present, and I therefore suggest to the Senator that he do not press the bill to a final vote until to-morrow, which will afford a very short time for the discussion anyway. I ask the Senator from Illinois whether that will be agreeable to him.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that I have no disposition to press this bill unnecessarily, but the bill will lose its place if I agree to a postponement, unless there is unanimous consent that it shall be taken up after the morning business to-morrow and acted on. Now, if unanimous consent can be given that it shall be the business in the morning to-morrow, I have no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator asks unanimous consent, I shall not object.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not ask it, but if the Senator will ask it, I shall not object as far as I am concerned. If he desires to make any remarks, or to introduce any amendment, I will agree that the bill shall be postponed until to-morrow, provided that the Senate will agree that it shall be the order of business, and that we shall proceed with it.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit to the Chair whether there will be any objection to that arrangement.

Mr. LOGAN. After the morning business to-morrow, that it shall be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware asks that this bill be laid aside informally, with the understanding by unanimous consent that it shall be the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; that is not it.

Several SENATORS. In the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That it shall be considered within the morning hour of to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. After the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the regular routine morning business.

Mr. HOAR. Let us understand that, Mr. President.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire that the bill shall be taken up to-morrow and its consideration continued until it is disposed of. That is what I desire, and that is what I want an understanding about. That is the proposition, that this bill shall be the unfinished business, that it shall be taken up and considered until it is finished. That is the proposition I make, to which I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. Reserving the same rights to-morrow as now.

Mr. LOGAN. Precisely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to this bill coming up in the morning hour.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I am placed in a position where I cannot do otherwise than insist on a vote now.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Chair to announce that unanimous consent had been given to the present taking up of the bill. That has been done. I understood the Chair to announce that the bill was up. This second request for unanimous consent was merely a substitute for the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. We will go ahead with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 6, after "the" it is proposed to strike out "retired list of the;" so as to make the clause read:

That in recognition of the eminent public services of Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint him to the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was in line 7, after "and," to strike out "full pay of General of the Army," and insert "grade of General, to be placed on the retired list with pay accordingly. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only;" so as to make the clause read:

With the rank and grade of General, to be placed on the retired list with pay accordingly. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this bill is an innovation upon the established practice and principles of the Government in regard to the retired list of the Army. This bill is utterly without precedent in the legislation of Congress. It takes General Grant from civil life, after he had voluntarily left the military service, and places him upon the retired list in utter disregard of the requirements and provisions of existing law.

During the discussion of this bill in the Forty-sixth Congress the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] stated that Democratic Senators then in the majority in this body had passed bills placing upon the retired list an officer from Oregon and one from Baltimore, both of whom had left the Army for civil life. I have no recollection of these bills, and have been unable to find them in the record of the Forty-sixth Congress. The Senator may be more fortunate and may be able to make good his statement; but in another assertion made by the Senator in the same debate I am sure that he is mistaken. The RECORD shows that the Senator from Illinois charged me with not only voting for the bills but with supporting one of them in debate. The Senator is mistaken. Mr. President, I have never spoken for any such bill, and if I have ever so voted it was inadvertently and because without minute examination I relied upon the favorable report of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the Senator from Illinois was then and is now so distinguished a member.

Mr. LOGAN. Will it disturb the Senator if I right there make a statement so that he will understand it? I do not know anything about searching the RECORD; I have not searched the RECORD; but I will state the facts. I have before stated two cases of restoration, and I can give the cases now. The Senator from Oregon will well remember one of them, because he introduced the bill. I was not in the Senate at the time those two bills passed; it was at a time when I was not a member of the Senate; but that makes no difference. General Burnside reported one of the bills, and I am not sure but that he reported both. One of them was for the purpose of retiring a Colonel Lee, well remembered by members of the Military Committee, who lived in Baltimore, or somewhere in Maryland at any rate. It was done and he was put on the retired list. He resigned early in the war. The other one was a colonel who lives in Oregon. I do not remember his name now.

Mr. PLUMB. Haller.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, Haller, who was restored to the Army by act of Congress, and now has been placed on the retired list as colonel.

Mr. SLATER. Allow me to explain a moment in regard to Colonel Haller. Colonel Haller had been peremptorily dismissed from the Army without a trial or a hearing.

Mr. LOGAN. I am speaking of men who were in civil life, and who were by act of Congress restored to the Army. Mr. Lee had resigned; that case will be remembered very well by the members of the committee. I only know the cases as they were given to me after I came back to the Senate. Colonel Lee resigned in 1861 or 1862, I do not remember which, and was by an act of Congress authorized to be nominated as colonel on the retired list, and it was so done. Haller having been dismissed from the Army, was by an act of Congress authorized to be nominated by the President, which was done. These are the two cases.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, if I ever gave my vote for any bill which put upon the retired list of the Army an officer who had voluntarily left military for civil life, I did it inadvertently, and relying, as the usage is in the Senate, upon the favorable report of the Military Committee, in which, in common with other Senators, I have unlimited confidence—unlimited so far as ordinary cases and ordinary bills are concerned. This is an extraordinary bill, and while the Military Committee have reported favorably, it is without precedent and is a direct violation as I think of existing law. And this is only a majority report, as my colleague suggests.

I do not think the Senator can find my vote recorded for any bill placing an officer upon the retired list, who had voluntarily left the Army for the pursuits of civil life, and if there is such record, I cannot now remember the vote. It is true that I voted for the bills authorizing the President to place General Fitz-John Porter and General Ord upon the retired list, but the former had been unjustly and illegally deprived of his military rank, as I believed, and the latter had served forty-one years, five months, and six days in the Army; was sixty-two years old on the 19th of October, 1880, and so far from having left the service for civil pursuits had given his whole life to the military profession, and in the words of General Sherman, accompanying the report of the committee, was "singularly unfitted to embark in any civil occupation." Neither of these cases are at all like that in the bill before the Senate; nor can any precedent for this proposed legislation be found in the action of Congress in regard to General Washington or General Scott. In 1798, during the administration of the elder Adams, and when war with France was imminent, Washington was urged to leave his home at Mount Vernon, for the purpose of commanding the Army, and Congress unanimously passed an act creating the office of lieutenant-general, to which rank he was at once appointed. So far from being placed upon the retired list, Washington accepted the appointment in order to enter active service, and to give his great name and military skill to the defense of his country against a foreign foe.

In 1799 the act creating the office of lieutenant-general was repealed, and in 1852 the brevet rank was conferred upon General Scott by resolution, but he remained in command of the Army for some years afterward. In neither of these cases is found a precedent for the present extraordinary bill.

In the debate upon this bill in the Forty-sixth Congress, and to which I have referred, the Senator from Illinois was pleased to ascribe the opposition to this measure to partisan prejudice, and he exhorted Senators on this side of the chamber to lay aside all political feeling and approach this bill in a broad and catholic spirit of nationality, as giving credit to a great soldier. I quote the language of the Senator from Illinois, copied from the RECORD:

> True, we might repeat a long list of victorious leaders that have been preferred by the legislative department, with the power in its hands, on account of their meritorious conduct. And shall the column of this mighty nation's array stand broken in the presence of future generations? Why? Because of party prejudice. Sir, it is not the kind of history for men to make; it is not the kind of magnanimity for men to show.

Mr. President, I desire to place before the Senate an act of magnanimity performed by the Republican party, which not only "broke the column of this mighty nation's array in the presence of future generations," but in the presence of this generation added another name to the long list of those who have fallen victims to "party prejudice."

In the Forty-fifth Congress a bill was passed, only six votes dissenting——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will suspend; the morning hour has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, sir, I insist on proceeding with this bill, inasmuch as that was the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not able to decide for the Senate exactly what was agreed to by unanimous consent, and therefore the Chair calls attention to the fact that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. I asked unanimous consent to take up this bill and proceed with it till it was finished, and that was the consent that was given.

Mr. VEST. I prefer to go on.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly the Senate will not take the Senator from Missouri off his feet. There will be certainly unanimous consent that he shall proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair simply calls attention to the fact because the manner in which the question was put does not define certainly what was unanimously consented to.

Mr. LOGAN. That was the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Whether the consideration of the bill should continue beyond the morning hour, or cease within the morning hour, is the point.

Mr. LOGAN. I certainly made the statement to the Senate that the bill be taken up and proceeded with until it was finished; and then I agreed to the proposition of the Senator from Delaware to postpone until to-morrow with the same understanding before it was objected to, and we could not get unanimous consent for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has held that this bill was the first business in order under the Anthony rule. It was objected to and went over. The Senator from Illinois then moved to postpone the pending and prior orders, with notice that he should move to proceed to the consideration of this bill. Pending the call of the roll on that motion, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asked unanimous consent for the Senator from Illinois to withdraw that motion, and unanimous consent to take up the bill. That unanimous consent was given, and the Chair decided that the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. Now, if the Senator from Illinois, independent of any motion, had asked unanimous consent to take up the bill within the morning hour, and it had so been taken up, it would certainly have to give way to the unfinished business at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. McMILLAN. Would it not be in order for the President to ask the Senate whether the understanding of the Senate was that the bill should be proceeded with after the expiration of the morning hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly; and that is what the Chair desires that the Senate shall decide for itself.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I ask that that question be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the continuance of the bill under consideration?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, Mr. President; I think the understanding was that the bill should be taken up and proceeded with after the expiration of the morning hour. ["No!" "No!"] If that was the understanding——

Mr. BUTLER. That was not my understanding at all. I have no desire, however, to interfere with the remarks of the Senator from Missouri. I can only explain my own position. When I gave consent to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois, it was that the bill should be taken up, not to be proceeded with after the expiration of the morning hour, as is now proposed. If I had supposed that that was the purpose, I should not have given consent, for I think there are other measures of more importance to be considered than this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, suppose I state the proposition. I have no doubt that there are other bills of more importance, but the proposition was this: The morning hour had not expired, but the morning business was over; there was no further morning business, and we proceeded to the Calendar.

Mr. PENDLETON. Under the Anthony rule.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir, under the Anthony rule; and I called up this bill. Then objection was made and it was desired that it should go over until to-morrow. I then asked that the bill be taken up and considered until it was acted on, and I agreed afterward that if the Senate would consent to that same proposition for to-morrow I would agree to that. That was about to be agreed to when the Senator from Missouri suggested that he did not desire any further postponement. The Senator from Delaware made the same proposition, and I agreed to it; but Senators objected. It was the understanding, as I supposed, that this bill should be taken up and acted upon. After what has been said here, that there was no disposition to prevent this bill being acted upon, I hope Senators will not now interpose an objection for the purpose of preventing action upon the bill.

Mr. FERRY. I am heartily in favor of the bill proposed by the Senator from Illinois; but I deem it due to the ruling of the Chair to state that he has in my judgment correctly ruled. During the morning hour the Senator from Illinois asked that this bill be taken up specially. The Senate agreed to that proposition, but of course it was confined to the morning hour, as it was taken up within the morning hour. When half past one arrived of course the pending unfinished business, which is the arrears of pensions resolution, came up in order, and it became the duty of the Chair, as he has faithfully discharged it, to call the attention of the Senate to it and bring up the unfinished business, which is that resolution. Now, the Senator from Illinois will reach his object readily by moving to postpone the pending order and stating that he intends to take up this bill for the advantage and benefit of ex-President Grant. That will bring the Senate directly to the test whether they wish to consider this bill, and I am prepared to vote for that proposition.

Mr. VEST. I opposed the consideration of this bill originally. I only desired to speak about ten minutes upon it, but still the consideration was finally agreed upon by the Senate. Now I ask the Senate to allow me to finish what few remarks I have to make, and then they can dispose of the bill as they see proper.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection, as far as I am concerned, to the Senator proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Missouri proceeding to the end of his remarks? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. VEST. I shall detain the Senate but a very few minutes.

I was about proceeding to say, Mr. President, that during the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress a bill was passed by the House of Representatives, with only six votes in the negative, authorizing the President to place upon the retired list my predecessor upon this floor, General James Shields, of Missouri. That bill came to a Republican Senate. Broken in body and in fortune, maimed by shot and shell, with the snows of seventy winters upon his head, this gallant Irishman came to the Congress of his adopted country, and begged for the pittance which would give comfort to his declining years. Bulwer, with matchless pen and pathos, has drawn the picture of a wounded veteran about to pledge for a crust of bread his cross of the Legion of Honor, given him upon the battle field by the Emperor himself; but this picture of fiction grows faint and colorless when I state that the gallant old soldier who came for relief to the Forty-fifth Congress had been forced by actual want to pawn the swords presented to him by grateful States for gallantry and heroism. It would seem, Mr. President, that a case like that would exorcise even the fiend of party; but let the record show.

The bill placing General Shields upon the retired list passed the House with only six votes opposing, and was taken up in the Republican Senate. By a party vote, only one Democratic Senator voting in the affirmative, the bill now pending, placing General Grant on the retired list was added as an amendment.

The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who I am sorry to see is not now in the Chamber, after having voted for the amendment, proceeded, in a speech remarkable for its clearness and emphasis, to give the reasons why he should vote against the bill as amended. So convincing is this argument, and so exactly does it express my views upon the question now before the Senate, that I shall make no apology for reproducing it upon this occasion. In order that the argument may be fully appreciated I will state that General Shields had been defeated for the position of Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives but a short time before the introduction of the bill then under discussion in the Senate:

> Mr. President, the history of this legislation, or rather the history of what preceded it, is a little peculiar. According to the public history, however, (which of course we are bound to suppose cannot be true,) a certain party in this country that has had a good many opinions within the last fifteen or twenty years, though the general tendency of them has been in one direction, thought it convenient to honor and employ and pay a gentleman who had been engaged for four years in an attempt to destroy his country; and in the course of that endeavor this, as I must suppose erroneous, history reports that the party was met with a proposition to employ a distinguished citizen formerly of Illinois and now of Missouri I believe, in the same place, who had unhappily as it appears fought on the wrong side, who had followed the flag of the Union instead of the flag of the confederacy, and he of course was beaten. That misfortune having fallen upon this gallant soldier, the hero of two wars as this bill states, it was then proposed to put him on the retired list of the Army of the United States, and a bill has been sent to us by the other House to do that, as I must presume if this history be true, as a remedy or compensation for this misfortune that had happened to him. He was not fit to be employed in the public service, having fought in two wars for his country, as long as there was anybody who had fought against his country that wanted the place; but he was fit to be put into the retired list of the Army of the United States as a means of pecuniary compensation for the loss he had sustained in failing to be employed otherwise in the public service.

Mr. President, this is a "statement of the case," if I may use a legal phrase, and I hope the Senator from Vermont will not consider it disrespectful if, before further reading his able argument, I interpolate certain facts in this statement the truth of which will not be denied, but the presence of which will add much to the logical symmetry and accuracy of the whole speech. At the time of the distinguished Senator's argument the facts to which I allude were not in existence. General Grant was then absent from this country, and, as we were once told by an eloquent Senator not now a member of this body, he was then being honored by a whole continent, which had "uncovered before him." It is safe to presume that the Senator from Vermont would in the light of subsequent events, and with that candor which always characterizes his political action, now make some such statement as this:

"Mr. President, the history of this legislation, or rather the history of what preceded it, is a little peculiar. According to the public history, however, (which, of course, we are bound to suppose cannot be true,) a certain party in this country that has had a good many opinions within the last fifteen or twenty years, though the general tendency of them has been in one direction—viz: to obtain power by any means—thought it convenient to hold a national convention in the city of Chicago for the purpose of nominating a candidate for the Presidency, and in the course of that endeavor this, as I must suppose, erroneous history reports that the party was met with a proposition to nominate a distinguished citizen formerly of Illinois and now of New York, I believe, who had led the armies of the Union to victory, and to whom an incalculable debt of gratitude was due from the country. He, of course, was beaten. That misfortune having fallen upon this gallant soldier, the hero of two wars, it is now proposed to put him on the retired list of the Army of the United States, and a bill has been introduced in the Senate to do that, as I must presume if this history be true, as a remedy or compensation for this misfortune that had happened to him. He was not fit to be employed in the public service, having fought in two wars for his country, as long as there was anybody from Ohio who wanted the place; but he is fit to be put on the retired list of the Army of the United States as a means of pecuniary compensation for the loss he had sustained in failing to be employed otherwise in the public service."

Mr. President, having so far amended this statement of facts as to conform to the actual facts in existence, I proceed now to read the argument of the Senator from Vermont against the passage of the bill, which to my mind is absolutely conclusive:

Now—

Said Mr. EDMUNDS—

let us see what the retired branch of the Army of the United States is, and what is the fitness of appointing any civilian, any volunteer officer or soldier who leaves his occupation and engages in the military service of his country in a time of emergency, and only engages for that time of emergency, and returns to his own private occupation when the emergency is over. The act of Congress of 1861 which founded the retired list begins by saying that—

"When an officer has served forty consecutive years as a commissioned officer, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the retired list. When an officer has been thirty years in service, he may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be so retired, and placed on the retired list.

* * * * * * * *

"When any officer has become incapable of performing the duties of his office, he shall be either retired from active service, or wholly retired from the service, by the President, as hereinafter provided."

And that "hereinafter provided" provides for an inquiry into his condition, and if his condition shows that his physical infirmity has arisen from the faithful discharge of his duty, then he shall be placed on the retired list; if it appears that his physical infirmity has arisen from his own ill-conduct, dissipation, or whatever it may be, then he is to be wholly retired and not placed on the retired list. Then it provides that the whole number of the officers of the Army on the retired list shall not at any time exceed three hundred, and any less number may be fixed by the President at his discretion.

Sir, what is the principle upon which that statute is founded, which has established this retired branch of the Army of the United States and into which it is proposed to put by an act of the law two of the soldiers of the United States who do not now belong to the Army? That principle plainly is, and it need only be stated to convince everybody that it is that, that when a citizen of the United States devotes his life to the business (if you may call it that) of the military service of his country and has spent thirty or forty years of service to it, having no other occupation, having given up his whole career to that one service, when old age comes upon him shall not be dismissed from the service, but may be placed upon this retired list and relieved from active duty; or when having thus devoted his whole life to the regular military service of his country he has become incapacitated in consequence of that service for the performance of active duties, he may then, upon due examination, be retired; but that the total number of persons who are entitled to the benefits of this act shall never exceed three hundred.

Does either of these distinguished soldiers fall within the principle of this statute? Every Senator who hears me must answer no, because they do not answer any one of the conditions which the statute imposes. Neither of them has served for forty or for thirty years in the regular Army of the United States; neither of them is now an officer of the Army of the United States; neither of them has become physically incapacitated to perform military duty as an officer. My honorable friend from Missouri shakes his head. I have seen both these distinguished citizens of the United States, one of them quite recently, the one whose name stands first in this bill as it is now amended; the other recently before his departure for Europe; and in my humble judgment both of them are capable of performing military duty as officers.

In the next place, what is to become of some two—it was one before, now it is two—of the officers of the regular Army of the United States who have served for forty years and who under this statute are entitled to be retired? Here is your limit of three hundred; and if there be now two vacancies so that the list may be filled up to the limit of three hundred and no more, the two officers of the regular Army of the United States who may now be entitled to retirement (and there are many of them) as well as those who have been incapacitated by their regular service are excluded from the benefit of the standing provisions of the law in order to rectify a political mistake that some party, eager for the reward of its friends, and perhaps eager to cultivate votes, has chosen to envelop itself in; and the Senate of the United States, without respect to party but as responsible Senators passing just and equal laws, is called upon to ratify the performance. Mr. President, I must be excused from lending my hand or my voice or my vote to any such contrivance, if I can use that word without offense to anybody, as I certainly do not mean any.

Then, Mr. President, besides all that, as the Senator from Illinois has so forcibly stated, there is nothing to distinguish one of the persons named in this bill, the one in the original bill, from certainly—and I do not overstate it—scores of officers, citizens, soldiers who are now in private life and who now fulfill up to the full measure of description all that is said of General Shields; and too much cannot be said of him. He has been, as I believe, a good citizen and a brave soldier, and has served in two wars. So have scores of other officers; so have hundreds of subordinate officers in lower ranks than he; so have thousands and tens of thousands of private soldiers for whom the law has made no provision and it can make no provision; and therefore this species of legislation is partial, it is unequal, and it is therefore unjust.

I need only add that after this presentation of the subject, followed by the Senator from Illinois, now Presiding Officer of the Senate, in the same line of thought, the bill placing General Shields and General Grant upon the retired list was defeated by a vote of 30 to 34 in a Republican Senate.

Mr. President, if the arguments made in the Forty-fifth Congress were sufficient to defeat the bill giving to an aged veteran a bare support for himself and family out of the vast wealth which his sword had helped to win for his adopted country upon the plains of Mexico, how much more conclusive must be the same arguments against the bill now pending?

General Grant is not now within the requirements of the law, nor does he ask or need the proposed legislation. He is in robust health, in the prime of life, and beyond pecuniary want. The first American soldier to receive the rank of General, he was the first American citizen to seek for a third term, the highest office within the gift of the Republic. During his second term as President the salary of that office was doubled for his benefit; and he is to-day surrounded by wealthy connections, living luxuriously in the city of New York, and possessed, besides other fortune, of the income from $250,000 donated to him by the public. To give General Grant the full measure of glory as a great soldier is one thing; to tax the people of this country $13,500 annually in order to enrich a man already in affluence is a different proposition. In the Forty-first Congress the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] when advocating the bill to reduce the salary of the General of the Army from $19,278 to the present pay, stated the views which I am now endeavoring to enforce. He said:

General Sherman is a man for whom I have always entertained the highest respect as a military man. I am willing he should have all the credit to which he is entitled. But because I am willing to give him credit as a great general, that is no reason why I should tax the wooden-legged and one-armed men, and the widows and orphans of the country, to pay him more than double that which is paid to the Chief-Justice or the Vice-President, when he does not hold so high an office as they do. But if you undertake to touch his salary the little papers down here in the city will pitch into you and say that you want to attack a brave general. Now, I do not want to do any such thing. But I say that the tax-payers are having an attack made on them, and you must look to it that they are not burdened to death for the benefit of a few individuals who ought to be satisfied with their honors and a competency without asking to be surfeited with riches.

Mr. President, why does not every word of this apply to the bill now pending? I have no prejudice against General Grant, and I sincerely admire his military career and many of his personal characteristics; but ought we, as servants of the people, to vote their money to one who not only has a competency, but has all the luxurious surroundings of a great metropolis?

We have been told of the honors and wealth conferred by European governments upon distinguished soldiers, and especially of England's munificence to Wellington and Nelson. Sir, in this country we have no privileged class. To the aged and disabled officer, who has given his life to military service, the retired list is open; for the justice of the Supreme Court, at the age of sixty-two, there is honorable retirement with an income; but beyond these two classes the people are the fountain of office and salary. General Grant knew this, and yet deliberately and voluntarily left the life position provided for him to try the brilliant but uncertain chances of political life. Nor was he dragged an unwilling captive to the White House. He accepted the nomination of a political party, not the Presidency from the spontaneous and universal acclaim of a people.

To Grant the soldier this country, forever united, will be forever grateful; to Grant the politician it owes nothing. Not the American people, but General Grant and his political followers marred the symmetry of his colossal figure as it stood before the world at Appomattox. To the pages of history emblazoned with military achievements unequaled in modern times has been added another page unequaled in the annals of modern corruption.

Sir, it is not for me to paint the picture. It has been done by a master-hand, and in colors which will never fade. The junior Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] chairman of the Chicago convention, is the artist, and if I again point to the canvas upon which in the Belknap trial he placed the somber portraiture of Grant's second term as President, it is not because the contemplation is pleasant to any American. Said the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] then:

My own public life has been a very brief and insignificant one, extending little beyond the duration of a single term of Senatorial office. But in that brief period I have seen five judges of a high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption or maladministration. I have heard the taunt, from friendliest lips, that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life, the only products of her institutions in which she surpassed all others beyond question was her corruption. I have seen in the State in the Union foremost in power and wealth, four judges of her courts impeached for corruption, and the political administration of her chief city become a disgrace and a by-word throughout the world. I have seen the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House, now a distinguished member of this court, rise in his place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of their official privilege of selecting the youths to be educated at our great military school. When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two of the House and one here—that every step of that enterprise had been taken in fraud. I have heard in highest places the shameless doctrine avowed by men grown old in public office that the true way by which power should be gained in the Republic is to bribe the people with the offices created for their service, and the true end for which it should be used when gained is the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge. I have heard that suspicion haunts the footsteps of the trusted companions of the President.

Sir, it is not my picture; it is drawn by another hand, and it will live as long as the English language is spoken or written.

Mr. President, I presume it has been determined that this bill shall pass the Senate. It is not my hope or expectation to defeat it, but I could do no less than place upon record the reasons why I shall vote against a measure which in my judgment is without a single claim upon the justice or generosity of the American people.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The gentleman who occupied the chair during my absence informs me that the agreement in his opinion only extended to considering this bill and hearing out the speech of the Senator from Missouri, and that the unfinished business should now be laid before the Senate. Of course it is in the power of the Senate to go on with this bill by a majority vote if they choose to do so.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, Mr. President, I had a different understanding, but of course I am always subject to be controlled by the action of the Senate. I do hope that the Senators on the other side of the House now, after listening to the speech of the Senator from Missouri, will at least allow me to reply.

Several SENATORS. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will have that privilege.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope also that the Senate will lay aside (because we have passed now to two o'clock) all other orders and let us finish this bill while we are on it; and I will ask of the Senate that we proceed now, laying aside the other orders, and finish this bill. We can do it in a short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It seems to the Chair that the easiest way to dispose of it is to allow the morning hour to pass on until this matter is disposed of.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think that can be done; but the end in view can be attained in this way: there will be no objection to the Senator from Illinois proceeding, the unfinished business being first laid before the Senate and passed over informally.

Mr. PENDLETON. I have no objection at all to the request of the Senator from Illinois that he shall make such speech as he chooses to make now. I think it is fair and right and I shall most cordially give him assent, as far as I can, to that; but I shall insist afterward that the regular order be called because the Senator from Delaware has told us that he desires to offer an amendment which goes to the very root of this bill, and I think it would not be fair on the one side to cut off the Senator from Illinois, or on the other side to cut the Senator from Delaware off from his opportunity to discuss the bill, and he is compelled to be absent this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business and then recognize the Senator from Illinois. The unfinished business is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] on the 12th of January relative to the arrears of pensions act. The unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily and the Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois on the bill called up by him.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate for a very short time, as I am not feeling strong enough to exert myself very much, but if I can have the attention of the Senate I desire a few moments in which to reply to the very extraordinary speech that has been made by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.]

The Senator from Missouri always speaks well on any subject, but, like other men, he sometimes falls into errors. I will try to answer his propositions one at a time if I can. His first proposition is that there is no precedent for this bill, as I understood him. That is a most astounding statement to me, and certainly it ought to be to the Senate. This proposition is to take a man who is now a civilian and authorize the President of the United States to appoint him to the Army with a view of putting him on the retired list. That is the proposition, and the Senator from Missouri says there is no precedent for any such thing. Why, sir, on your Calendar now are bills of that character. There has not been a Congress since 1866 that has not passed bills authorizing the President to nominate men to the Army who had become civilians either by resignation or otherwise from the Army; and there has not been a President since the war down to the present time who has not by virtue of bills that have passed Congress nominated civilians to the Army, and they have been confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. VEST. On the retired list?

Mr. LOGAN. In the Army, and to be put on the retired list, time and again.

Mr. VEST. Oh, no.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. There is not a member of the Military Committee who does not know this to be the fact. Now, let us see; fair argument is always, or at least ought to be, recognized, and we all ought to deal in it. The Senator referred to the retirement of General Ord and some Senator to his left said he was in the Army at the time. I deny that proposition; it is not true. General Ord was retired by the order of the President, under the statute of the United States which provides that whenever an officer of the Army arrives at the age of sixty-two the President may, by an executive order, put him out of the Army and place him on the retired list. That is the law, and General Ord was so retired by executive order. He was out of the Army, out of active service, on the retired list, when a bill was introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] to replace him in the Army as a major-general, and retire him with that rank, and it was passed by the Senate. He was a civilian at that time, so far as being on the active list of the Army was concerned, as much so as you are to-day. The retired list of the Army is no part of the Army; it is for men who have served their time and left the Army, either by their own consent under the law, or been retired by executive order, or by the action of a board placed on that list, not called pensioners, but placed on three-quarters pay. They have no connection with the Army, and cannot be required to perform any duty, or be detailed for any purpose, except by act of Congress.

Now, let us go further. By an act of Congress Colonel Lee, who had been out of the Army fifteen years by his own voluntary act, by resignation accepted by the President of the United States, was, under a bill passed by Congress, renominated to the Senate and confirmed, and is now on the retired list as a colonel. So with Colonel Haller, who was dismissed peremptorily fifteen years ago, and two years since was, by authority of Congress authorizing the President to renominate him, put back in the Army. Why? The reason is this: the statute law requires that no man shall be nominated to the Army who is over a certain age; also the law of promotion prohibits the appointment up to the rank of colonel; men being over that age the President could not nominate to the Army unless Congress gave him the authority. In other words, Congress repealed that law for that express or particular case, and by doing that the President could nominate them to the Army. So he did in conformity with the act. They were nominated and are now on the retired list.

Why, sir, for a Senator to stand up here and say there is no precedent for this bill is, as I said, one of the most astounding statements I have heard uttered on the Senate floor for years. I supposed every Senator was conversant with the fact as I have stated it. The Senator from Missouri has confounded that proposition with this. I maintain that the law is that no man who has been court-martialed can be restored; that the Congress of the United States cannot set aside a court's sentence for the purpose of restoring a man to the Army. There is the difference between the authority to appoint a man to the Army and a restoration to the Army by act of Congress; but the Senator confounds the two.

The idea that I have always maintained and many others with me is, that Congress has no power where there is the judgment of a court dismissing a man to restore him to the Army in violation of that judgment; but by act of Congress, where there is nothing to prohibit a man from holding an office, Congress may, by repealing for that purpose the general statute which prohibits an appointment, authorize the President to nominate to the Senate a man for the Army. That is the law, there is no question about it; and under that rule and under that decision and that law numbers of men are in the Army to-day who were nominated here, being citizens of the United States entirely out of the Army at the time, and who are now in the Army by virtue of an act of Congress authorizing the President to so nominate them.

There is nothing in that point which the Senator makes. He is certainly mistaken, and if he will examine the record he will find that he is mistaken.

The next proposition he makes is that inasmuch as General Shields, who was his predecessor on this floor, was not placed back in the Army as he requested to be, being old and feeble and poor, therefore no other man ought to be. I will say to the Senator that the refusal to place General Shields back in the Army did not prevent the Senate of the United States from placing Colonel Lee and Colonel Haller back in the Army who had been out longer than General Shields. So there is nothing in that. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that when the bill for General Shields was before the Senate of the United States, asking that he might be put back in the Army, so that he might be placed on the retired list, although I was not a member of the Senate at that time, I wrote a letter and published it in the public prints to the very Senator who made the motion the Senator spoke of to amend the bill which defeated the bill. That letter was published all over this country, defending General Shields and insisting that in right and justice the bill for his benefit ought to pass.

So the Senator cannot lay it at my door that that bill was not passed and General Shields was not put in the Army, because I was one of his friends and one of his advocates, publicly, although I had not a vote on this floor at the time. I gave the law in that letter, and I gave the reasons for it, not so ably perhaps as the Senator from Missouri would have done, but as ably as my feeble ability would allow.

Then, sir, another proposition the Senator states is that this bill is presented for the reason that General Grant was defeated at Chicago, and because of that certain of his friends desire to remunerate him. Why, I am only surprised, as I go along examining the speech of the Senator, at his want of recollection. Does the Senator—and I call his attention especially to this—pretend to say, and shall it go broadcast to the country, that this bill was only introduced after General Grant was defeated at Chicago? Is that his statement? He is wofully at fault in that. Senator Blaine introduced in Congress, long before Chicago was ever named as the place for the last Republican convention to be held, a bill putting General Grant on the retired list. The proposition had been made in the Senate and in the House long before General Grant was ever mentioned as a candidate before the Chicago convention. So the Senator's beautiful picture of untying the money-bags and remunerating the fallen fortunes of a candidate for the Presidency goes for naught when you come to the facts.

But other objections are made. The Senator from Missouri says that he voted to put Fitz-John Porter back in the Army, but he cannot vote to put Grant back. He voted to put Fitz-John Porter back because he had been badly used. Now, suppose you admit that for the sake of the argument, see where it places you. Is Fitz-John Porter in the Army? Is he not a citizen of the United States? Is he not out of the Army? Has he not been out of the Army for nearly twenty years? Does not the Supreme Court decide that when one man's name has been put in place of another and confirmed by the Senate the man displaced is out of the Army and becomes a citizen? If there never had been a court-martial at all, he would be out of the Army under the law as it stands, if a successor to him had been appointed and confirmed. Will the Senator say to the country that he votes to put Fitz-John Porter back in the Army, who is a citizen of the United States, out of the Army, and yet he cannot vote to put Grant back in the Army because Grant is a citizen? What kind of logic is that? Will the Senator, as a lawyer, stand up before the Senate and make an argument of that kind? He votes for one because he thinks he has been injured; he votes against another because he thinks he has not been injured. But he does not vote for either proposition on legal principles. First, he argues that a man cannot be put into the Army who is a citizen, and then he turns around and says he will do it because the man has been injured. I cannot understand that kind of reasoning, as far as I am concerned. I may vote to put a man back in the Army for one reason, and he may for another; but the question is whether you have the power to do it? It is not a question as to what your reason may be or my reason, but the question is can you do it?

I do not wish to bring Fitz-John Porter into this case. I certainly should not have alluded to Fitz-John Porter if the Senator from Missouri himself had not brought him in. I discussed the question in reference to Fitz-John Porter for three long days here in the Senate. I do not know that I convinced anybody but myself; but I will say to the Senator from Missouri that when you put Fitz-John Porter by the side of General Grant and you vote to put Fitz-John Porter back into the Army and refuse to put Grant back, that a beautiful parallel can be drawn between the two men. One was dismissed the service of the United States because of wrong conduct in the Army—dismissed by the verdict of his peers, officers who knew him well and were his friends, and their verdict approved by the sainted Lincoln, who is now among the spirits above, passed upon by James A. Garfield, who to-day dwells in the same realms with Abraham Lincoln. Honest men passed judgment upon him. You may ignore all the judgments of these men and denounce their acts, cloud their reputation by putting him back in the Army who was dishonorably dismissed by as good men as ever sat on a court—you can do that, but when it comes to voting for the gallant old chief who led the cohorts of the Union against those that would destroy the country, you cannot afford to do it, for there is no precedent for it, as you say.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I take the view of General Grant himself on that question. He says a great outrage was perpetrated on Porter. In military matters I always defer to General Grant.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, I notice you do. [Laughter.] General Grant may say what he has a mind to; his conscience must answer to him, and I will be the judge of my own. I do not wish to animadvert upon what General Grant has said. The time may come when I may discuss that proposition. I was only comparing the two men, not the opinions of the men, but the conduct of the two men. It is strange that the Senator from Missouri would take Grant's opinion on one subject when it agrees with him, but will not take it on others when it disagrees with him. The two men stand to-day.

No matter who may say that Porter has been wronged, the evidence is before the world to-day that Fitz-John Porter was dishonorably dismissed from the Army for improper conduct, and my judgment is that he was properly dismissed. I go further, and say that the man who puts his hand to the law to restore that man to-day to the Army of the United States will strike a blow, yes, sir, a heavy blow, at the discipline of the Army that will be calculated to demoralize it, and he will strike a blow at the Union men who stood by this country while Fitz-John Porter faltered. The man who reaches his hand out to put that man back in the Army by any process will find in this country such an expression of popular sentiment in opposition to that act as will cause him to think much of the mistake that he will have made in doing so. Let Congress unlawfully and unjustly, as I maintain it would be, restore the man who would destroy the Union by his want of good faith and proper conduct in the Army, and that Congress will go down to history as a Congress that wishes to restore dishonorable men to honorable places, and ignore honorable men for the same character of place. Because one saved the country he is not put in the Army, and because the other would not try to save it at a time when he could, he would be put in the Army, is the argument of the Senator from Missouri.

Fitz-John Porter, as he stands before you, you are willing to restore to the Army; dismissed the service; dishonorably discharged; the dismissal signed by Lincoln; the dismissal agreed to by Garfield; the man who caused the loss of a battle by not doing his duty—you would restore him to a place on the retired list, and yet you would refuse to retire General Grant, the man to whom we owe more for the salvation of this country than to any other military man.

Well, who is Grant? Grant was a little quiet man, far off in a little remote village almost unknown in this country when the war broke out. In the West he moved forward from the rank of colonel until he was placed in command of the Army; in every battle that he fought he showed himself a genius in military science. In the East when the thundering of the artillery was heard on the hills not distant from the capital, when General McClellan failed of success—I will not say on account of want of ability; it may have been his misfortune, but he did fail of success—when your Fitz-John Porter held back and disobeyed orders, when the armies against the Union were thundering at the very gates of the capital, Grant, after his successes in the West, was called by Abraham Lincoln to take charge of all the armies of the United States. He came, a modest man, with his long blue coat, made for a private soldier, over his uniform. He went to the White House and received his instructions. He went down to the front and took command of the army that had been defeated and driven back everywhere. He snatched victory from the jaws of defeat; he crushed treason and rebellion wherever they raised their head. By this genius of Grant the old flag of our fathers and of this country was unfurled from the house-tops and the hill-tops, and the songs of the Union were echoed in the valleys, until the people of this land, from one end to the other, shouted "Amen!" to the success of this little man Grant, to whom you to-day refuse this recognition.

On the walls of this Capitol, on the 22d day of May, 1865—I witnessed it myself—the loyal hand of this country had placed, "We owe a debt to the Union soldier that future generations can never pay." That was the sentiment then of the people of this land. To whom more than any other man did we owe that debt? To Ulysses S. Grant more than to any other man in this nation who had to do with the Army of this country. Yet you cannot afford to put him on the retired list of the Army!

Take for example France, Germany, England, Spain, or any of the other great countries. Look at the history as it has been written in reference to great military men who achieved great successes for their country. Why, sir, I will cite but two instances, and there are a hundred. Take Wellington, take Nelson; take all the men who achieved great victories and successes for their government. Their country could never cease to show their gratitude to them, while we here ask only this recognition for General Grant. Is he the only man of the great generals of this day who is to be ignored by his country? It is true he was made President, but the Senator criticised his last Presidential term. I cannot see what relation that has to the proposition to put him on the retired list. I shall not discuss that matter; I will leave that subject for the historian. There is one thing that is marked, and will live so long as time shall last; when he went as the great American citizen abroad no man who has ever lived was so received and recognized by every government on the face of the earth as this man Grant. But, sir, is all that General Grant has done for his country to be wiped out by a little insinuation that a Cabinet minister committed a great wrong during Grant's administration? Sir, the things that hover around a man, not wrongs of his own, are forgotten in time, but the great events of his life and his great achievements live as long as history is written.

It is true that while Grant was President of the United States the press was full of bitter attacks upon him, criticised him, thought him a "Cæsar," and that he wished to take to himself the power of this Government. Many people made these accusations against that plain man; many would like to make them still, but let me tell the Senator from Missouri all the calumnies and slanders that have been hurled against that man fall and lie at his feet. Sir, when you compare these assaults with what he has done for this great American people, the smoke that many helped produce and bring around him at the time settles itself down low on the ground, and he rises above it in the bright sunlight of glorious achievement with a record that no other man who lives to-day can claim.

Why, sir, shall the Congress of the United States, the people of this country, refuse to give the President authority to renominate General Grant to the Army for the purpose of putting him on the retired list? For what? Merely as an acknowledgment by the whole country that the people were, and that the people yet are, willing to show their gratitude to the one man who above all others did more in the Army to save his country than any other man. Some say, "why let us retire ex-Presidents." When you retire ex-Presidents and put them on the retired list you do that because they have been Presidents of the United States. That is not the retirement that I desire to see given to General Grant. I desire to see him retired on account of his military services, and not for any services as a civilian; and that is what is proposed by this bill. Sir, as time rolls on, when the hour shall come when he will be summoned to join the innumerable host, school-boys will rehearse his deeds, and in rehearsing them they will rehearse ours too; if this Congress shall refuse to do this, they will say the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States refused purely on account of political prejudice to show the gratitude of the nation to that man. It will not do to say they refuse to pass this bill because there is no precedent for it. It will not do to say it was because he was not a good general; no man will say that. It will not do to say it is because he is General Grant; that will not do. It is not that, but it is because of prejudice against the man on account of what he did for his country and on account of his politics, and you cannot put it on any other ground.

You say you have nothing personal against him. If there is nothing personal against him, you have done the very same thing for others that is asked to be done for him. If you have done the same thing for others, why not for him? If you cannot do it for him, why not? Is it on account of politics? Oh, no. Is it because he fought against you? Not that. But, what then? In God's name, tell me what it is. I want to know. I ask some Senator to tell me what is the reason. When I show you that it is not because there is no precedent for it, for there is, then tell me the reason; I should like to know it. I say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber, for I certainly feel kindly to all Senators here, I have no bitter prejudices; I can treat any Senator on that side of the Chamber with the same cordiality and friendship that I can a Senator on this side; that I am only sorry to see (and I say it from the bottom of my heart) the prejudice still lingering in the bosoms of some gentlemen on that side of the Chamber against the man who accomplished great things for the success of this Union. The success of this country, Senators on that side of the Chamber, was yours. When I say "your success," I mean by that it is the making of your country in the future. You will receive part of the glory of the achievements of this man in the building up of your portion of the United States hereafter, by entertaining different notions, by going forward on a different line, and by teaching the people that all must unite, and that each and every man must live by his own energy and labor; so the sooner these prejudices die out, the sooner they are not permitted longer to show themselves in this Chamber or at the other end of the Capitol, the better it will be for all.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator from Illinois, but I do not wish to be put in the position of voting against this bill because of prejudice. No such motive as that actuates me. I have not one particle of prejudice against General Grant. There is scarcely an honor this country could give him that I would not be quite willing to bestow on him. The ground on which I shall vote against the bill is this, if the Senator desires to know: I have always understood that the retired list of the Army was intended for disabled soldiers, for officers who had served their time out in the service of the country, and were put there because they were unable to discharge the duties of the military service. I have heard no pretense—if the Senator has alleged it, it has escaped me—that General Grant in the first place desires retirement; I say in the second place he does not need it pecuniarily; and in the third place it can certainly confer no honor upon him.

I oppose the bill, and shall vote against it purely on those grounds, not for the reason that I am not quite willing to recognize all the services General Grant has done his country. It is not that I am not quite willing to confer upon him any honor on earth that we can give him. If the Senator from Illinois will state that General Grant needs $100,000 or $500,000 to prevent his suffering, I will vote for it to-morrow; but simply to vote to put him on the retired list of the Army is certainly no additional honor, and it puts him, in my judgment, in the attitude of a beggar before the country, when he is not in necessitous circumstances. If I may be allowed to express my opinion about it, it seems to me that General Grant's friends are putting him in the most humiliating position he could possibly occupy before the country, and I shall vote against it, not because of prejudice, but for the reasons I have assigned.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will give me his attention for a moment, I will try to answer what he has stated. The Senator says the retired list of the Army is for crippled soldiers.

Mr. BUTLER. Disabled soldiers.

Mr. LOGAN. Disabled soldiers. The Senator is mistaken about that. It is not for disabled soldiers; it is for officers of the Army who have served a certain length of time, and who have been wounded or disabled by disease, or have passed sixty-two years of age.

Mr. BUTLER. I meant "officers" of course.

Mr. LOGAN. I know the Senator did, but the Senator used the word "disabled." There are men on the retired list to-day who are physically stronger than the Senator or myself, plenty of them. They are not put there on account of disability; they are put there because they have arrived at a certain age, which is the age of sixty-two, and there are numbers of men in the Senate and in the House and all over the country sixty-two years of age who are just as able to perform labor to-day as you or I. In the Army and on the retired list to-day there are plenty of able-bodied men, as the Senator must know, if he is conversant with the list. So then he is mistaken in that particular.

Now let us go a little further. He says it would be degrading to General Grant. I say it would not. It is not degrading to any man that has ever served in the Army.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not say it would be degrading to him.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, humiliating.

Mr. BUTLER. No, I said it would add no additional honors to him. That is what I said. When I referred to humiliating him, I meant that his friends were constantly presenting him to the country in the attitude of a beggar and were by proposing him as a candidate for public bounty when there is no occasion for it so far as I am informed. That is what I meant, and I think it is belittling General Grant's high position.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the friends of General Grant, I hope, will be permitted to be the judges on that for themselves. Gentlemen who are all the time afraid that General Grant will be humiliated are so tender of him that they do not want to humiliate him, and hence they criticise his friends.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply stated the way it struck me.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand; but I say as a friend of General Grant that General Grant would consider it an honor to be put on the retired list, and I should consider it an honor to put any soldier on the retired list after he has passed through such services as Grant has, to show that the country still recognizes his services; and there is where the honor of the thing is. It is not the amount of money involved, but it is the fact that the country recognizes that he did great service for it.

The Senator says we are constantly putting General Grant in the attitude of a beggar. I have heard that word "beggar" used very frequently on that side of the Chamber, and Senators can indulge in that kind of remark if they desire. The friends of General Grant do not consider him in any such attitude, or that they place him in any such attitude by the course they take.

The Senator further said, as I understood him, that this retired list was not for persons like General Grant. The retired list is for any officer who has arrived at a certain age in the Army, who has served a certain length of years, who is wounded or disabled, or for anybody whom the President and Congress shall lawfully put there. The retired list was made for the purpose of giving certain pay to men who might be designated by the President, or by a board, or by act of Congress, as proper objects for the retired list. It is not confined to any particular class. It is confined only to the class that Congress may provide shall go on the retired list.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the Senator from Illinois why not restore General Franklin to the Army and put him on the retired list, or General McClellan, or an abundance of other meritorious soldiers who could be named? Could it not be done with just as much right, except that General Grant is a more distinguished soldier? But they all did service, and if the argument of the Senator was carried out we should have the same right to insist that General Franklin, or General McClellan, or any of those distinguished officers who commanded armies or corps, be put back in the Army to go on the retired list. It seems to me so.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator seems to be surprised. You can put General Franklin there if you want to, or General McClellan. If the people of this country think their services demand it, Congress has the power to do it by authorizing the President to nominate them. That is no argument. They have not asked it. When they do, it will be time enough to discuss their merits as to whether they are entitled to it or not. General Grant, through his friends, has asked this; and he is the one who is now before the Congress of the United States, and no other person. When the time comes to discuss others it will be time enough to examine their merits to see whether they are entitled to it or not.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say in reference to this question. I feel a great deal of interest in the passage of this bill. I do so for the reason that during the war I was close by General Grant the most of the time; I knew him well as a soldier, and this bill only pertains to him as a soldier. For his soldierly conduct I ask that Congress shall perform this act of gratitude toward that old soldier who, in my judgment, by his genius as a military man, saved this country from those who would have destroyed it. And I will say to my friend the Senator from South Carolina—I have no right to judge for him and he has not for me—that in my judgment it would come in excellent good grace for Senators in this Chamber who served on the other side against General Grant to show that they have some magnanimity themselves, and some sentiment that tends in the direction of a loyal man who stood up and saved the country, as well as in the direction of those who have been defeated. When the two gentlemen, one from Oregon and one from Maryland, were placed on the retired list, it happened that both differed in politics with those on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not know what the politics of either of them was.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not talking about that. I understand that.

Mr. BUTLER. The suggestion is simply absurd that we are governed by political considerations in this matter.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, now, if the Senator will allow me to get through, perhaps he will understand what I was going to say. I say that two men who were placed on the retired list happened to be of different politics from this side of the Chamber; but this side of the Chamber did not object to it on that account. They let the bills pass. You do not object to this bill on account of politics, but strange to say that side of the Chamber did favor the retirement of those two men and this side did not object to it; this side now favors the retirement of a Republican and that side does not favor it. I only give the facts. I do not say the Senator knew anything about their politics; I do not say that anybody did; but I give the facts as they are before the country. One of these men resigned his office as an Army officer when the rebellion commenced; the other was dismissed from the service because of his disloyalty to the Government; but they were both put on the retired list within the last three years, and now when Grant, who led the armies, who saved the country, who was a loyal man and a true man to the country, asks the same thing, objection is made on that side of the Chamber. I give the facts and let the country judge for itself.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply desire to say one thing in reply to the Senator from Illinois. I have no feeling about this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator appeals to our magnanimity, and says we ought to be magnanimous enough to favor General Grant. I do not think that comes with very good grace from the Senator from Illinois. Whenever a measure has been before this Congress for the benefit of Union soldiers it has always had my support and always will; but I do not intend to be made a party by my vote to what I believe is mere buncombe. I think there is more buncombe than anything else in this. Without intending to reflect on the motives of the Senator from Illinois, I think that is at the bottom of it.

To begin with, I do not think General Grant desires it; he does not need it in the second place; and in the third place it is no honor to him. That is the reason I vote against the bill, not because I begrudge General Grant the amount of money it would give him by his being put on the retired list. There is no proper respect that I could show to him to-morrow that I would not pay as quickly as the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to answer just one proposition of the Senator from South Carolina. As fast as the propositions are made they strike me as being strange. He says General Grant does not need this. Did he ever hear of a man being put on the retired list because he needed or did not need it? Has that ever been the reason for it? Does not the law retire a man when sixty-two years old if worth $10,000,000 just as much as if he was not worth ten cents? Does the question of his pecuniary situation enter into it at all in the law? When you examine every objection that is made here you find it is of the same character. A man is never asked whether he is rich or poor when he is placed on the retired list. The question is, how long has he served, how old is he, what is his merit? That is the question; not how much money he has or how poor he is. Such questions are never asked and have never been heard of. I never heard of them until to-day. When it is said General Grant does not need this, let me say that a man is not put on the retired list because he is a beggar.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator's memory fails him. If not, he would remember that that was the express ground on which application was made by General Shields, but he voted against it.

Mr. LOGAN. I voted against it! I not only did not vote against it, but I wrote a letter in favor of it.

Mr. BUTLER. Your friends here rejected it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator said that I had voted against it.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LOGAN. I wrote a letter to a Senator who objected to his bill, and it was published in the papers here, insisting that General Shields ought to be put on the retired list. So you take nothing by your reference to that.

Mr. BUTLER. I said I was mistaken. Of course the Senator must accept that admission.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly, I accept it.

Mr. BUTLER. The only point I wanted to make about General Shields was that the ground expressly on which the application was put was that he was in necessitous circumstances. As my friend from Missouri has stated, he had pawned the sword presented to him, I believe by my State, for the absolute necessities of life. So the Senator cannot say that that is not a ground on which application is made. As I understand, the general purpose of the retired list is to provide for officers who have worn themselves out in the service of the country.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator wholly misunderstood what I said. I said the law retired men for age, for distinguished services, for term of service, for wounds or disability, and not on account of their pecuniary situation, that that question was never raised and never known and never heard of in the retirement of an officer under the statute. That is what I stated, and that is true. His pecuniary condition cuts no figure in the matter. So far as General Shields is concerned I was his friend. He was a Democrat and I was a Republican, but I wanted him retired, and did everything I could to secure it.

But the Senator made a statement which I am very sorry to hear from so prominent a Senator. I allude to what was once published in the papers, and has now been repeated here against the character of a poor old man who is dead. He told me that it was not true; that he would have died before he would have done what was alleged. I only state it to correct the Senator's statement.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Illinois remind the Senator from South Carolina that in the House of Representatives, where the Democrats were in a majority, a Republican offered a resolution electing General Shields to the honorable office of Sergeant-at-Arms or Doorkeeper of that House; and that he desired to have the office himself, and the Democrats voted against it?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes, Mr. President; we have discussed all that before. The Senator from Maine is behind the times; that has all been discussed before.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to lay aside the pending and all prior orders——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to make a statement?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I stated here that General Shields had on one occasion raised money on the swords donated to him by sovereign States. I do not know at what time he made the statement to the Senator from Illinois, but I do know from the most reliable authority that he did raise money at one time upon those swords. That is unquestionably so. I do not know at what time he made the statement to the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senator exactly my knowledge. At the time his bill was before Congress I was here in Washington City, and that was the way I came to write the letter in his favor. After I had written the letter and it was published General Shields called on me. In fact, I knew him when I was a boy; but it is not necessary to go into the history of it. I mentioned this fact to him, and he said to me that that statement he was sorry had got into the papers, because he had his swords and they were not pawned and he had not pawned them for money. What he may have done before I do not know, but that was the statement he made to me. Of course that is immaterial to this discussion, however.

Mr. VEST. I know that he was extremely sensitive upon that subject and naturally would be, because he was the soul of honor. He felt that necessity more than it is possible for me to describe it here in language; but the fact still exists, known to his friends, that he raised money for his relief. I would never have mentioned the fact to the Senate if he had been living. I only mention it now because he has passed beyond public criticism or private feeling.

I have nothing to say in answer to the Senator from Illinois when he states that the opposition to this bill is from political feeling. I have denied it before. I can only meet it again by a flat, emphatic, and distinct denial. It is a subject not susceptible of argument or further explanation. Mr. President, if I know my own heart, if I know one single fiber of my own feelings, and I shall say nothing more in that regard, I have no more feeling to-day against General Grant, as the head of the Union Army, or any soldier in it, than I have against the men who achieved victories a thousand years ago in legitimate and honest warfare. To say that Senators on this side are influenced by any political feeling, any miserable, mean jealousy against a man because he has conquered us in open fight, is simply to make a personal reflection which I cannot submit to in this Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Illinois that on the business before the Senate the pending question is certain amendments to the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in relation to the arrears of pensions act.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks to postpone all prior orders. That is not a proper motion. The Senator can make a motion to postpone until to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. I was about to make that motion.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the Senate should now go into executive session, would not this present bill of the Senator from Illinois be the pending matter for to-morrow morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; the pending measure is the resolution of the Senator from Kansas as the unfinished business.

Mr. LOGAN. I should be perfectly willing, if the Senate would agree to vote on this bill to-morrow after the morning hour, to let it pass over until then and take up the other proposition. If not, I should like the Senate, as the bill has been before Congress now for two years, to dispose of it. It would be an accommodation to me to do it for many reasons. I should be glad if the Senate would agree to do that and dispose of the bill one way or the other. I have said all I desire to say about it.

Mr. CALL. There are one or two Senators who desire to say something on the bill, and there is no purpose to delay action on their part. The Senator from Delaware has an amendment to offer.

Mr. LOGAN. I am perfectly willing to let the bill go over if by unanimous consent it can come up to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. CALL. As far as I am concerned I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senate will agree to that. I have no disposition to cut off debate. I certainly should be glad to hear from any Senator who has anything to say on the subject, either one way or the other. If the Senate will give its unanimous consent to take the measure up to-morrow after the morning business I shall be perfectly content.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the resolution of the Senator from Kansas. The Senate simply permitted the Senator from Illinois to make his speech in reply to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. INGALLS. And on that resolution I hope we may now have a vote, with the understanding suggested by the Senator from Illinois, who is not desirous of pressing the final consideration of this bill this afternoon, that it may be taken up to-morrow at the close of the morning business.

Mr. HALE. On that suggestion I wish to say a word. I do not desire to antagonize the bill now being pressed by the Senator from Illinois. I expect to vote for it with pleasure when the time comes to vote; but it is to me very apparent, as amendments are proposed by at least one Senator, that it cannot be disposed of either to-day or to-morrow. Now let me suggest to the Senator from Illinois that perhaps the one bill of more importance than any other to the convenience of the country, to Legislatures now assembled, is the apportionment bill reported this morning, and upon which I gave notice then before this matter had come up that he is now managing that I should ask the consent of the Senate to-night to take it up and make it the pending business, and failing that by a single objection, would move to-morrow to postpone pending orders, or whatever may be the technical motion in the Senate, in order to get at that bill; and I do not desire that that bill, so important and so easily passed as I believe, shall be pushed out of the way by any consent now. I hope the Senator from Illinois will appreciate the situation that I am in with regard to that.

Mr. LOGAN. I appreciate the situation fully; but after I have been for two years trying to get this bill before the Senate (and there are always more important measures in the opinion of some Senators) I insist now that this bill be voted on, if a majority of the Senate is in favor of it. I want a vote; I want to know how the Senate stands; I do not want to be kept here with it two years longer.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think there is more immediate necessity for action upon this bill, meritorious as it may be, than there is for the apportionment bill, when to-day Legislature after Legislature in different States is waiting in order that we may act to give them an opportunity to act?

Mr. LOGAN. I should not have put the question to the Senator in that way if he had been managing this bill or any other. I am not in the habit of antagonizing other bills by insisting that mine are the most important, or trying to indicate to the country that somebody is interfering with the passage of some very important bill. I never do that. Of course the apportionment bill is an important bill. I have not interfered with it and do not propose to do so; but I do not desire the Senator to ask me if this is more important than the apportionment bill, and have it go to the country that I am antagonizing that. I am not antagonizing it. It was postponed this morning by consent, and I am not interfering with it.

Mr. HALE. I understand that the Senator does not interfere with the apportionment bill and I hope he will not. He will bear in mind that this bill came up in the morning hour. The apportionment bill is aside from that, and I propose to take that up either at the end of the morning hour this morning or to-morrow. Now, to-day has been consumed and I am very desirous that the sense of the Senate, at the proper time, shall be taken as to whether or not it will give the right of way to the apportionment bill. I do not wish to interfere with this matter and will help the Senator to pass it when we come to a vote.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator had allowed me to try to do what I was going to do, without interjecting his speech in reference to the apportionment bill—I know the importance of that bill as well as he does—I think we could have gotten along very well with this matter. I will only say that the important or not important matters that I have charge of are just as important to me as matters that any other Senator has charge of are to him; and I do not propose to be baffled about this bill any longer if I can help it. Two years is about long enough to have it set aside for other important measures.

Now, sir, I move that this bill be made the special order after the morning hour to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order. The proper motion to make now in order to bring the bill up would be to postpone the present order until to-morrow. The Chair would inform the Senator from Illinois that this bill to place General Grant on the retired list of the Army comes up to-morrow as the regular business during the morning hour under the Anthony rule and then the Senator from Illinois can test the sense of the Senate whether they will continue its consideration or not.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to state a fact to the Chair that the Chair is evidently not familiar with. The Chair ruled this morning that this bill was the first business in order under the Anthony rule, and the Senate was proceeding to consider it when objection was interposed. Then it was taken up afterward by unanimous consent in the morning hour. Therefore it does not stand in the attitude that the Chair has just put it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Still it was taken up in the morning hour under the Anthony rule, and it is the unfinished business of that hour.

Mr. HARRIS. It is subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call it as a case under the Anthony rule, though it can be objected to.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand it, this bill came up under the Anthony rule, and it was objected to under the Anthony rule. That objection carried it to the foot of the docket under the Anthony rule. That being the case, the Senator from Illinois moved to lay aside the pending order, which was the execution of the Anthony rule, and take this bill up. Now, when it comes up, it comes up as unfinished business, if it comes at all, but it does not come up under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it does not, it can be taken up on motion.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Massachusetts has not stated all the case. It is very true that the Senator from Illinois did make the motion to take up the bill by the postponement of prior orders, but subsequently to that he asked unanimous consent and the call for the yeas and nays was withdrawn, and the bill took its place before the Senate under the Anthony rule, and will come up to-morrow morning as the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas very properly reminds me that I did not state the whole case; but the Senator fails to observe that before what he has stated there was an objection under the Anthony rule, and the bill went over. That had happened. That took it out of its place on the Calendar, and the request for the unanimous consent, which was granted, happened after that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have to rule in conformity with the understanding of the Senator who occupied the chair this morning; and as he understands that Senator this bill was not taken up under the Anthony rule. The present occupant of the chair supposed it was.

Mr. HARRIS. It was afterward taken up by unanimous consent. Standing where it does on the Calendar, it would be called naturally under the Anthony rule, and it would be subject to the objection that the Anthony rule permitted.

Mr. LOGAN. It has gone over once and is now before the Senate, and before the Senate by unanimous consent. I should like to know how many times objection can be made to put a bill over after it has gone over once.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is being considered under the Anthony rule, the Senator knows very well that the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings. Hence it would, if proceeding under that rule, to-morrow morning be subject to go over upon the objection of any single Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But a majority of the Senate can control it.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, Mr. President, I moved this morning that the bill be proceeded with, and the vote was being called and the Secretary had called two names on the list, and then we made an agreement, which was by unanimous consent, that this bill be taken up, and my proposition was that it be taken up and acted upon, and unanimous consent was given. I am willing, however, that the bill shall go over until to-morrow, provided that under that agreement the bill shall come up then and be disposed of.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator from Illinois a question? Why does he wish to make any motion whatever respecting the bill? It is upon the Calendar, the first bill in order on the Calendar, and of necessity is brought up in the morning hour as the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true, but then an objection would put it over.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then the vote of the Senate will determine the question. I see no occasion for any motion about it now.

Mr. FERRY. But the Senator from Illinois is correct in holding his position. If he surrenders it, the bill goes over to the morning hour, and is then subject to the Anthony rule. The Senator now has it before the Senate, and it is the unfinished business if we adjourn or go into executive session. So I understand the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so rule. The unfinished business is the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] was allowed to finish his speech in reply to the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.] That was all; but the unfinished business was laid before the Senate, which is the resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. FERRY. Then I misunderstood the facts of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate was proceeding with this bill under the Anthony rule, it is very easily disposed of, and can be called up first in the morning.

Mr. FERRY. It will be subject to objection then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But, like every thing else, a majority of the Senate must decide.

Mr. LOGAN. It was perfectly understood by the Senate that we would proceed—at least I so understood it—with the bill, and the Senator from Delaware asked that it go over until to-morrow, so that he might offer an amendment. I agreed to that, and when I agreed to it, then objection was made so as to force it before the Senate at this time. That objection cut off the agreement between the Senator from Delaware and myself, and put the bill before the Senate to be finished. That was my understanding about it, and that was the understanding of the Senate at that time.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no doubt that was the understanding of the Senator from Illinois. I have just as little doubt that it was not the understanding of quite a number of other Senators. It stood precisely in the relation of a bill taken up by unanimous consent within the morning hour that went down on the expiration of the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understood. Is there unanimous consent that this bill shall be considered as within the Anthony rule to be taken up to-morrow morning? That is the only way to get out of the difficulty, unless the Senator from Illinois tries to postpone the other business. The Chair must hold to the rulings of the Senator from Tennessee; but the Senate can consider this case as of the morning hour, and therefore the Anthony rule applies to it, and it is the first case in the morning under the Anthony rule.

Mr. PENDLETON. I should like to be advised by the Chair if the Senate should now adjourn in what condition would this bill stand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would go to the Calendar. The unfinished business is the resolution of the Senator from Kansas. That cannot be gotten rid of except by a motion adopted by the Senate. If there be no objection, the Chair will consider that this case was taken up under the Anthony rule within the morning hour, and so it will be the first case called to-morrow, if that is understood by the Senate. Will the Senate consider this case as taken up under the Anthony rule, and therefore the first case during the morning hour when the Calendar is called under the Anthony rule to-morrow? If so, the case will be first considered in the morning under the Anthony rule when proceedings under that rule are commenced.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American company of revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4240) supplemental to the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the final expenses of the tenth census;" and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DUTIES ON REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the joint resolution just received from the House be referred immediately to the Committee on Finance. They have the subject before them, and I should like to have the joint resolution referred without delay.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American company of revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. It will not be necessary to have the joint resolution printed if it be referred.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance without printing.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will announce what stage the resolution of the Senator from Kansas is in. The resolution of the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. INGALLS January 12, as follows:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the act of January 25, 1879, commonly known as the arrears of pensions act, ought not to be repealed.

The pending question was stated to be on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to add at the end of the resolution:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the needy or disabled soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. HALE. Now I ask the Senator from Kansas, who has charge of this resolution, if he is not willing to give way in order that the apportionment bill may come up, and quite likely, as I should hope, be finished to-night.

Mr. INGALLS. I have great hope that the resolution that I have been urging for the last month will be disposed of to-night, and when that is done, I shall be very glad, indeed, to yield to the Senator from Maine for the consideration of the apportionment bill, which is not in order under the rules to-day, having been this morning reported from a committee.

Mr. HALE. Does a single objection carry the apportionment bill over to-day, notwithstanding any motion that might be made to test the sense of the Senate as to its desire to bring it up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; a single ojection carries it over for the day.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator desires to know whether a motion cannot be made by which the Senate can by its vote take up the bill notwithstanding the objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that any bill that is reported goes over on a single objection until the next day.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule.

Mr. INGALLS. And that can only be changed by a modification of the rule itself; which requires two days' notice.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Kansas will consent that his resolution may be informally laid aside, because as a mere question of time it cannot be a matter of very serious consequence whether the vote be taken upon that resolution to-day or to-morrow. It is a matter of serious consequence that the apportionment bill shall be acted upon with great promptness, because of the fact that there are certain Legislatures now in session awaiting the action of Congress upon the apportionment bill; there are other Legislatures to be convened by the proclamations of governors to consider the question of redistricting their several States; and in that point of view it is very important as a question of time that the bill should be considered at once. Therefore I hope that there will be unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill to-day reported by the Senator from Maine, and let us proceed with it until its consideration is concluded.

Mr. INGALLS. There is ample time to consider both these measures to-day. A vote can be had on the resolution by half past three o'clock, debate I suppose having closed, and there will then be ample opportunity to consider the bill reported by the Senator from Maine, to which I shall then have no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. The resolution of the Senator from Kansas is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. McPHERSON. To that resolution I wish to offer a substitute, and I think that my substitute will cover the subject-matter of the many amendments, especially the one offered by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] My substitute does not propose to touch the case of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] or the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL,] both of which can be offered as amendments to my substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, as the Senate is considering the resolution now and the amendments to it, the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to strike out and insert will be in order afterward.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey be read for information.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "resolved," and to insert:

That the Senate adhere to the principle embodied in the arrears of pension act, to wit, that pensions shall be computed as of the time of the disability. Second, that the Committee on Pensions be, and are hereby, instructed to prepare and present to the Senate, at the present session of Congress, a bill under which the business of the Pension Department may be expedited and frauds upon the Government detected and punished.

Mr. McPHERSON. Without detaining the Senate longer than may be necessary, I wish to state that if it be the purpose of the resolution of the Senator from Kansas to retain the principle embodied in the arrears of pension act, then I confess that I am in sympathy with his resolution; but I happen to be one of those who believe that the present law is faulty; that the machinery under which it is operated is an encouragement to frauds upon the Federal Treasury; and that we require some intelligent protective system, by which not only the brave and generous soldier may be protected but also the Federal Treasury. To this end it seems to me as though some legislation were needed.

At the same time I am willing again to renew my allegiance to the poor, sick, or disabled soldier who took his musket in his hand and went to the front at the call of his country. He knew it might be death; he knew it might be even worse than death—it might be wounds and disease, entailing upon him an existence valueless and even intolerable. In the case of such a man, a man who is entitled legally and equitably to a pension, I would vote to give him all that he needed, if it required a pension from the period of the date of his disability to the day of his death. To pay such a soldier I would pledge every dollar of money in the public Treasury and every acre of the public domain. If more were needed, to that extent I would mortgage the future; and still posterity would be in debt to the soldier.

But, sir, I cannot commit myself to any measure which will enable names to be placed on the pension-roll by perjury, bribery, and forgery. A few days ago as brave and gallant a soldier as ever entered the Union Army (a soldier who fought all through the war and who left a part of himself on the battle-field, who has supported himself and his family by such a salary as a disabled and a sick soldier could earn, one who has never asked this Government for one dollar of pension, and who says he did not fight for a pension but for quite another purpose) said to me that, of his own personal knowledge, in the military organization to which he was attached, there were four persons to-day drawing pensions from the Government who were no better entitled to them, except upon the principle that every man who entered the Army is entitled to a pension, than were the tiger-hunters upon the golden shores of Africa. I cannot commit myself to any such act; and to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Kansas without the modification that it deserves and requires would be to commit myself to the principle and to the machinery of the act, which I do not propose to do. I propose to grant a pension to every man who deserves it, and to give him all the time that he needs to make that claim good.

Therefore, with the consent of the Senator from Kansas, I have drafted this substitute. It meets his approval, it meets the approval of several Senators to whom I have submitted it upon this side of the Chamber. It does two things: it reasserts that to soldiers worthy and deserving the principle embodied in the arrears of pension law shall be continued, and it instructs the Committee on Pensions to report as soon as may be a bill which shall not only protect the worthy soldier, but which shall enable the Government to detect and punish frauds upon the pension-roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the needy or disabled soldiers of the Mexican war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the amendment and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I was going to propose an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words "needy or;" so as to read, "to the disabled soldiers of the Mexican war."

Mr. INGALLS. An amendment in the second degree is now pending.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he will not consent to a substitution of my amendment for his original proposition; because if we vote upon and adopt the amendments which have been offered by the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Florida it would leave the resolution then in a very incongruous shape, and it would be impossible in any sense or form to reach the judgment of the Senate intelligently upon the whole question.

Mr. INGALLS. If it were in my power to accept the substitute proposed by the Senator from New Jersey in the place of all the questions now pending, I would very gladly do so; but the Senator from South Carolina has control over the amendment. Therefore I cannot consent for him, but so far as I am concerned I give my assent to the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey to permit his amendment to be voted upon as a substitute for the entire proposition, including the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Kansas that there are several independent amendments pending or printed with the resolution, with notice that they would be offered.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I say to all those who have offered amendments that I am entirely willing that the proposition submitted by the Senator from New Jersey should take the place of the original resolution and the amendments.

Mr. McPHERSON. The resolution offered by myself as a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Kansas covers the subject-matter that he designed to cover, I understand, in his original resolution. It also covers the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. For those two propositions I should like to substitute my amendment. As to the amendments proposed by the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Florida, they can be offered to my proposition of substitution as well as to the original resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest objection to the substitute of the Senator from New Jersey, if the effect of its adoption would not be to dispose of my amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Not in the least particular.

Mr. BUTLER. If its practical effect would be to add my amendment to his substitute, I am quite willing that that course shall be pursued.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am perfectly willing to have it offered of course, and voted upon, as an amendment to my substitute.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator from New Jersey, then, to accept my amendment as a part of the resolution?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. That cannot be done. If the Senator from South Carolina insists on offering his proposition, then the parliamentary position of these questions would be exactly the same as it is now, because all that I can do is to accept the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey in place of my own. The vote would then recur upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina with regard to the proposition to pension the surviving soldiers of the Mexican war. Therefore, we had better proceed with the vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, as the Senate was about to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, it cannot now be withdrawn without the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I insist on the amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to another fact? The proposition that I offered as a substitute for the one of the Senator from Kansas contains two resolves. The first resolve covers the principle which he wishes to hold good in the legislation of the Senate, to wit, that a pension shall be computed from the time of the disability. That is the main thing which the Senator from Kansas wishes to retain. I go further and provide in the second resolve—

That the Committee on Pensions be, and are hereby, instructed to prepare and present to the Senate at the present session of Congress a bill under which the business of the Pension Department may be expedited and frauds upon it detected and punished.

That is the second resolve. A third resolve may be by the proposition of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me, if the Senator will permit me, that the simple way out of the difficulty is to vote upon my amendment, and then upon the amendment of the Senator from Florida. If those amendments are voted down, or if they are carried, it seems to me it would be then perfectly competent for the Senator from Kansas to accept the substitute of the Senator from New Jersey. It strikes me that that would be accomplishing precisely the purpose that he desires. I cannot withdraw the amendment now. I must insist on a vote upon it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, if I can be permitted to vote for the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas, I shall do so most heartily and cheerfully. I do not think that the arrears of pension law ought to be repealed, but I do not wish to have that question complicated with any other question relating to pensions. I do not think that the present limitation of June 30, 1880, as to the time when applications filed shall carry arrears of pension, ought to be extended.

Whether the arrears of pension act was wise, proper, and just, when it was originally passed, seems to me a question upon which there can be no discussion to-day. It has been a law on the statute-book for three years. The question of its original propriety embraces a variety of considerations. Was there a contract between the Government and the soldier for any pension in case of disability? If there was, was it a contract that the soldier should be paid his pension from the time of disability, or from the time when he might make application for it; or was there a public sentiment at the time of the enlistment of the soldier which justified him in supposing that if wounded or disabled he would receive a pension from the time of disability?

Those questions were pertinent when the act was pending before Congress. As it seems to me, they are no longer pertinent now; and I shall state the reason. About seventy-five thousand claims have been paid under the arrears of pension act, including those to whom pensions had been granted at the time when the act was passed and original applications filed since that time. There are, in round numbers, one hundred and fifty thousand more claims pending. There are more than that pending, but there are one hundred and fifty thousand which the Commissioner of Pensions says he believes to be meritorious claims, just as meritorious as those in which arrears of pensions have been paid. The applicants who have filed them have done everything in their power to avail themselves of the law, and it would be an outrage upon justice and humanity to repeal the law now and say that those who have already filed their claims under it and which have been pending for eighteen months shall not receive arrears when seventy-five thousand other soldiers whose claims happen to have been settled have received the arrears. Therefore I cannot believe that any considerable number of Senators desire to repeal the law.

I cannot see why in considering this matter we should be called upon to express an opinion as to whether the soldiers of the Mexican war should be pensioned. It seems to me that the two subjects are entirely distinct. What reason can be given for adding to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas a proposition that the soldiers of the Mexican war should be pensioned or that the soldiers of the Indian wars should be pensioned, unless it is meant by inference to say that they, too, shall have arrears of pensions?

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. Are you willing to commit yourself to the principle of the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PLATT. I certainly am.

Mr. McPHERSON. That the present arrears of pensions act is in every sense and form perfect and should be continued? That no modification is needed?

Mr. PLATT. No, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is all I wish to know.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that I understand the question.

Mr. McPHERSON. That no modification of the existing law is needed to protect the Government and also the pensioner?

Mr. PLATT. I do not understand that the arrears of pension law provides the manner in which pension claims shall be adjudicated.

Mr. INGALLS. Not at all.

Mr. PLATT. That is done by other acts of Congress. Therefore I say that as it seems to me the only question in relation to the repeal of the arrears of pension law is whether after it has been on the statute-book for three years, and seventy-five thousand soldiers, more or less, have been paid arrearages under it, it should be repealed and 150,000 meritorious claimants, whose claims are still unsettled, should not receive arrears.

I cannot assent to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina or the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida. I desire not to commit myself to any proposition on that subject until a bill shall be presented in the Senate which I can examine. I know of no reason why I should commit myself to any such proposition. I know that if the Senate to-day commits itself to that proposition it is an entering-wedge for the pensioning of every surviving soldier of the Mexican war, for every surviving soldier of the Indian wars, and for the widows of deceased soldiers. I am not prepared to say to-day that I am in favor of that.

I was much struck by the eloquence of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] when he described the bravery and the heroism of the soldiers of the Mexican war. But, Mr. President, we do not pension bravery; we do not pension heroism; we do not pension patriotism. A man owes something to his country. He owes service in its army; he owes bravery; he owes heroism; he owes patriotism. We pension men because they are disabled in war, and that is the only ground upon which I am willing to vote for a pension. Show me that a man has been disabled by his service and I will vote that he shall have a pension, and I will not be critical as to proof of that disability. If he makes a case where even a remote probability is established that his disability can be traced to army service, that man shall have my vote for a pension. But I know no other ground upon which a pension can be based in justice, in equity, or in common sense.

We introduce here, by the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, a new element in pensions. "Needy or disabled soldiers," not disabled by their service; and who is to regulate the standard of disability? Who is to say what physical ailment constitutes disability? It may be said that we have a precedent for it in the pensioning of soldiers of the war of 1812. I think it was a bad precedent. I think this whole country believes it was a bad precedent, that because men served fourteen days in the war of 1812—went on a junketing and picnicking expedition for fourteen days in that war—they are therefore entitled at a certain age to a pension. I do not want to extend that precedent. I do not want the country to be bound by it. I think that the only just and sensible basis upon which a pension can be granted is disability traceable to service in the Army of the United States. I have felt impelled to make these remarks for the reason that, if these amendments shall be carried, I must vote against the resolution, and I do not wish any one to suppose that I vote against it because I am opposed to it as it was submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

While I am on my feet I should like to say one word more, and it is right in the direction of a portion of the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] I think that instead of wasting our time here in debate as to whether the arrears of pensions act ought to be repealed, we should address ourselves to the question how these claims can be speedily adjudicated. I noticed that a resolution was passed by the Senate calling upon the Commissioner of Pensions to make some calculations upon the basis of taking seven years to settle the claims already pending in that office under the arrears of pensions act, and I noticed in the letter of the Commissioner, submitted to the Senate by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] that six years were proposed as the limit within which these claims should be settled. They have been pending already eighteen months. More than 50,000 of them have as yet not been reached for examination. There are 50,000 applications that have never yet received their first examination. If six years longer are to be taken, it will be seven years and a half from the time of the filing of the last claim before it is adjudicated in the Pension Office. I think that something should be done to remedy this. You need not tell me that this Government, which could put two millions and a half of men in the field, could arm them, could clothe them, could feed them, could pay them with regularity, cannot settle 150,000 pension claims in less than seven years and a half. The only difficulty about it is that the will is wanting. While we sit here in slow debate the soldier who excites so much sympathy is suffering, his family are suffering, and he will die before his claim is adjusted.

I am in favor not only of the continuance of the arrears of pension act, but I am in favor of such legislation as will enable these claims to be settled within the next two years. I want to say one thing more. If this Government will give to the Commissioner the legislation which he asks for, and the money which he asks for, and the force which he asks for to discharge that law, he will do it within two years.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want, at this hour of the day, to detain the Senate by making a speech; but I do want to put on record some reasons which exist in my own mind for voting against the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

In the first place, I think we are wasting time in discussing resolutions affecting our duty as Senators. We are here a legislative body. If we want to pass a bill pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war as a whole, or any particular classes of them, the way to get at it is to introduce a bill, the particular provisions of which will be before the mind of each Senator, in order that he may vote intelligently upon it.

If I understand the present state of the law as applied to the soldiers of the Mexican war, it is that every soldier of that war who is now alive, who suffered from wounds in that war, or from sickness, or who is now suffering any disability as the result of his services in the war, has access to the Pension Office for relief.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that the disabilities which attach to those pensioners of the Mexican war who are entitled by law to receive pensions have not been removed from that class of pensioners who aided in and abetted or sympathized with the rebellion. They have been removed from the pensioners of the war of 1812, but all the pensioners of the Mexican war under the present system who aided or participated in or sympathized with the rebellion are still under those disabilities.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no doubt the Senator is right, (I was speaking generally,) that those soldiers of the Mexican war who participated in the rebellion and fought against their country have not access to the Pension Office for relief. When it comes to be a question upon which we can vote directly upon a bill as to whether we will or not regard service in the rebel army as a bar to relief under a bill pensioning soldiers of the Mexican war, I shall be prepared for one to consider that question.

But the objectionable feature of the amendment to my mind is that it provides for pensioning men who are now disabled without reference at all to the cause of that disability, so that it is not limited to the class of cases suggested by the Senator from Alabama, to soldiers who were disabled in the Mexican war, but who lost their right to a pension or relief by a subsequent participation in the rebellion. All an applicant under this amendment, if it had the force of a law, would have to do to secure a pension would be to show a case of personal disability without reference to the cause of disability; so that it might happen that one who had gone through the Mexican war scatheless, whether from the bullets of the enemy or from the attacks of disease, and was a sound man until he participated in the rebellion and became disabled by wounds received there, would be entitled to a pension. If the amendment as proposed by the Senator from South Carolina should have the effect of law, if it were to be crystallized in the very shape in which it stands and put into legislation which had received the sanction of both Houses of Congress, what would the condition of things be? It would be that any soldier who had served in the Mexican war, and who came forward now to make his claim for a pension would only have to establish two facts: first, the fact of service in the Mexican war; and, second, the fact of a present disability. No inquiry could be instituted as to the origin of that disability; and so it might happen that men would be pensioned for a disability actually incurred in the rebellion while they were serving against their country.

This is quite a different question from the question whether we will overlook the fact of subsequent service against the country, and bring to the front and to recognition the gallant services of the southern soldiers in the Mexican war. That, I say, is quite a different question from the adoption of a resolution the effect of which might be that the basis of the pension, the disability on which it is granted, was received and incurred while a person was serving against his country.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator pardon me for interrupting him?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senator is placing a false construction upon the language of my proposition. I understand the word "disability" to have a definite meaning under the law. Of course the disability would be construed in regard to the law as it now exists, and would imply a disability in the line of duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator to make his amendment read "disability in the line of duty."

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that in the world.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from South Carolina is quite right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not consent to that, because we are here now expressing our opinions merely; we are not legislating. There are bills before both Houses of Congress to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war. It is said there are bills before the lower House to repeal the arrearages of pensions law; and this resolution is merely an expression of opinion by the Senate. We might express our opinion upon pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war or any other question. We might express our opinion upon rats, if we chose. There is no incongruity or incompatibility between the propositions. I shall vote for them all, the original resolution, the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, and the amendment of the Senator from Florida. I think each amendment offered has made the original resolution better; and I am prepared to give my opinion upon all three, and I hope the entire Senate is. What we do is not to have the effect of law at all. Therefore I shall not consent to the amendment suggested.

Mr. HARRISON. In response to the Senator from Kentucky, he will permit me to say that when we resolve that the arrears of pensions act ought not to be repealed, we have a very definite subject before our minds; the law is before us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me just one moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When we express the opinion that the veterans of the Mexican War ought also to be pensioned, have we not a definite subject before us in that case?

Mr. HARRISON. My answer to the Senator is that we have not. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina has two governing words in it, the words "needy" and "disabled."

Mr. BUTLER. "Needy or disabled."

Mr. HARRISON. I know; but I am only taking the two governing words. It is evidently the intention by the use of the first word to pension a class of men who suffered no disability in consequence of their service in the Mexican war; and I cannot be mistaken I think in supposing that the second word quite as little relates to disability incurred in the line of duty while serving in the Army. It relates, as the word which precedes it does, to the present condition of the applicant at the time he files his application. The test question then is, is he needy, or is he disabled? There is not, as I insist, a word in the amendment which would connect the disability with service in the Mexican war. It might result from any cause.

Mr. BUTLER. The law does that itself.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator pleases, we are now resolving that we ought to make a law; we are not making any reference to a law already enacted.

Mr. BUTLER. It is simply an expression of opinion—"sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." It seems to me that the word "disabled" has a very well recognized meaning when applied to pensions; it means "disabled in the line of duty." The Senator has much more experience with pensions than I have; but I have always supposed that that is what it meant. That is what I certainly intended it to mean. I had no idea at all that a disability incurred in the confederate army should entitle the party to a pension.

Mr. BLAIR. Would the Senator be willing to modify his amendment so as to make that point clear?

Mr. BUTLER. The amendment has passed out of my control. The Senator from Kansas accepts it as part of his resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator from Indiana will pardon me, as well as the Senator from South Carolina, I will state that there can be no doubt that the Senator from Indiana is correct in his construction of the words. If a disability is to be construed as stated by the Senator from South Carolina, then the soldier is pensionable under existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. So far as I can control the amendment, I have not the slightest objection to those qualifying words being attached to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no reason why the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina may not be amended by the action of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. If I understand the suggestion as to the amendment, the scope of the resolution then would be, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, simply to have the effect, so far as that clause of it goes, that soldiers of the Mexican war who served in the rebellion who are now excluded from the pension-roll should be admitted.

Mr. BUTLER. That would be the practical effect where they were disabled in the Mexican war in the line of duty. The practical effect would be simply to remove their disability as to disloyalty.

Mr. CALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he objects now to granting a pension to a soldier who had served faithfully in the Mexican war or an Indian war forty years ago, who is now in a condition of destitution and need, whether he was disabled or not at the time?

Mr. HARRISON. I have but one response to that. I do not like the idea of compelling a pensioner, when he comes to the Government for his pension, to be put to the necessity of exposing his poverty and basing his claim upon the ground of his necessitous condition. I was going to allude to the word "needy," but the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has done so. It is a vague and general word.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana before he passes from the point of his reply to the Senator from Florida, whether he means to say that he disapproves of the present conditions of the pension law which require the mother, or widow, or orphan of the soldier to state that they are in need, and to establish the fact? I would also call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Revolutionary pension system, the law which existed nearly fifty years after the Revolution, required not only general proof that the soldier of the Revolutionary war applying for a pension was in need, but also required a very full and detailed schedule of his property, real and personal, attested by his oath.

Mr. HARRISON. I would respond to the Senator by saying that I think the soldiers of the Revolutionary war ought to have been spared that humiliation.

Mr. HOAR. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. As to the other branch of inquiry, as to the clause of the present pension laws in the case of widows and orphans, if I understand the law, the condition of dependence is to be made out, and upon that condition the granting of the pension depends. It is not the question of poverty, but it is the question of dependence on the soldier.

Mr. HOAR. It comes to the same thing, does it not?

Mr. HARRISON. I think not.

Mr. HOAR. Very nearly, in most cases.

Mr. HARRISON. I had not intended to be led into so general a consideration of the question. I rose simply to give some reasons that operated upon my own mind. I think we had better defer action on the amendments until the friends of the measures have framed a bill and brought it before us, so that we may intelligently discuss the question.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think evidently there is to be further discussion of this matter, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope we may have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. The yeas and nays have been already ordered upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for a division.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 23, noes 20.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before the doors are closed, I desire to ask leave to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive it.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1272) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PENDLETON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1273) granting a pension to Emma O. Zeigler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions;

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1274) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah B. Franklin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1275) for the relief of First Lieutenant Eugene Griffin, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1276) for the relief of Philip G. Hopkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1277) granting an increase of pension to William Heine; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 20, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise to a question of personal privilege, and shall detain the House but two minutes.

Among the papers which were transmitted to the House by the President in accordance with the resolution introduced some time since by my colleague [Mr. BELMONT] is a letter dated on the 2d of June, signed by Jacob R. Shipherd, and addressed to Hon. S. A. Hurlbut, United States Minister to Peru, Belvidere, Illinois. This letter gives a list of names, in regard to which Mr. Shipherd says:

> Among the representative gentlemen with whom I am already or shall soon be in confidential negotiation in the premises I may name such as these.

In this highly respectable list he has seen fit to include my name. As I am the only member of this House whose name is included in the list, I think it proper to say that I do not know Mr. Shipherd. I never have known him. The use of my name is entirely without my knowledge, privity, or consent. The only possible means of identifying Mr. Shipherd in my mind is this, that I found one day a circular on my desk which must have related to this business. I gave it no attention, and either threw it into the waste-basket or it was taken away by somebody who called for it. At any rate I never had and never expect to have the slightest connection with Mr. Shipherd or his enterprises. I am also requested and authorized to say for my fellow-citizen, Mr. August Belmont, of New York, that the use of his name was in like manner without his authority or knowledge.

TENTS, ETC., FOR SOLDIERS' REUNION AT GRAND ISLAND, NEBRASKA.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Grand Island, Nebraska, in the month of August, 1882, and that it be brought before the House for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient fort or arsenal, to be used at the soldiers' reunion at Grand Island,

Nebraska, to be held in the month of August, 1882, such cannon, tents, muskets, &c., as can be conveniently spared; said cannon, tents, muskets, &c., to be returned after holding of said reunion meeting in as like good condition as when received: Provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion to the fort or arsenal shall be without expense to the Government: Provided further, That the Adjutant-General of the State of Nebraska, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said arms, ammunition, and camp equipage in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota.

Mr. SCALES. I would like the gentleman to agree to an amendment to provide that these articles shall not be returned in a damaged condition.

Mr. VALENTINE. This is exactly the same joint resolution as was approved by the Secretary of War and passed in the last Congress.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DESTITUTION IN ARKANSAS AND LOUISIANA.

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which I send to the desk for the relief of destitute people in Arkansas and Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

The joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. WILLITS. I object.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a brief explanation? I have numerous letters here showing that severe destitution exists all over that section of the country.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Objection has been made, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. DUNN. I think the gentleman will not insist on his objection. The joint resolution provides that relief shall only be afforded after careful investigation by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WILLITS. Let the joint resolution go to some committee, and let us have the facts. There are other places in the United States where destitution prevails.

Mr. DUNN. This bill does not make an appropriation, but leaves it to the Secretary of War to act as in his opinion the emergency justifies. The danger is imminent. I can read numbers of letters and articles from newspapers which I think will satisfy every member here that this resolution ought to pass.

Mr. WILLITS. I adhere to my objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to have the resolution referred?

Mr. DUNN. I ask, then, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report it back at the earliest period.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 137) for the relief of destitute people in Arkansas and Louisiana, was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COBB. I ask leave to present a resolution of inquiry for immediate consideration. It relates to a matter in which we are all interested, as will be seen by its reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas large sums of money have been appropriated by Congress during the last two or three years for the erection of school buildings in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas complaint has been made of the manner in which this money has been expended by the District authorities; and

Whereas notwithstanding these large appropriations for school buildings, the commissioners' estimates for rented buildings have not been materially decreased: Therefore,

Resolved, That Dr. John S. Billings, Hon. John Eaton, and Edward Clark, Architect of the Capitol, be, and they are hereby, requested to inquire into, examine, and report to this House on or before the 15th day of March next, the character, condition, and fitness of all buildings, owned and rented, now in use or in process of erection for the use of the public schools of the District of Columbia, together with the amount of rent paid for each building or room rented, and whether said rent is too high, with a view to such modification for convenience, safety, health, and reduction of rent as may be found practicable, stating also the deficiencies, if any, now existing in school buildings in said District, and the most desirable and economical plan for supplying the same, and the best method of obtaining and determining upon plans for school buildings hereafter to be erected, and any suggestions on these subjects which they may deem proper.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI, KEITHSBURGH, ILLINOIS.

Mr. MARSH. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Calendar for immediate consideration House bill No. 2247, authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburgh, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-route. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Commerce, with a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSH?]

Mr. PAGE. After this matter has been acted on, I shall call for the regular order, because, as I understand, this is the day on which motions to suspend the rules, made by direction of committees, are in order.

Mr. POUND. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. POUND. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being the third Monday of the month, the regular order, after the call of the States for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, is the consideration of motions made under instruction of committees for the suspension of the rules. When this business was before the House on the third Monday of last month the Committee on the District of Columbia was the last committee called. The practice in the last Congress, which has thus far been followed in the present, will be adhered to unless the House should make some different order; and the call of committees for motions of this character will begin where it stopped in the previous month. The next committee in order is the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

ATTENDANT FOR HOUSE ELEVATOR.

After several committees had been called, the Committee on Accounts was called.

Mr. CANDLER. By direction of the Committee on Accounts, I report back a resolution with a substitute, and move that the rules be suspended and the substitute adopted.

The resolution as referred to the Committee was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ one additional person for the elevator of this House, at a cost not to exceed $100 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund.

The substitute reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint one additional fireman, who shall be a machinist, in the heating department of the House of Representatives; and it shall be the duty of the officers in control of this department to take charge of and run all machinery connected with the elevator in the House wing of the Capitol. The rate of compensation shall be the same as that now paid to the firemen.

The question being taken, the resolution reported from the Committee on Accounts as a substitute was adopted, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

PENSIONS, BOUNTIES, ETC.

Mr. JOYCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to submit for adoption the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bills of the House numbered 3918 and 3925, and that said bills be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report said bills, with or without amendments or substitutes for them, on the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the bills to which the resolution refers.

Mr. JOYCE. I will send up the bills and reports that they may be read.

The SPEAKER. The bills may be read; the reading of the reports is not now in order.

The bills were read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3918) to amend section 4744, title 57, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4744, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4744. The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to designate from time to time clerks or special examiners in his office to make special examinations into the merits of such pension or bounty-land claims, whether pending or adjudicated, as he may deem proper, and to aid in the prosecution of any party found on such examinations to have been guilty of fraud, either in the presentation or in procuring the allowance of such claims, with such additional compensation to such clerks or special examiners as is customary in cases of special service; and any person so designated shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits in the course of such examinations, and may employ a stenographer when deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions in important cases, such stenographer to be paid by such clerk or special examiner, and the amount so paid to be allowed in his accounts."

A bill (H. R. No. 3925) to amend sections 184 and 185, of title 4, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That sections 184 and 185, title 4, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 184. Any head of a Department or bureau in which a claim against the United States is properly pending may apply to any judge or clerk of any court of the United States, in any State, District, or Territory, to issue a subpœna for a witness being within the jurisdiction of such court to appear at a time and place in the subpœna stated, before any officer authorized to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, or before any officer, agent, or special examiner of such Department or bureau designated or detailed to investigate or examine into the merits of such claim, and authorized by law to administer oaths and take affidavits in such investigation or examination, there to give full and true answers to such written interrogatories and cross-interrogatories as may be propounded, or to be orally examined and cross-examined upon the subject of such claim.

"SEC. 185. Witnesses subpœnaed pursuant to the preceding section shall be allowed the same compensation as is allowed witnesses in the courts of the United States, and paid in the same manner."

Mr. KASSON. I should be glad to have the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] state whether bounty-land claims are rightly included in the first bill read, in connection with the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions, as I understand the Second Auditor of the Treasury has charge of such claims.

Mr. JOYCE. This has nothing to do with that at all; this is merely an enlargement of the powers of the examiners.

Mr. KASSON. I ask because, if I heard rightly, bounty-land claims are included under the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is correct.

Mr. KASSON. No.

Mr. DUNNELL. Yes; claims for bounty go to the Second Auditor, but bounty-land claims go to the Commissioner of Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Vermont neither of these bills is in the Committee of the Whole House, but both are upon the House Calendar.

Mr. JOYCE. They are upon the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution should read to take them from the House Calendar and not from the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. JOYCE. I may have made a mistake, and I ask the resolution be so modified.

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, to know what the question is before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont to suspend the rules and to adopt the resolution which has been read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make the point of order it is not in order under the rules. A motion may be made to suspend the rules and pass a bill, but certainly not to suspend the rules to introduce a resolution.

Mr. JOYCE. This is to suspend the rules and take these two bills from the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt it is in order. It will not do to allow gentlemen to run off into discussion about these matters. They must be prepared or the whole day will be taken up with a single measure.

Mr. CONVERSE. Is it in order to take up two bills at once?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the House to decide when they come to vote. If they wish to take two bills and rerefer them by a two-thirds vote the Chair would not like to say it could not be done in one motion. If it were proposed to pass two bills at once the Chair might rule otherwise.

Mr. KASSON. I ask whether in the resolution the language is, "with or without amendments or substitutes?" If it is, it leaves to the committee some discretion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution, which has been modified.

Mr. JOYCE. It leaves it entirely discretionary with the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended, and the bills of the House Nos. 3918 and 3925 be taken from the House Calendar, and the said bills be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report such bills with or without amendments or substitutes for them on the Pension appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 9.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was adopted.

REMISSION OF DUTIES ON NEW TESTAMENT.

Mr. McKINLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to move to suspend the rules and pass joint resolution H. R. No. 80, with an amendment in the nature of a proviso.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, with the proviso of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas 2,100 copies of the book known as the Revision of the New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, printed by the University Presses of Oxford and Cambridge, in England, and being the joint and gratuitous work of two companies of translators, one in England and one in the United States, were sent, under the direction of the English Company of Revisers, to and for the use and distribution of the American Company of Revisers, and were heretofore imported at the port of New York for or on behalf of the American Company of Revisers, and the duties paid thereon; and

Whereas the revision of the translation of the Old Testament Scriptures is now progressing under similar auspices, and the same is to be printed in a similar manner, and copies of them will be required for the use and distribution of the American Company of Revisers: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain the facts of such past and expected importations of the revisions of the Bible, and if he shall be satisfied that they are substantially as above set forth, then to refund and repay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the American Company of Revisers, of which Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, of New York, is chairman, and Rev. Dr. Henry Day, of New York, is secretary, through and by said officers, the amount of duties heretofore paid upon the said books so imported; and that he be, and further is, authorized and directed to remit the duties upon, and to admit to entry free of duty or custom, the books containing the revision of the Old Testament which may be hereafter imported from England by or on behalf of the American Company of Revisers, for their use and distribution as above set forth: Provided, That future importations of said revision of the Bible, for the purposes set forth, shall not exceed 2,000 copies.

Mr. SCALES. I demand a second, in order to afford the committee an opportunity to explain the matter. I do not oppose the resolution.

Mr. REAGAN. Why cannot such statement be made by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the second being ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It is the understanding that unanimous consent does not extend the time.

The SPEAKER. It does not extend it beyond the time fixed by the rules, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. McKINLEY. The facts of the case are set forth in the report, which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The facts in the case are these:

The American revisers of the New Testament, a body organized for the purpose of revising the translation of the Bible, in conjunction with a similar committee in England, ask a refund of certain duties which they have paid upon a shipment of 2,100 volumes of the New Testament Revision.

Under the arrangement, the revision was to be published at the University presses of Oxford and Cambridge in England. That after the publication of the New Testament the American committee needed a certain number of copies for their own use, and for distribution among scholars, public institutions, and others; and thereupon arranged to receive 2,100 copies, which were sent under the direction of the English company and the University presses, arriving in the city of New York in the month of May, 1881. The duties levied and collected by the customs officers upon said books amounted to $1,475.75, which sum was paid by the committee.

The committee have performed all their labor as a gratuity, and for the general good, without any compensation whatever. Such necessary expenses as have been incurred in their work have been paid by contributions from benevolent citizens.

The books so imported were for the use and distribution of the committee; they were not sold nor disposed of for value.

The revision of the Old Testament, now going on, is under like conditions and arrangements as governed in the revision of the New Testament.

Your committee is of the opinion that the refund should be made as provided for in the bill, and that 2,000 copies of the revision of the Old Testament for the use of the American committee should be admitted free of duty.

The passage of the bill as amended is therefore recommended.

Mr. McKINLEY. My colleague from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER,] from the Committee on Ways and Means, desires to be heard upon this resolution, and I therefore yield to him.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, the report of the committee is lucid and satisfactory, but I am unwilling that the opportunity to express my hearty approval of this measure should escape me. It is maintained, sir, by a very respectable number of gentlemen who call themselves free-traders that duties should be so regulated as neither to prohibit nor discourage the importation of useful commodities. I shall not, sir, under the suspension of the rules, express either assent or dissent to this proposition. I am prepared to say, however, that the revised Scriptures are among those useful commodities whose introduction should be encouraged by immunity from taxation.

This concession is due not only to those who read the Bible because it is the Bible, but to the biblical student, to the lover of truth, and to those scholarly men who are profoundly interested in the accuracy of the sacred Scriptures. Besides, sir, the comparison which is being made, and which will be made on a more extensive scale between the old version and the new revision will have the tendency to make our people more familiar with the doctrines and precepts of the sacred Scriptures, and that this is a consummation devoutly to be wished will be admitted by every man, whether he is an earnest Christian or simply regards the Bible with that reverence which is awakened by the contemplation of its noble structure or is the offspring of a traditionary sentiment.

Why, sir, the veriest infidel, who regards the Bible as a mere human work, and who repels the idea of its inspiration, must admit its educative value when widely circulated, read, and studied. In one of the old English statutes, of about 1516, the sacred volume is called Bibliotheca, the library; and what a library it is! How interesting and varied its contents, its subjects, and its rhetorical styles. In historical narrative it surpasses the renowned works of Herodotus or of Xenophon. How picturesque are its descriptions; how touching its pathos; how bold and sublime its imagery.

Sir, the greatest German poet, Goethe, regarded the book of Ruth as the most perfect and lustrous gem in the whole range of idyllic poetry, and Humboldt deemed the one hundred and fourth Psalm of all lyrics the most superb. To the orator and public speaker so felicitous is its aid that it has been said that a thorough knowledge of its language and illustrations is strikingly characteristic of almost every truly great speaker, "who with the strong rein of commanding words doth master, sway, and move the eminence of men's affections."

There are those who would exclude the Bible from the schools. This is, indeed, ingratitude. They are strangely oblivious of the fact that the schools are indebted to the Bible for the preservation of the classic lore of which scholars are so justly proud. It was not the knowledge of Greek and Latin which preserved the sacred Scriptures while the classic tongues were the temporary vehicles of Bible truths, but it was, sir, the study of the Scriptures in Greek and Latin which preserved these languages from utter extinction. The painstaking labors of scholarly priests and the ecclesiastical uses of these tongues during the dark ages have perpetuated the language of Demosthenes and Tully. Otherwise the Iliad and the Æneid might have shared the fate of the literature of the Assyrian or the Carthagenian.

But I do not mean to separate the claims of the Bible as a mere educative book from that veneration which belongs to it by virtue of its divine origin and authority. In the system of political ethics which has come down to us from Washington and Jefferson and Adams and Madison, we have been taught that men might as well build their houses upon the sand as to seek to build republican institutions on other basis than that of morality and public and private virtue.

Otherwise, when the winds blow and the rains fall and the floods of revolution come, the institutions will fall and great will be the fall thereof. They will perish as utterly as the baseless fabric of the parable. Of that morality and virtue the Bible is the authoritative rule and the adequate and the conspicuous sanction. Compare the nations who believe in the Bible with the lands of the Koran and of the Hindoo faith, and see their immeasurable superiority in purity of morals and perfection of civilization.

Sir, this difference is caused by the simple and beautiful and practical religion of the Bible. As patriots, then—as legislators in charge of public affairs—it is becoming and proper that we should encourage the circulation and study of the Bible, and the introduction of the new version should be fostered by the hand of Government, which, with tolerance to all faiths and creeds not inimical to society, is never more wisely engaged than in diffusing knowledge among the masses, and especially the knowledge of the principles and precepts of truth and morality. I trust, sir, this bill in the House as in the committee will receive the unanimous support of the Representatives of this Bible-reading and Bible-loving Republic.

Mr. McKINLEY. There is no further discussion on our side, Mr. Speaker, and if gentlemen who oppose this desire to be heard, we now yield the floor.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the joint resolution was passed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to move to suspend the rules and take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 124) to establish distinct United States courts, with distinct officers, in the northern and southern judicial districts of the State of Georgia, and define their jurisdiction and powers, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the counties of Troup, Meriwether, Spalding, Fayette, Henry, Newton, Morgan, Greene, Taliaferro, Wilkes, and Lincoln, in the State of Georgia, and all the counties in said State north of them, shall compose one judicial district, to be known as the northern district of Georgia, and all the counties of said State south of those named above shall compose another judicial district, to be known as the southern district of Georgia.

SEC. 2. That the southern district of Georgia shall remain divided into eastern and western divisions, as is prescribed by act of Congress approved the 29th of January, A. D. 1880, entitled "An act to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State;" and all the provisions of said act and all laws and parts of laws affecting any one of said courts and not inconsistent with this act shall remain of full force and effect.

SEC. 3. That there shall be a judge, district attorney, clerk, and marshal in and for each of said districts, to be appointed, commissioned, and removed as such officers now are, respectively; but the officers now acting in said places in both of said districts shall continue so to act until their places shall be supplied as is hereinafter provided.

SEC. 4. That within thirty days from the passage of this act the President of the United States shall cause a copy of the same to be handed to the judge, district attorney, and marshal of the United States then in commission in said State, and require them respectively, within fifteen days after such service, to select the district in which they will reside and hold their respective offices. Any citizen of the United States may serve said officers as stated, and his return of personal service, sworn to before any officer of the United States before whom affidavits may be made, will be sufficient evidence of the time and fact of such service. The offices so selected by the incumbents shall be held by them respectively according to law. Such of said offices in either of said districts as shall become vacant by such election shall be immediately filled as is now prescribed by law for such offices respectively, and the functions of the old officers shall cease for the district in which his successor shall have been appointed immediately upon his qualification as such officer.

SEC. 5. That said officers for each of said districts shall reside within the district in which he holds his office, and receive the same salary, compensation, and fees, and be subject to the same liabilities, bonds, and penalties as are now prescribed for such officers respectively in said State.

SEC. 6. That there shall be two terms of the district court for the northern district of Georgia, to be held annually, at Atlanta, Georgia, and beginning on the second Mondays of March and September in each year. And the district judge of the United States for said northern district shall hold said courts at said times, and one or more special terms, at said place, annually, if in his opinion the business of the court or the public convenience shall require it to be done.

SEC. 7. That the second Mondays of March and September in each year shall be return days for writs and executions returnable to said district court for the northern district of Georgia, and the parties to such suits as shall be so returned shall make up their pleadings, under such rules as the court may prescribe, in order to have the causes so returned in a state of readiness for trial at the succeeding regular term.

SEC. 8. That all suits of a local nature in said district, and all suits against persons residing in said district, shall be commenced therein; but if there be more than one defendant in a cause not of a local nature, and they reside in different districts in said State, the plaintiff may sue all in either district, and send duplicate writs to the defendants out of the district where suit is filed, on which duplicates the plaintiff, or his attorney, shall indorse that the writ thus sent is a copy of the writ sued out in the proper district; and said original writ and the duplicates when executed and returned into the office from which they issued shall constitute one and the same writ and be proceeded with accordingly.

SEC. 9. That the said district court for the northern district of Georgia, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction and powers of a district court of the United States, shall within the limits of said district have jurisdiction of all causes, except appeals and writs of error, which now are or hereafter may be cognizable in a circuit court of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court of the United States.

SEC. 10. That appeals and writs in the nature of appeals shall lie and be sued from the said district court at Atlanta to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 11. That should the judge authorized to hold said court at Atlanta fail to attend at the time and place of holding the same, at either term, before the close of the fourth day of such term, the business pending in such court shall stand adjourned to the next term thereof.

SEC. 12. That when the judge of either of said districts shall be absent from his district or sick, upon his request the judge of the other district may hold his courts.

SEC. 13. That said courts shall remain in the fifth judicial district of the United States.

SEC. 14. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HAZELTON. I ask if this is not subject to the point of order, that it should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its first consideration, in view of the fact that it will create additional expense?

The SPEAKER. Under the present motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill that point of order cannot lie against this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Perhaps the gentleman will be willing to let it be considered as seconded without the necessity of going through the formality of tellers, and let the debate proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the motion can be considered as seconded, and under the rule fifteen minutes will be allowed for debate in favor of and fifteen against the proposition.

There being no objection, the motion was seconded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I feel justified in consuming a few moments of the time of the House in considering this bill. It seems to me, sir, that it is not the true policy of this Government to give overshadowing prominence in the several States to the Federal judiciary, or to increase and enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts beyond the limits of the Constitution as construed and applied in the earlier periods of our history.

The increase of the Federal judiciary and the enlargement of its jurisdiction means the centralization of the legal business of the various States at a few favored points, and in some instances at the State capital alone, manifestly to the injury and inconvenience of the great body of the people who are compelled to attend court at places remote from their homes; and it also, to a greater or less extent, diminishes the importance and dignity of the State courts.

You diminish and impair the actual jurisdiction and importance of the courts of the State in the same proportion that you increase and extend the jurisdiction and legal business of the Federal courts. Railroad and other corporations going with their business into the various States from the States in which they are organized, with large interests and capitals, find the Federal courts an effective and convenient method by which to embarrass and hinder actions brought against them, and thus secure unjust advantages to themselves to the great detriment and injury of the body of the people.

I will venture the assertion that in the State of Georgia, as in other States of the Union, a vast body of causes going into the Federal courts originates in the business of corporations organized in other States than those in which their business is carried on; and in the main these causes are brought against the corporation and are transferred under the law into the Federal court for the express purpose of securing delay.

I think the true remedy for the alleged overcrowded state of the business of the Federal courts is not to increase the number of the judges, but to diminish the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

I think the jurisdiction of the Federal courts should be limited to causes arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States and causes between citizens of different States. Thus restricted and the Federal courts divested of jurisdiction of causes in the interest of national banks, and causes by or against corporations in the States where such corporations transact business, and the power to administer the affairs of corporations for years and years under pretended receiverships, I think there would be no necessity of increasing the already large body of Federal judges.

It seems to me that in the State of Georgia there can scarcely be a business in excess of that of other States of corresponding population.

In my own State, with an accomplished and efficient district judge, courts are held at four different places in the State and there is no complaint, or cause of complaint, of delay in the business of the court. There have been frequent efforts to divide the State into two separate districts, and create an additional judge and other officers, but this attempt has hitherto failed, and a competent district judge even holding court at four different points in the State has been able to meet the demands of the public business.

My experience has been that when bills of this character are brought forward to increase the Federal judiciary and to enlarge the number of judges or increase their jurisdiction, it is reasonably certain the measure will pass, and year by year the Federal courts are diminishing the importance and encroaching upon the business of the courts of the States. I can only say that I hope this bill will not pass, unless the gentleman from Georgia can show that it is absolutely indispensable that this additional judge should be created.

Under ordinary circumstances it might be presumed that the business of the State of Georgia going into the Federal courts would be diminishing instead of increasing. The repeal of the bankrupt law has greatly diminished the business of the Federal courts; the reduction of the internal-revenue tax will reduce the business of those courts, and with the exception of the admiralty business of the State of Georgia, it is safe to predict that the business of the Federal courts of that State must decrease, and certainly will largely decrease if you only restore the judiciary act as it stood before the war.

Another consideration which I wish to urge upon the gentleman from Georgia is this, that as you increase the number of the Federal judges by the increase of districts and circuits, in that proportion will be increased the difficulty of reducing the jurisdiction of those courts. And to increase the number from year to year will tend to increase the facilities for the transfer of causes from State to Federal courts. I do not know any greater hardship resting now on the people of the various States than the facility with which causes may be transferred from the State to the Federal courts; and the transfer most frequently occurs on behalf of the more powerful party, and to the injury of the weaker, and not unfrequently the transfer of a cause from a State to a Federal court amounts to a denial of justice to the weaker party.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] as well as of the House generally, to two or three provisions of the bill which seem to me novel, and to require a little more attention than we can give to them under a motion to suspend the rules. The language of the eighth section, for example, while it is intended to apply to suits that are now under the jurisdiction of a United States court, is very broad, declaring:

> That all suits of a local nature in said district, and all suits against persons residing in said district, shall be commenced therein.

It of course means within the jurisdiction as fixed now by law; but it does not say so.

In the ninth section, also, it is provided:

> That the said district court for the northern district of Georgia, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction and powers of a district court of the United States, shall within the limits of said district have jurisdiction of all causes, except appeals and writs of error, which now are or hereafter may be cognizable in a circuit court of the United States.

Thus conferring upon this court exceptionally the jurisdiction in all causes but appeals and writs of error that are now by general law given to the circuit court, which is a radical change of existing law.

In the tenth section the bill provides:

> That appeals and writs in the nature of appeals shall lie and be sued from the said district court at Atlanta to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Thus abolishing the circuit court in respect to such appeals.

I have only hastily examined the bill, hardly thinking it probable that a bill of fourteen sections regulating jurisdiction important as this is would be passed by the House without a little more consideration at least than can be given to it under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The first lines of the report accompanying the bill are these:

> The bill under consideration (H. R. No. 124) makes no change in the law of the United States except in two particulars, as to the district courts in Georgia. It provides for distinct judges, attorneys, and marshals in each of the districts, (northern and southern.)

That is the first change.

> And by its twelfth section allows one of these judges to hold the courts of the other upon his request when he is absent or sick.

That is the only other change.

> The other parts of the bill are copied verbatim from the acts of Congress now in force as to those courts. They are repeated only that the same may be found in one place.

The gentleman from Iowa, therefore, is mistaken in supposing that there is any proposition to change the law in any other particular. If this bill is defeated the law will remain as provided therein, except that there will not be the extra judge, &c., and except that the judges cannot alternate in cases of sickness or absence of one of them.

Mr. KASSON. I have to say as to that, I think the gentleman from Iowa is not proved to be wrong by the mere fact that a certain view is taken in the report of the committee. It is a question of fact; and I presume that statement was made through inadvertence, for in the ninth section you reserve the exception of appeals and writs of error which we all know do come in some cases to the circuit court. In the tenth section you expressly provide that appeals and writs in the nature of appeals go directly, leaping the circuit court, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. For this reason, that the general law of the United States applies to the district courts, and from them you go to the Supreme Court anyhow. This special law has been the law of Georgia for over thirty years, and you may go from the district court of Georgia directly to the Supreme Court. This section of the bill is a copy of the now existing statute in that particular.

Mr. KASSON. I will ask the gentleman, then, if the Revised Statutes, or rather the statutes establishing the circuit courts, do not apply to Georgia?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Certainly they do.

Mr. KASSON. Then the general law of the circuit courts must now apply to Georgia.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Certainly. That is in addition to this. This does not repeal any of that. It simply says as to this court there shall be that remedy. The general law declares as to the other court what the remedy is.

Mr. KASSON. But it is a question of change of the general law.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It does not change it in a single word or syllable.

Mr. KASSON. I cannot understand that.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The Committee on the Judiciary unanimously understood it to be so.

Mr. KASSON. It may be that the members of the committee who have examined it will be able to point to the provision of the Revised Statutes which excepts the State of Georgia from the provisions of the general law.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. If the gentleman will look at the statutes he will find verified what I say, that this bill is a copy, verbatim et literatim, from the Statutes, with the exceptions named in the report.

Mr. KASSON. I cannot agree with the gentleman from my present information. All I can say is that I did not rise to debate this bill further than to ask the House to take sufficient time to consider its details. I do not like to see exceptions established for particular States in the application of general law.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Has the gentleman a motion to make?

Mr. KASSON. Without sufficient reason, I think it ought in no case to be done. For my part, I should be very glad if, instead of suspending the rules and passing this bill at this time, the gentleman would postpone its consideration until it can be examined in the particulars to which I have called attention, and then move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering the bill. Of course, under a suspension of the rules as now moved there can be no opportunity for any extended discussion, and none at all for amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I have no objection to any sort of consideration of the bill. The question of fact, which the gentleman has made, will be verified during the fifteen minutes which I have to discuss this proposition. If the gentleman will look under the head district courts of Georgia he will find that this "leaping," as he calls it, from the district court to the Supreme Court has always been allowed.

While the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] who may speak upon this bill, is looking up the statute, I will make a remark in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] Before doing that, however, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] that if he has any amendment to propose to this bill which has merit in it I have no objection to its being offered. I desire to do nothing but to get the two changes which we need in Georgia.

I would agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in reducing the jurisdiction of the United States courts, if he and I could have our way; but we cannot. I agree with him that it is a great hardship that corporations by the transfer of their causes from the State courts into the Federal courts can compel citizens to travel long distances and to remain for great periods of time at the Federal courts in order to have their litigation attended to. That is exactly what I am trying to avoid.

The law of removals stands now. By that law these corporations can carry us into the Federal courts, and if there are not sufficient officers to work off the business, it is very oppressive to our citizens. As I understand it, the business of the legislator is to legislate up to what he can do; not up to an imaginary view of what he would like to do.

The gentleman says that the courts of his State get along very well with one judge. That may be true. Indiana is crossed and recrossed all over by railroads. She has accessibility from one point to another, much more than we have in Georgia. And yet there was in the State of Georgia, by the records, more than five times as much criminal business in the Federal courts in the last six years as there was in the courts of Indiana.

Yet we have but one judge. He is at Savannah, four hundred miles away from persons in the northern part of the State, and everybody has to go there to see him. If one of our citizens sues a railroad, and the cause is removed into the United States court, and an injunction or other such remedy is sought, he is obliged to travel to Savannah to see the judge and have his case argued. That takes him a long way from his local bar and from the men of his vicinage.

It is to remedy the very evil which the gentleman points out that I have introduced and brought this bill before the House. It makes no change in the territorial jurisdiction of Georgia. That State has now three courts in two districts, but she has not sufficient machinery to work off the business properly. That is all there is of it.

I do not care to say more about it, as it is a mere matter of business, than to add that I have carefully examined the statistics as gathered in the reports of the Attorney-General, and find that we have far more business, civil and criminal, in my State than in many other States that have two judges, some of them with three judges.

The tendency of late has been to provide more judges. I grant, as the gentleman from Indiana says, that whenever we can get the quantum of jurisdiction lowered, whenever we can make the work less, then we can cut off the men who have to do the work. But as long as this thing exists we should not say to the people "here is the court," and then deny them access to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would inquire of the gentleman whether it is not better that there should be some temporary inconvenience if it shall result in the proper reduction of the jurisdiction of the Federal tribunals? Will not that reduction result in general benefit to the country? Is there not a tendency in the Federal courts to keep in suspense these cases greatly to the wrong and injury of the parties? Is not that one of the reasons why the Federal courts are overwhelmed with business?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I yielded to the gentleman to ask one question, and I have waited until he has asked five. I do not know which one I should answer.

I do not know myself any evils growing out of this matter. I think that the Federal courts and the State courts can well subsist together. They are parts and parcels of one grand piece of machinery; and I think we should make each work in its proper sphere and up to its proper duty. I do not know that this is any temporary necessity. I do not believe that we shall ever be able to reduce the jurisdiction of the courts to the extent which the gentleman from Indiana wishes.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman refer to the existing law which takes Georgia out of the provisions of section 631 relating to all final decrees of a district court in causes of equity, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction, except prize cases, &c., and the other provision which authorizes appeals to be taken from the circuit court? I have looked, but I have not been able to find in this short time the provision to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I have sent for Brightly's Digest, which contains the law organizing the courts in Georgia.

Mr. KASSON. That was prior, was it not, to the law establishing circuit courts?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. No; but say "yes."

Mr. KASSON. What I said was that the establishment of circuit courts created a new system, a new jurisdiction, which this bill abolishes in respect to these courts.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman is mistaken. There have been since the establishment of the circuit courts causes in the Supreme Court from the district court of Georgia, and there are now such causes pending there under the special law.

Mr. KASSON. But do they not come through the circuit court?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I do not think they do. But let me make this suggestion: if the gentleman thinks this section of the bill wrong I hope he will not seek to sacrifice the whole bill on that account, but will move to strike out the section, and I will agree to the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I cannot move to amend a motion to suspend the rules. Besides, I dislike to take the responsibility of anything of that sort without the gentleman's consent——

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I consent.

Mr. KASSON. For fear that it may derange some other provision of the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It will not affect anything else at all. I not only consent, but I beg the gentleman to propose such an amendment, if it will remove his opposition.

Mr. KASSON. It would remove the opposition to that section; but there are one or two other amendments which ought to be made to make the bill harmonious. I will tell the gentleman frankly that in my opinion bills passed in haste, especially when they touch the practice in the courts, are apt to be repented of at leisure. I should have no objection to the general provisions of this bill, for I think Georgia has two districts now——

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. And this is in the same direction, as I understand. That being so, I have no objection to the passage of a bill which will accomplish the gentleman's purpose; but this bill contains these extra and, as I think, unusual provisions, which, it seems to me, ought to be revised. If it would not hurt matters to let the bill lie over until the House can examine it, I think there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. Could we not go on with this matter under a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of bringing up the bill for consideration, so that all objections could come in and be discussed?

Mr. PAGE. Is that in order under this call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only answer that no motions to suspend the rules are in order under this call except motions which gentlemen are instructed by their committees to make.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia to state to the House——

Mr. PAGE. How much more debate can there be on this question?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia to state how many courts of this kind there are now in Georgia, and how many days each of these courts is engaged in the transaction of the public business. In the State of Illinois we have two courts, one in the northern and the other in the southern district; and that is a very large State.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I yielded to the gentleman for a question, not for an argument. I answer the gentleman's first inquiry by saying that we have courts at three places. As to his inquiry, how many days it takes to finish the business, I do not know. The judge is sometimes sick and sometimes well; sometimes he holds a long court and sometimes a short one. I have never calculated the days. I do not think there are any statistics kept as to how long the court sits. I only know that we are in this situation: the business of the country is clogged; parties who have litigation in court cannot carry it on; farms are laid waste on account of men having to attend by hundreds as witnesses. I have seen hundreds of men waiting in my city for a month at a time to be sworn as witnesses in cases, because the court could not run for want of proper machinery.

I regret very much to have had this difference about a matter of fact in the law, and that I cannot at this moment adjust it with the gentleman from Iowa in some way. I wish he would move an amendment, if he considers it necessary; but I state to him that this is the language of the law as it now exists.

Mr. KASSON. I think perhaps the gentleman has not yet fully understood me. The point is in the ninth section.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. If it be wrong, it can be amended in the Senate; but do not let me lose my day and my chance.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to the gentleman what he himself will see, that in the ninth section he abolishes the original jurisdiction of the circuit court and leaves only the jurisdiction as to appeals and writs of error.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Oh, no; I abolish nothing.

Mr. KASSON. Then in the tenth section he abolishes this jurisdiction as to appeals and writs of error; so that the two sections taken together abolish the circuit court there.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; for there is a provision as to what circuit the jurisdiction shall belong to. The bill leaves all the circuit court jurisdiction under the general law of the United States.

Mr. KASSON. I am very desirous to be accurate; and I ask the gentleman to follow me while I read the ninth section:

That the said district court for the northern district of Georgia, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction and powers of a district court of the United States, shall within the limits of said district have jurisdiction of all causes except appeals and writs of error, which now are or hereafter may be cognizable in a circuit court of the United States.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. KASSON. If you will notice, they have jurisdiction of all suits now or hereafter cognizable by the district court. If you look at section 10 you will see that appeals and writs in the nature of appeals shall lie and be sued from the said district court at Atlanta to the Supreme Court of the United States. If you will turn to the sections of the Revised Statutes regulating the circuit courts, you will find that appeals by general law lie from district courts to circuit courts. I have tried to make that point plain, and I hope I have done it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I will make it as plain as that two and two make four. It grows out of this: when the district court of Georgia was organized it was declared in the statute organizing it that it should have all the powers of a circuit court. And the circuit court and the district court of my State have always had concurrent powers, and therefore I have copied the statute here to keep up those concurrent powers. But they do not take out of existence the powers under other sections of the statutes which belong to the circuit courts of the United States. All this, Mr. Speaker, was considered in the Committee on the Judiciary, and agreed to be right without any dissent on those propositions whatever.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate fixed by the rule has expired and the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to take from the House Calendar and pass the bill (H. R. No. 124) to establish district United States courts, with distinct officers, in the northern and southern judicial districts of the State of Georgia, and define their jurisdiction and powers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 12.

Mr. HOLMAN. On this bill I think we should have a quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, and Mr. HOLMAN.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 143, noes 10.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LANCASTER NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. CRAPO. I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to move that the rules be suspended and the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2944) authorizing the National Bank of Lancaster, Massachusetts, to change its location and name, and the bill passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were ayes 15, noes not counted.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Lancaster National Bank of Lancaster, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, is hereby authorized to change its location to the town of Clinton, in the county of Worchester, in said Commonwealth, whenever the stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock of said bank, at a meeting for that purpose, determine to make such change; and the president and cashier shall execute a certificate, under the corporate seal of the bank, specifying such determination, and shall cause the same to be recorded in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and thereupon such change of location shall be effected, and the operations of discount and deposit of said bank shall be carried on in the said town of Clinton.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as in manner to release the said bank from any liabilities, or affect any action or proceeding in law in which said bank may be a party or interested; and when such change shall have been determined upon as aforesaid, notice thereof and of such change shall be published in two weekly papers in said county of Worcester not less than four weeks.

SEC. 3. That whenever the location of said bank shall have been changed from said town of Lancaster to said town of Clinton, in accordance with the first section of this act, its name shall be changed to the Lancaster National Bank of Clinton, Massachusetts, if the board of directors of said bank shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, and cause a copy of such resolution, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency.

SEC. 4. That all the debts, demands, liabilities, rights, privileges, and powers of the Lancaster National Bank of Lancaster shall devolve upon the Lancaster National Bank of Clinton whenever such change of name is effected.

The SPEAKER. The motion is that the rules be suspended and the House Calendar discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it be now passed.

The rules were suspended, two-thirds voting in favor thereof, and the bill was passed.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to move that the rules be suspended and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1049) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck, and that the same be passed with the amendments recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill as it is proposed to be passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish additional life-saving stations and houses of refuge upon the sea and lake coasts of the United States as follows, namely:

On the Atlantic coast: A life-saving station at or near Damariscove Island, Maine; one at or near Hunniwell's Beach, Maine; one at or near the entrance to Portland Harbor, Maine; one at or near the entrance to Portsmouth Harbor, New Hampshire; one on Cape Ann, Massachusetts; one between Cohasset and Scituate Harbors, Massachusetts; one at or near Wood End, and one in the vicinity of Peaked Hill Bars, Cape Cod, Massachusetts; two in the neighborhood of Nantucket and adjacent islands, Massachusetts; one on Brigantine Beach, and one on Seven-Mile Beach, New Jersey; one at or near Lewes, Delaware; five on the coast between Cape Henlopen and Cape Charles, at such points between existing stations as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend; one between stations numbered 17 and 18, and one between stations numbered 21 and 22, one about three miles southwest of Hatteras Inlet, on the coast of North Carolina; six houses of refuge on the eastern coast of Florida, at such points as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend; a life-saving station at or near Quintana, Texas.

On the coast of Lake Superior: A life-saving station at or near Grand Marais, Michigan.

On the coast of Lake Michigan: A life-saving station at or near Frankfort, Michigan; one at or near Pent Water, Michigan; one at or near the mouth of White River, Michigan; one at or near Holland, Michigan; one at or near South Haven, Michigan; one at or near Michigan City, Indiana; one at or near Sturgeon Bay Canal, Wisconsin.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to discontinue any life-saving or life-boat station or house of refuge whenever in his judgment the interests of commerce and humanity no longer require its existence.

SEC. 3. That the General Superintendent may transfer the apparatus, appliances, equipments, and supplies of any discontinued station or house of refuge to such other stations or houses of refuge as may need them, and may also transfer any portion of the apparatus, appliances, equipments, and supplies of one station or house of refuge to another whenever in his judgment the interests of the service may require it.

SEC. 4. That hereafter all district superintendents of life-saving stations shall be disbursing officers and paymasters for their respective districts, and shall give such bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury may require, and shall have the powers and perform the duties of inspectors of customs; and the compensation of the superintendents in the districts herein named shall be as follows:

For the first district, embracing the coasts of Maine and New Hampshire, $1,800 per annum.

For the second district, embracing the coast of Massachusetts, $2,000 per annum.

For the third district, embracing the coasts of Rhode Island and Long Island, $2,500 per annum.

For the fourth district, embracing the coast of New Jersey, $2,500 per annum.

For the fifth district, embracing the coast between Delaware and Chesapeake Bays, $2,000 per annum.

For the sixth district, embracing the coast between Chesapeake Bay and Cape Fear River, $2,500 per annum.

For the seventh district, embracing the eastern coast of Florida, $1,000 per annum.

For the eighth district, embracing the coast of the United States bordering on the Gulf of Mexico, $1,800 per annum.

For the ninth district, embracing the coasts of Lakes Ontario and Erie, $2,500 per annum.

For the tenth district, embracing the coasts of Lakes Huron and Superior, $2,500 per annum,

For the eleventh district, embracing the coast of Lake Michigan, $2,500 per annum.

For the twelfth district embracing the coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington Territory, $1,800 per annum.

SEC. 5 That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to fix the annual compensation of the several keepers of stations and houses of refuge at such rate as he may deem just and proper: Provided, That the compensation of any keeper shall not exceed $800 per annum.

SEC. 6. That crews may be employed at any of the life-saving or life-boat stations on the Pacific coast during such portion of the year as the General Superintendent may deem necessary.

SEC. 7. That the life-saving medals of the first and second class authorized by the provisions of the seventh section of the act of July 20, 1874, shall be hereafter designated as the gold and silver life-saving medal, respectively, and any person who has received, or may hereafter receive, either of said medals under the provisions of said section; or of the twelfth section of the act of June 18, 1878, and who shall again perform an act which would entitle him to a medal of the same class under said provisions, shall receive, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to award, in lieu of a second medal, a bar, suitably inscribed, of the same metal as the medal to which said person would be entitled, to be attached to a ribbon of such description as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, which may be fastened to the medal already bestowed upon said person; and for every such additional act an additional bar may be added; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, whenever any person becomes entitled to a bar representing a gold medal, to award him, in addition to said bar, such token as it is customary to award in acknowledgment of the services of masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing American citizens from shipwreck.

SEC. 8. That the appointment of keepers and crews of life-saving stations shall be made solely with reference to their fitness, and without reference to their political or party affiliations.

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand a second.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the second will be considered as ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have an impression that a bill of this magnitude and importance ought to be considered more fully than it can possibly be under a motion like this, to suspend the rules and pass it, practically without consideration.

This is certainly a most interesting branch of the public service, and one that merits our careful consideration; but it will be remembered that during the last Congress we passed a bill largely increasing the Life-Saving Service, and providing what was then considered a sufficient number of life-saving stations. This bill adds twenty-seven to the number of life-saving stations, and six to the number of houses of refuge, and makes other material changes in the existing law upon that subject.

The twelve superintendents, or rather the eleven superintendents and one special superintendent, as the law now exists, are provided at an expense to the Government of $12,500. If this bill passes the expense of these superintendents will be increased to $25,400, making an increase in expenditures for that particular branch of the service of $12,900.

There are at present one hundred and eighty-nine keepers of stations, under the law as it exists to-day. Their compensation is $400 a year each, which makes a total of $75,000 annual compensation paid to this class of officers. This law authorizes the doubling of their compensation, in the discretion of the Superintendent, which, without increasing the number of keepers, will make a total expense of $150,000, being an increase of $75,000 for this item. There are nine hundred and fifty-nine men now employed in the Life-Saving Service, at a pay of $40 a month. They may be paid for a period of eight months in the year, which would be an expenditure of $306,880. Upon the same basis, without considering the increased number of men to supply the thirty-three additional life-saving stations and houses of refuge, if paid at the same rate for the year, as they may be, there will be an additional increase in this item of about $102,293, and if all these items are added it will show a total increase under this proposed law amounting to $190,190. This will be required without reference to the twenty-seven additional life-saving stations provided in the bill and the six houses of refuge. This latter item would undoubtedly augment the expense some $20,000 or $30,000 more, although I have not examined it particularly; but it would be that certainly, and possibly more than that.

Now, there is this remark which I have to make in relation to this matter: whenever you create a bureau, small in the beginning, the tendency is to increase very rapidly in its proportions. Local and other influences are brought to bear to enlarge it, or to secure places under the Government, and a great pressure is brought to bear upon public officers in that way for places, which may mislead them into the supposition that the public service demands increase, which are more in fact demanded for the benefit of individuals to be employed in them under the Government. So I feel in that respect to all the bureaus. While they should have every legitimate increase that will tend to increase their usefulness to the public, I do object to increasing any of them for private benefit. Every advantage that can accrue to the public should be allowed, but only with reference to the public service, and bills increasing the public service at such a rapid rate as this ought, it seems to me, to be considered by the House itself.

There are some features of the bill, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the attention of the House ought to be called to. Under existing law, I desire to call your attention to the facts with reference to the location of the different life-saving stations along our coasts. There are 6 of these in Maine, 1 in New Hampshire, 15 in Massachusetts, 5 in Rhode Island, 37 in New York, 40 in New Jersey, 3 in Delaware, 3 in Maryland, 10 in Virginia, 19 in North Carolina, 5 houses of refuge in Florida, 5 stations in Texas, 1 in Pennsylvania, 3 in Ohio, 1 in Kentucky, 21 in Michigan, 2 in Illinois, 5 in Wisconsin, 3 in Washington Territory, 1 in Oregon, and 3 in California.

While it is undoubtedly true that the commerce of the northeastern Atlantic coast is much larger than it is upon the south Atlantic, including the Gulf coast and the whole Pacific coast, it will be seen that there are no life-saving stations south of North Carolina on the south Atlantic coast, and only five houses of refuge on the east coast of Florida, and but five life-saving stations on the Gulf of Mexico, all of these being on the coast of Texas, leaving out altogether the entire coast of Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and the Gulf coast of Florida. It will be seen that there are on the Pacific coast, along the line embraced by the Washington Territory, Oregon, and California, but seven life-saving stations. It may be, sir,—

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question? I wish to know if it is not entirely competent for the Department to increase the life-saving stations by additional appropriations?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; I do not understand it so. It needs such a bill as this to increase the number of stations. I know of no law which permits the increase of stations at the discretion of the Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think if the gentleman from Texas had examined the reports he would have found that many have been constructed from year to year.

Mr. HUBBELL. But it is authorized by law.

Mr. REAGAN. I say that the last Congress had increased the number of life-saving stations, and we went over the whole number carefully and framed a bill providing for the number of stations we believed to be necessary, so that the statement cannot be made that these stations are established without a pre-existing law, by an appropriation bill. Then there is another feature of the bill which seems to me, while of course I may not be sufficiently familiar with it, but there is another feature which I regard as hardly equitable. The superintendent, by the proposed law, on the coast of Maine, is allowed $1,800 a year. That is a coast where there is a great deal of commerce and is understood to be a dangerous coast.

Come down a little further, and you find they receive $2,000; come a little further down, along the coasts of New York and New Jersey, and you find them receiving $2,500 a year. Under this bill, for the district embracing the eastern coast of Florida, where there are five houses of refuge, you give the superintendent $1,000 per annum. Then comes the district embracing the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, where the superintendent gets $1,800. In the district embracing the entire Pacific coast the superintendent gets $1,800.

There are fewer stations in those districts, and estimating by the number of stations, the discrimination in rates of compensation may be right. But if you estimate by the difficulty of superintending this service, the difficulty and danger and the amount of trouble required, then I apprehend the coast of California and the coast of the Gulf will require as much exposure and as much labor as any others. The superintendent of the coast of Maine, where there is a great deal of shipping, a great deal of danger to navigation, it seems to me deserves as much compensation as the superintendent on the coast of Massachusetts or on the coast south of that.

I make these observations simply for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to these features of the bill and to say that it seems to me it ought to have fuller consideration than it can have here under a motion to suspend the rules. It may be that some addition may be required to the service, but I doubt very much the expediency and propriety of making an addition that shall add to the cost of this service, now amounting to $394,000, an amount by this single bill considerably over $200,000, perhaps $220,000 or $230,000. It seems to me the increase is large and probably unnecessary; and I desire to call the attention of the House to it and at the same time to express the belief there ought to be time and opportunity to consider the provisions of the bill and ascertain exactly what we are doing before it becomes a law.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. REAGAN. I reserve that time.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am somewhat surprised at the opposition to this bill manifested by the gentleman from Texas, and I think the reasons he has given for his opposition have no force whatever when they are carefully analyzed. This bill creates no new districts. It leaves the number just where they are now. It adjusts the salaries for superintendents in proportion to the amount of labor and responsibility called for in the different districts. It also adjusts the salaries and compensation of the keepers and the surfmen; and it provides for the establishment of twenty-five or twenty-six new stations to be established when the Committee on Appropriations see proper to give money enough to establish them. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to abolish such stations as in his judgment have outlived their day of usefulness, and to transfer their surf-boats and appurtenances to new stations, without materially adding to the cost of the service.

Now a word as to the difference of compensation for superintendents of which the gentleman from Texas complains. Surely he will not consider it a misfortune that they do not have more disasters on the southern coast, and that the service of these rugged surfmen are not so often in demand; for as a matter of fact the larger proportion of disasters occur in northern latitudes, on the northern coasts. This is clearly shown by the statistics in the report of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service from which I quote. The following extracts from the report give in detail the number of stations and the salaries attached to the different districts; also the number of disasters and the number of lives and amount of property saved:

Districts.	Number of stations.	Amount.
District No. 1 (coast of Maine and New Hampshire)	7	$1,800
District No. 2 (coast of Massachusetts)	15	2,000
District No. 3 (coast of Rhode Island and Long Island)	37	2,500
District No. 4 (coast of New Jersey)	40	2,500
District No. 5 (coast from Cape Henlopen to Cape Charles)	11	2,000
District No. 6 (coast from Cape Henry to Cape Hatteras)	23	2,500
District No. 7 (eastern coast of Florida)	5	1,000
District No. 8 (Gulf coast)	5	1,800
District No. 9 (Lakes Erie and Ontario)	9	2,500
District No. 10 (Lakes Huron and Superior)	9	2,500
District No. 11 (Lake Michigan)	16	2,500
District No. 12 (Pacific coast)	6	1,800
Total	183

Of these stations, it will be seen 143 were on the Atlantic, 34 on the lakes, and 6 on the Pacific.

There were, according to the reports of the district officers, 250 disasters to vessels within the scope of the operations of the service during the year. On board these vessels there were 1,878 persons, of whom 1,854 were saved and 24 lost. Succor was afforded at the stations to 407 shipwrecked persons, to whom 1,060 days' relief in the aggregate was furnished. The estimated value of the vessels involved in these disasters was $2,744,247, and that of their cargoes $1,310,505, making the total value of the property imperiled $4,054,752. Of this amount $2,828,680 was saved and $1,226,072 lost. The number of disasters involving the total loss of vessels was 66.

Thus it will be seen that in the first district, that of Maine, there are seven stations and the salary is $1,800. In the second district, embracing the coast of Massachusetts, with fifteen stations, the salary is $2,000. In the fourth district, that of New Jersey, in which there are forty stations, the salary is $2,500. In the district embracing the Gulf coast there are five stations and the salary is $1,800. In the districts embracing the lake coasts the salaries are $2,500, and the comparative service is very great. It is quite evident that the salaries are adjusted in proportion to the responsibility and labor and to the greater necessity for experience and competency in the larger districts. The superintendents in these larger districts are required to give a bond of $50,000, as they are Government officers and sworn in as revenue inspectors. In the smaller districts they give a bond of only $10,000. There is between the two classes of districts a very great difference in labor, in responsibility, and in the necessity for experience, and there should be a difference in compensation.

I will now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who introduced this bill, and who has made this service a study for the last ten years, and who is largely entitled to the credit for its very great success. He has always favored adequate appropriations, and by his zeal in this direction has greatly strengthened the service. It is of great importance to commerce and is humanitarian in its tendencies and in its results, and there has been no expenditure of money by this Government that resulted more largely to its advantage than the pitiful sum that has been expended in this way.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will best express my thanks to my honored friend from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] who reports back my bill, by economizing my time, so as to insure the passage of our favorite measure.

I say before this House and the country, which approves this bill, that the standard of civilization in any land is its regard for the sanctity of human life. This bill answers this requisition of our time and country. It is only because this benignant service would otherwise fail that we ask that proper remuneration be paid to those engaged in it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] when he complains that his State or the Gulf coast is not properly cared for does not give proper heed to the maritime statistics of commerce and its disasters.

It is easy to answer the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] both as to the utilities and the increase of pay of this service. It is a service which commends itself for its economy and humanity. The National Board of Trade on the 24th of January, 1882, at its meeting in Boston, gave its unqualified approval of this measure. The Legislatures of States have sent us, even from the interior—from Kentucky—their approbation of this bill. The sense of the public, represented in the press, pulpit, and marts of commerce, have joined in urgent demands for the sustentation and advancement of this service. The report of the Commerce Committee brings to us their unanimous consent. What is left to me except to answer the objections of my friend from Texas? This can be best done by showing the benefactions of the system. His own State is one of the chief beneficiaries.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that there are 189 stations and houses of refuge in the United States. By States they are as follows: Maine 6, New Hampshire 1, Massachusetts 15, Rhode Island 5, New York 37, New Jersey 40, Delaware 3, Maryland 3, Virginia 10, North Carolina 19, Florida (houses of refuge) 5, Texas 5, Pennsylvania 1, Ohio 3, Kentucky 1, Michigan 21, Illinois 2, Wisconsin 5, Washington Territory 3, Oregon 1, California 3. The portion of the sea and lake coasts of the United States upon which these stations are located is divided into districts as follows:

District No. 1 (coast of Maine and New Hampshire)	7
District No. 2 (coast of Massachusetts)	15
District No. 3 (coast of Rhode Island and Long Island)	37
District No. 4 (coast of New Jersey)	40
District No. 5 (coast from Cape Henlopen to Cape Charles)	11
District No. 6 (coast from Cape Henry to Cape Hatteras)	24
District No. 7 (eastern coast of Florida)	5
District No. 8 (Gulf coast)	5
District No. 9 (Lake Erie and Ontario)	10
District No. 10 (Lakes Huron and Superior)	12
District No. 11 (Lake Michigan)	16
District No. 12 (Pacific coast)	7
Total	189

The last report shows but 183 stations in all. Since then 6 other stations have been built. The total therefore is: Atlantic, 144; lakes, 37; Pacific, 7; Ohio River, 1; making, in all, 189.

The district which concerns the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is especially favored. He does not consider, perhaps, that the eighth district embodies the Gulf coast. It is really the coast of Texas. There are no stations on any other portion of the Gulf. Marine statistics show the need of none elsewhere. Shipwrecks on the Gulf coast are principally caused by the "northers." On other portions of the Gulf coast than Texas the off-shore winds drive vessels seaward rather than landward. No wrecks ensue. It is against disasters caused by the stranding of vessels that the Life-Saving Service is designed chiefly to afford aid and protection. A considerable portion of the coast line of Texas runs almost due north and south and vessels along this portion are liable to be driven ashore in "northers." Especially is this so if the wind be a little east of north.

Mr. REAGAN. If my friend will allow me——

Mr. COX, of New York. Not now, if you please.

Mr. REAGAN. I only wish to say that we do not ask for more stations.

Mr. COX, of New York. I know we have provided amply for Texas. Why, then, should the gentleman complain? The eighth district, as embracing the Gulf coast, is practically confined to the coast of his State.

It will be noticed also that there are no stations on the coasts of South Carolina and Georgia. This is because there are few wrecks by stranding between Cape Lookout and the Florida line. When they do occur the vessels are usually cast so well upon the shore that those on board are able to land themselves with little difficulty. Besides, as the coast line from Cape Lookout trends considerably to the westward, passing vessels, excepting those bound directly to ports on that portion of the coast, give the land a wide berth. Their direct course lies far away from the shore.

But my friend from Texas is specially concerned as to the raising or equalization of salaries. I think he has not understood the duties, labors, responsibilities, and bonds of the superintendents. If he had he would have paused before criticising the bill in this regard. My bill aims to adjust the salaries of district superintendents to the degree of labor and responsibility imposed upon each. These depend chiefly upon the number of stations in the several districts, the extent and nature of the coast line embraced, and the amount of bonds required to secure the Government against loss from the public funds intrusted to them. The adjustment in this bill is as fair as can be made. For example, the first district (Maine and New Hampshire) has seven stations, (the bill proposes four more,) and the superintendent is required to give a $10,000 bond; the eighth district (Texas) has six stations, and the superintendent is required to give a $10,000 bond. The salary proposed by the bill for the superintendents of each of these districts is $1,800. The third district, embracing the coasts of Rhode Island and Long Island, has thirty-seven stations, and the bond required is in the sum of $50,000; the fourth district, coast of New Jersey, has forty stations, the bond required being also $50,000. The salary proposed for the superintendent for each of these districts is $2,500. As to the salary of the Florida superintendent the bill fixes it at $1,000. It is that now. He has not so much to do. He writes that he is content with his pay. The complaint of the gentleman, therefore, is not well-founded as to Florida.

It has been suggested that the salary of the superintendent of the eighth district (Gulf coast) should be larger than that of the superintendent of the first district, (Maine and New Hampshire.) The reason given is that the coast is more extended. It is true the direct coast line of Texas is somewhat longer than that of Maine and New Hampshire; but taking in the bays of the latter, the distance is the same. But, sir, if the coast line be snugly followed, including all the indentations and headlands, it is considerably greater.

The active season, or the season during which the stations are in operation, is much more severe in the first district. The difficulties, hardships, and dangers of visiting them are also proportionably greater than in the eighth district. It may be also said that there is more shipping upon the former coast than upon the latter, and more disasters. It would appear that if there is any injustice it is against the first district.

In regard to the keepers. The service will be broken up if we do not raise the pay of these keepers. They have now only $400 a year. They require more. Many have resigned, and many are holding on in hope that we may raise their pay adequately. They are not ordinary men. They are not connected with politics. They risk their lives, sir, in wind, hail, storm, and surf to save the lives of their fellows. These superintendents take a part of the same risk.

You pay the inspectors of your steamboat service $3,000 a year each. You aid them by local officers with large salaries, and yet, sir, they do not do one-half the work that these men do, and they have scarcely any of their peril.

All these men ask is that they shall have a living compensation. When they lose their lives their families are not cared for. I hope the bill in regard to pensioning them will hereafter be brought before the House and passed.

May I show, Mr. Speaker, by an illustration, the good deeds of this service? May I take for this purpose the Jersey coast? It is the coast with which I am most familiar. May I be pardoned for saying that it is my grandfather's old Congressional district, which, with some partiality, I have studied reverently? It is best illustrated by this statement:

Coast of New Jersey, (fourth district.)—Date of present system, November, 1881.

NOTE.—Average loss of life per year, 2.9.

Only twenty-nine lives have been lost on this part of the coast in the last eleven years. What the loss of life was on the coast of New Jersey previous to the establishment of the life-saving service thereon it is impossible to say. No statistics were kept. It is known that it was appalling. Barnegat, Squam, and other names of localities on that coast are familiar to the country. They were synonyms of horror.

In the House of Representatives in 1854, Mr. Skelton, of New Jersey, and Mr. Chandler, of Pennsylvania, both declared that the loss of life by shipwreck on the New Jersey and Long Island coasts was more than one thousand annually. Although there was vigorous opposition to the bill which they were advocating, (a bill "for the better preservation of life and property from vessels shipwrecked on the coast of the United States,") the assertion was not questioned. The statement seems hardly credible at this day; but its unchallenged repetition must certainly be admitted to prove that the destruction was enormous.

Let the House, Mr. Speaker, welcome the grand conclusion which my friend from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] reports from his committee. It is this:

That, despite disheartening neglect and indifference to the value of their service, these men have struggled on to unexpected successes and results flattering to this country is the most potent argument for an immediate and just recognition of their worth; and that while the loss of life from marine disaster has steadily increased during recent years the world over, it has markedly decreased upon the shores of the United States, until the relative difference shows a diminution in loss of life of 75 per cent., although shipwrecks have not lessened in frequency. This gratifying result is to be attributed directly to the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service of this country.

But, Mr. Speaker, the annals of this service are beyond ordinary eulogy. Figures of speech fail. Figures of another kind may tell the story of our humanity to those who go down to the sea in ships. From the forthcoming report of the able and vigilant Superintendent, Mr. Kimball, I extract these facts, which show in tabular form the life-saving operations since the introduction of the present system in 1871, on my little appropriation of $10,000:

Summary of disasters which have occurred within the scope of life-saving operations, from November 1, 1871, (date of introduction of present system,) to close of fiscal year ending June 30, 1881:

Total number of disasters	1,347
Total value of vessels	$16,083,320
Total value of cargoes	$8,429,167
Total value of property saved	$14,958,895
Total value of property lost	$9,553,592
Total number of persons on vessels	12,250
Total number of persons saved	*11,864
Total number of lives lost	†395
Total number of persons succored	2,610
Total number of days' succor afforded	7,050

*In addition, sixteen persons were saved this year who were not on board vessels.

†One hundred and eighty-three of these were lost at the disasters of the steamers Huron and Metropolis—in the case of the former when the stations were not open, and in the latter when service was impeded by distance; and fourteen others in the same year, owing to similar causes.

It should be observed that the operations of the service during this period have been limited as follows: Season of 1871–'72, to the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey; seasons of 1872–'74, to coasts of Cape Cod, Long Island, and New Jersey; seasons of 1874–'75, to the coasts of New England, Long Island, New Jersey, and coast from Cape Henry to Cape Hatteras; seasons of 1875–'76, coasts of New England, Long Island, New Jersey, coast from Cape Henlopen to Cape Charles, and coast from Cape Henry to Cape Hatteras; seasons of 1876–'77, and since, all the foregoing, with the addition of the eastern coast of Florida and portions of the lake coasts, and during the past year the coast of Texas.

These disasters I have before explained in elaborate speeches on this topic in this House. But for them there would have been no excitement, or the incentive to legislate for the general system, which I had the honor to propose to the general acceptance of the House in 1878.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then, asking leave to add some tables to my remarks, may I say that this bill has three sanctions:

First. It is sanctioned by the Constitution, for is it not embraced in the clause for the regulation of commerce?

Second. It is sanctioned by the best code known to mankind, for it does not discriminate as to its benefits. Language would fail me were I to undertake to estimate the value and sacredness of human life. To the humblest it is precious beyond expression. It is as serious as death itself. It is the means to the noble end of our creation. In its loom is ever being woven the pattern which we wear in the mysterious hereafter. All that makes up the pleasures and sweetness of friendship, trust, and affection on earth is bound up in the vital heart-throb. It is the divine gift of our Maker; and for its continuance every instrumentality known to the best civilization of mankind should be called into requisition.

This service is, in a high sense, divinely beautiful. Although it is limited to this country of ours, yet its benefaction knows no boundary, and its example is an incentive to the benevolent of all lands. It rescues the people of all nationalities. No wonder that the nations are following our example.

Denmark is seeking to introduce our system amidst her belts, coasts, and isles. No wonder that Holland—the child of the sea—is asking for our instructions, signals, and paraphernalia for life-saving. If I may be allowed to say it, the Turkish and Russian maritime people are endeavoring to adapt our system to the increasing commerce of the Black Sea, at the mouth of the historic Bosphorus. Two thousand years ago—after Jason had navigated to Colchis for the golden fleece—temples were built to the gods of Greece at the perilous mouth of these classic waters. At their altars the votive offerings of sailors were laid, because of the tempestuous character of that inland sea. I have recently seen the ruins of these temples that were dedicated to Jupiter, Neptune, and other heathen gods, to whom invocations were made to save the adventurous navigator from disaster and death.

Whereas, Mr. Speaker—these ancient mariners appealed to Jupiter and Neptune—we appeal to practical mechanics. We invoke the genius of chemistry, with its colored signals, its line, car, buoy, powder and howitzers. We add to electricity and steam the dauntless heroism of the surfman. Odessa and Constantinople, by voluntary effort, are copying our example in thus rescuing the imperiled.

Yet, sir, in conclusion, there is a higher sanction than the Constitution or humanity. It is that of Him who stilled the waves of Galilee to save imperiled human life. It is said that in the beauty of the lilies Christ was borne across the sea, and in the glory of his bosom he transfigured you and me. He died to make men holy, and for the salvation of human souls in desperate shipwrecks through sins. We may not imitate his example, here, sir, except afar off, but, by our voice and vote, we may do something by this measure to throw around our legislation a divine aureole and save human life, so precious to Him who gave His life to save the lives of others. [Applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the humane sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from New York certainly command my approbation; and I should be very sorry if the position I have taken on this bill should be imputed to any want of humanity on my part.

Mr. COX, of New York. I did not impute that at all.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say, however, that I did not mean to be understood as saying that any injustice is done by this bill to the coast of Texas, except in discriminating as to the pay against the supervisors there; for I have not heard complaint that there was not authority for the establishment of a sufficient number of stations on that coast.

But, Mr. Speaker, while the beauties of rhetoric and eloquent appeals to motives of humanity are very pleasing, they are a poor relief to a people unnecessarily oppressed with the burdens of taxation. They do not remove one drop of sweat from the brow of the laborer; they do not alleviate one aching pain of the wearied limbs of the men who are to pay this money. If this service is necessary, then I desire it; if it is unnecessary, we ought not to grant it. It was for the purpose of inquiring as to the necessity that I took part in this discussion. I do not wish to occupy further time, and I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill needs some amendments, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN;] but the time is too short to permit me to discuss it as fully as I would like to do. I wish to call attention, however, to section 4, which provides that—

Hereafter all district superintendents of life-saving stations shall be disbursing officers and paymasters for their respective districts, and shall give such bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury may require, and shall have the powers and perform the duties of inspectors of customs.

Now, it so happened that during the last and the preceding Congress I was informed by the Department that there was no earthly need of having the superintendents of life-saving stations perform these duties; and the appropriations proposed upon that basis were stricken out; the law was changed. But now with a view of justifying the increase of these salaries gentlemen have provided in this bill new and additional duties for these officers, and they make this an argument for doubling their salaries.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to say——

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir. The gentleman will understand that I have but three minutes.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does not the gentleman want to understand the bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman ought to understand that I do not yield to him. I have but three minutes.

Mr. COX, of New York. I could explain this matter in one minute, and save the gentleman the need of speaking about it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Speaker, here are superintendents of life-saving stations all along our coasts, nearly all of whom have had their salaries largely increased during several years past. There has been complaint that the superintendents on the lakes were not getting pay enough, that their pay ought to be increased. I have no doubt this is true, but there has not been the same complaint as to the Atlantic and the Gulf coasts. This matter needs some adjustment. Again, in reference to the pay of crews on the lakes, there has been great difficulty in getting men for this service, as the law stood, and the service was embarrassed. Not so on the Atlantic coast.

Now, why should not the committee allow this matter to come before the House in such a way that there may be opportunity to consider the details of this bill? It cannot be said that the importance of the Life-Saving Service is not recognized. There is more done for this service in the United States than in any other country on this earth. In Great Britain these life-saving crews are not provided by the government, but reliance is placed entirely on voluntary service at the time of the emergency. I say, then, that under existing laws we are giving more attention to the life-saving service than is given by any other nation.

Mr. CALKINS. We have a larger sea-coast.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let me say to the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will understand that his time is out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of New York. So is that of the gentleman from Georgia. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. If I may be allowed to add a single word, I will say that the salaries provided in this bill have been adjusted in accordance with the views of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, Mr. Kimball, who every year visits every station on the coast, and consequently knows a great deal more about the needs of this service than can any gentleman here. He is a conscientious officer and under his supervision this service has been brought to its present state of efficiency. If this bill be passed it will put the service on a good footing; and its results will prove the wisdom of the House in adopting the measure. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill and to pass the same as read; there were—ayes 133, noes 21.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKS. I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

THE JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of and pass the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Government of Japan the sum of $1,516,364 in bonds now under the control of the Department of State, and known and designated in the accounts and reports of said Department as the Japanese indemnity fund.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the sum of $254,000 to be paid out of the fund now under control of the Department of State known as the Japanese indemnity fund to the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming, or to their legal representatives, for extraordinary, valuable, and specially meritorious and perilous services in the destruction of hostile vessels in the Straits of Shimonoseki on the 16th day of July, 1863, and to the officers and crew of the steamer Ta-Kiang, who were detached from the United States ship Jamestown, or to their legal representatives, for similar services on the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th days of September, 1864; said sum to be distributed to the said officers and crews according to the laws of the United States governing the distribution of prize-money: Provided, That for the purpose of such distribution the officers and crew detached as aforesaid who manned the Ta-Kiang shall be regarded as a part of the forces of the Wyoming on the 16th day of July, 1863, and according to their rank and position on the 8th day of September, 1864: And provided further, That in such distribution no payment shall be made to the assignee of any mariner, but to the mariner himself only, or to his duly authorized attorney, or, in case of his decease, to his legal representatives or their duly authorized attorney.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask, by unanimous consent, the second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, took the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether the claims of American citizens are provided for?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. As far as referred to our committee. This matter has been pending in Congress some twelve years, and if we wait for new claims to be presented the money will never go back to Japan.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it would take forty-five minutes to give an outline of the history and merits of this question. I will do the best I can in the fifteen minutes which the rule under suspension allows.

I will say in the beginning, this bill does not take one dollar out of the United States Treasury, because not one dollar of this Japanese fund ever went into the Treasury. In 1854 the United States received from Japan $785,000 in gold. Mr. Seward, then Secretary of State, declared his belief that we had given no "substantial equivalent for the money," and under his advice the money was invested in United States registered bonds, and has been under the control of the State Department ever since, until it now amounts, with accumulated interest, to $1,770,364.

The pending bill proposes to give the officers and crews actually engaged, about one hundred and seventy in all, the original sum claimed for them, $140,000, with accumulated interest amounting now to $254,000, and return the balance, $1,500,364 to the Government of Japan. We believe, sir, the honor of our nation is involved in this question. Believing this we have trusted to the suspension of the rules and a fifteen minutes' statement in explanation of the measure rather than jeopardize our honor by the possibility of another Congress adjourning with this money still withheld from Japan.

It has been pending in six Congresses, with no final action yet, although the committees of each one have unanimously recommended its return. Last session it passed the Senate by a vote of 46 to 7, but could not be reached in the House, and this session the same identical bill has been thus early unanimously reported by both Committees on Foreign Affairs of the two Houses of Congress. Let it not be our fault if it do not pass into a law within the next thirty days. I repeat, I can scarcely touch the merits of the question. Suffice it to say that previous to 1853 the ports of Japan were closed to foreign nations. In 1854 Commodore Perry, of the United States squadron, opened negotiations with the Tycoon of Japan, and a treaty was made by which the ports of Simoda and Hakodadi were opened to the United States. For two hundred years before Japan had remained a sealed book. Russia followed with a treaty in 1855. In 1857 Mr. Harris, consul-general of the United States, made a new treaty, by which the port of Nagasaki was opened to the United States, the "friendly power," as the United States was always styled in the diplomatic correspondence of Japan. Then came Great Britain with a treaty, by which the ports of Neegata and Hioga were opened. And then came France and the Netherlands. In nine years, from 1854 to 1863, treaties were made with all these powers, opening the Japanese ports to foreign nations.

At that time, sir—and I hardly dare to enter on that branch of the question—the treaty-making powers did not understand the internal political divisions of Japan. These treaties were negotiated with the Tycoon, supposed to be the sovereign ruler of the empire, and such was the supposition for ten years. But the Government of Japan was feudal in its character. First there was the Mikado, the titular ruler of the empire, then the Tycoon, exercising executive power, then petty princes styled daimios, who ruled over thirty-seven provinces, had their retinues, and were really the bone and sinew of the military power of the empire.

Some of these sided with the Mikado against the progressive policy of the Tycoon. Others sided with the Tycoon, and Japan was in commotion; for ten years or more civil war raged. In the excitement incident the United States legation was burnt, the British legation was assailed, and several of the subjects of Great Britain assassinated. For these outrages Great Britain demanded $400,000, and was paid. The French and Netherlanders destroyed several towns of the rebellious daimios. The remarkable thing was that through all these struggles not one of the treaties were valid or binding, not having been signed by the Mikado, the real sovereign of the empire. It turned out that the Tycoon was all the time using his best endeavors to act in good faith with all the treaty-making powers, while they supposed he was practicing duplicity and stirring up strife to evade his treaty obligation. He sealed his honor with his life, for he was finally assassinated. But time passes and I must hasten. The daimio of Nagato and Suo was one of the most powerful and most rebellious against the Tycoon in the empire. The inland sea of Japan and the straits of Shimonoseki formed a continuous water-way from the eastern to the western boundary of the empire. The straits at their narrowest point were only one-fourth of a mile wide, and there this rebellious daimio fortified, and placed his war vessels in the channel.

In June, 1863, the Pembroke, a small American steamer, freighted with merchandise, and bound from Yokohama to Nagasaki, on the western coast of Japan, was nearing the eastern entrance of these straits and sailing under the American flag. As she approached the powerful batteries of this daimio, some of them, cut into the face of the rock sixty feet from the water, opened fire upon her and drove her back. The Pembroke abandoned her voyage and took refuge by the southeastern passage into the open sea, receiving no injury from the attack. The rebel war ship in the channel supported the batteries on shore. Mr. Pruyn, the American minister, under instructions from Washington, ordered the commander of the Wyoming to the scene of the attack to redress the wrong and avenge the insult to the flag. The result is thus described in a former report submitted on behalf of the committee of the Forty-sixth Congress by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX:]

Commander McDougal sailed from Yedo on the 13th of July, 1863, and on the third day entered the inland sea by the southeast channel. When the Wyoming came in sight of the shore batteries a signal-gun was fired by the first one. Rounding the point she discovered the steamer Lancefield of four guns, the brig Lanrick of ten guns, and a bark of four guns anchored opposite the town of Shimonoseki. Six shore batteries fired on the Wyoming as she steamed past them with the Stars and Stripes flying; but, reserving her fire, she steered her course between the steamer on one side and the bark and brig on the other, delivering her fire on both sides into them with great effect, and receiving their broadsides. Three 11-inch shells were sent into the Lancefield, one of which exploded her boiler, and she was run aground. The brig Lanrick was sinking as the Wyoming left, and the bark was badly injured. After being engaged one hour and ten minutes the Wyoming returned through the straits, pouring shot and shell into the batteries as she passed them. The Wyoming lost four men killed and seven wounded, one of whom died soon after.

The Lancefield was a fine iron steamer of about six hundred tons, which the daimio had purchased from the English owners in China for $115,000; and the brig Lanrick, pierced for eighteen guns, was purchased from the same owners for $20,000. The bark was Japanese built. The loss of the Japanese was believed to be large, it having been reported that forty men were killed by the explosion on the Lancefield alone.

The owners of the Pembroke, though not injured, presented a bill of $10,000 against the Japanese Government for loss sustained by the breaking up of her voyage. The Tycoon was held responsible for the acts of the rebel princes. The Government at Washington directed our minister at Japan to present the demand, and the amount was promptly paid. In an official dispatch, dated August 8, 1864, our minister says:

The Japanese Government has arranged to my satisfaction the claims which I have been instructed by the President of the United States to make upon it.

Thus, August 8, 1864, every claim which the United States had against Japan, as stated in the dispatch of Mr. Pruyn, had been paid to the last dollar, yet on the 15th of the same month this Government entered into a joint agreement with Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands to silence the batteries of these rebellious princes, agreeing:

With all consistent speed to open the straits at Shimonoseki, destroying and disarming the batteries of the Prince of Chospin, and otherwise crippling him in all his means of attack, and that the political situation renders it desirable that there should be no considerable delay in the commencement of operations.

An expedition was fitted out in which Great Britain sent something like twenty-five hundred men. Let me, if my time will admit, give the exact figures in this connection. In that expedition, sailing September 1, 1864, Great Britain sent nine war vessels, carrying one hundred and sixty-four guns, with 2,850 men. France sent three war vessels carrying sixty-four guns and 951 men. The Netherlands sent four ships of war carrying fifty-six guns and 951 men. The Jamestown, the only American vessel in Japanese waters, was disabled. Our Government chartered a small vessel, the Ta-Kiang, mentioned in this bill, and manned it with Lieutenant Pearson and 17 men detailed from the Jamestown, with one parrot gun. That was the mighty part our mighty nation took in that mighty encounter, while the other powers were represented by sixteen ships, 4,752 men, and one hundred and eighty-four heavy guns. The United States was represented by one Chinese junk, eighteen men, and one gun. Why, of course, Mr. Speaker, that settled it; the expedition was successful and the daimio overthrown. The result is thus described in an official dispatch from the American minister, October 1, 1863:

A portion of the fleet has returned from the strait of Shimonoseki, bringing the intelligence that on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th days of September last the batteries of Chosin, commanding these straits, were entirely destroyed, the magazines blown up, shot and shell thrown into the sea, and the guns, to the number of nearly seventy, carried away. The prince made an unconditional surrender, and agreed to pay such sum as the ministers of the treaty powers might demand for the expenses of the expedition.

But I see the symptoms that my time has about expired and I hasten on. These rebellious princes were reduced. They were ready to make any terms.

The treaty-making powers declare that all they desired was that the various ports should be opened. The Tycoon replied that owing to the rebellion of his own subjects it was impossible for him to comply, and that he must pay the indemnity. Three million dollars was agreed upon by way of indemnity; and for the prowess displayed by our gallant ship we were accorded the modest sum of $780,000 in gold. Sir, should not the cheek of every American tingle with honest shame when we remember that we not only received the money but have held on to it for eighteen years? I should say that, notwithstanding their humiliating situation, Lieutenant Pierson and his men behaved with marked gallantry in the engagement, and received many of the British wounded into their vessel and tenderly cared for them.

Yet when we received this money every demand had been met by Japan, every obligation had been satisfied, every port possible for the Tycoon to open, and not lose control of his government, had been opened, and all were thereafter opened just as soon as the public safety permitted it. The treaty-making power declared that it was not money they wanted, but the opening of the ports. And here we have held on and on and on to this money year after year! Now, President Arthur has just told us in his message that Japan is not only one of the most progressive of the eastern powers but the most friendly to the United States. And then he has been informed that she has called a convention to establish a full constitutional government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having gone thus far, I must trespass in some way upon somebody's time, or some rule of the House, or assume unanimous consent, until in a moment I can give the legislative history of this measure, showing how utterly impossible it is frequently for Congress to do what it is trying to do and would be glad to accomplish.

In the Fortieth Congress, first session, Secretary Seward called the attention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to the propriety of returning the fund, but too late for action in that session.

In the Forty-first Congress, second session, the House committee made a unanimous report in favor of restoring the fund, but no action was reached.

In the Forty-second Congress, second session, the House committee again reported unanimously. The bill passed the House without a division, and was unanimously reported by the Senate committee, but was not reached for action.

In the Forty-third congress the same action was had by the House committee, but the bill was never reached for action.

In the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, the Senate committee reported unanimously, and the bill passed the Senate, but was not reached in the House.

In the Forty-fifth Congress favorable reports were made unanimously by the committees of both the Senate and House, but both here and there action was crowded out by other business.

In the Forty-sixth Congress the Foreign Affairs Committees of both Houses reported unanimously, and the bill, being the precise bill now under consideration, passed the Senate by a vote of 46 yeas to 6 nays, but failed to be reached in the House.

In the Forty-seventh Congress the Committees on Foreign Affairs of both the House and the Senate have favorably reported the bill, and it has reached the stage in which it now stands before the House at the present time.

One word more by unanimous consent, if necessary. General Grant said of this fund:

We have no right to it. It does not belong to us. So long as we withhold it from Japan, we are in the position of a man who will not do an act of justice to his fellow-man, a humiliating attitude for any government, which every American should grieve over.

President Hayes in two messages recommended its return. In his last, speaking of this and the Chinese indemnity, he said:

Whatever portions of these funds are due the American citizens should be promptly paid and the residue returned to the nations respectively to which they fully and equitably belong.

President Arthur, in his message to Congress, after stating that the intimacy between our Government and Japan, the most advanced of the eastern nations, continues to be cordial, and that he is informed that the Emperor contemplates a full constitutional government, says:

I renew the recommendation which has heretofore been urged by the Executive upon the attention of Congress, that after the reduction of such amount as may be found due to American citizens the balance of the indemnity funds heretofore obtained from China and Japan, and which are now in the hands of the State Department, be returned to the governments of those countries.

Mr. Speaker, not less than twenty-seven of the leading American journals of all parties have from time to time denounced the retaining of this money as a wrong and demanded its immediate return as involving the honor of the nation. Not less than sixty American colleges, by their presidents, faculties, and students, have petitioned Congress for the prompt return of this money to Japan, or its investment for Japanese education, and among them are the honored names of Harvard, Yale, Amherst, and Williams, and a score of others. And now comes the National Board of Trade, sitting in Washington in January, and using this language:

Resolved, That this board favors the return of the balance of the Japanese indemnity fund, after the actual damages sustained by citizens of the United States have been paid.

And finally, General Grant not only declared it wrong originally but has since stated that a personal examination of its merits while in Japan more than confirmed all his previous impressions of its injustice.

Mr. Speaker, every principle of common honesty and every sentiment of national rectitude demands the prompt return of this money to Japan. [Applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know if any gentleman desires to oppose the bill. If not, I desire to make a statement in favor of its passage.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed to the friends of the measure has been entirely exhausted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to say something in its favor if no gentleman rises to oppose it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, and to pass the same.

The question being taken, the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

The announcement of the vote was received with applause.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. NEAL. Oh, no. The House has agreed to take a recess for an evening session.

Mr. HUBBELL. Then I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The motion of Mr. HUBBELL was not agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PAGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor to move that the rules be suspended, and that the second Tuesday of March, after the morning hour, be fixed for the consideration of House bill No. 3540, to regulate and limit and suspend the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States; and its consideration to continue from day to day until disposed of, but not to interfere with the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. KASSON. Let revenue bills also be excepted.

Mr. PAGE. I decline to change the language of the resolution.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 35.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds have not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest to the gentleman that the vote be taken by tellers first.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; a quorum not having voted, I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from California, Mr. PAGE, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. PAGE. This bill was made a special order at one time by unanimous consent, and it is only fair this resolution should be adopted, so as to make it a special order again. I wish to see if the House intends to carry out the provisions of a treaty which all political parties in this country have pledged themselves time and time again to carry out.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 27.

Mr. ELLIS. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

The tellers continued the count, and reported—ayes 118, noes 31.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. NEAL. This evening, by an order of the House, was set apart for the consideration of the District of Columbia code. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to modify his motion, so that the House may take a recess.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are only two or three committees to be called. I ask the gentleman not to make that motion now.

Mr. NEAL. Very well. I withdraw it for the present.

INVESTIGATION OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BOWMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and to move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government be taken from the House Calendar and made the special order for Tuesday, March 7, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to antagonize general appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow us to consider at the same time the other measures upon the same subject now pending before the House, including the constitutional amendment?

Mr. BOWMAN. They can all come up as amendments or substitutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not want to antagonize the resolution of the gentleman; I am in favor of it.

Mr. HOUSE. What is that bill?

Mr. BOWMAN. If I can have unanimous consent for two minutes I can explain the object of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Mr. BOWMAN. The resolution will not show what the bill is. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement, not to exceed two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent for the gentleman to make a statement? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BOWMAN. The bill referred to in the resolution is simply a bill for sending all private claims to the Court of Claims for judicial investigation. I do not think it ought to be disposed of in half an hour, though I presume the House would pass it after a half hour's discussion. All I want is to have it assigned to some particular day, so that we may reach it as soon as possible in order that all of us, on the floor and in committees and in the Departments, may obtain immediate relief, overloaded as we are now with large dockets of cases.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this substantially the "Potter bill" that was before a former Congress?

Mr. BOWMAN. It is not. The Committee on Claims, being desirous of reporting a bill which would pass this House, avoided those parts of the Potter bill which contributed to its defeat; namely, those parts which provided that the Court of Claims should have absolute and final jurisdiction in questions of discretion, as well as in questions where there was a legal measure of damages.

This bill merely provides that all these claims may go to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts in the cases, to be reported to Congress with suggestions. It is believed that this bill is so innocent that it will not be objected to by any one; that it will not meet the objections brought up against the bill in the former Congress. It is a permissive bill. All I ask of the House now is to fix a time for the early consideration of this measure. It will do us no good, whatever good it may do our successors, if we pass it at the end of this Congress.

Mr. ATKINS. In what does it differ from the Potter bill?

Mr. BOWMAN. In this respect: as I remember the Potter bill, the Court of Claims under it was to have in most cases final jurisdiction and power to enter up a judgment. This bill provides merely that the Court of Claims shall find the facts and report them to us, shall judicially ascertain the facts, with cross-examination by the Attorney-General, and all those safeguards which only a court of law can give.

Mr. MILLS. Allow me a question. Is not your resolution simply a resolution to set apart a day to consider this bill?

Mr. BOWMAN. That is all; I do not want to have it considered now.

Mr. HOUSE. There is another bill pending before the House which embraces every thing that the gentleman's bill embraces, besides a great deal that his bill does not embrace, and which I think should be in a bill passed by Congress. I have no particular objection to setting a day for the consideration of this subject, his bill or any other, for of course amendments can be offered. The subject is one that this Congress ought to pass upon before it adjourns. I think the bill of the gentleman is a very good one as far as it goes.

Mr. BOWMAN. I think I am authorized to say by the Committee on Civil Service Reform, my bill being reported by the Committee on Claims, that they are perfectly willing that their bill should come up in the form of an amendment to this bill. As I understand it their bill takes, verbatim et literatim, my whole bill, and then adds to it one or two other sections.

Mr. HOUSE. Yes, there are several sections of the gentleman's bill copied verbatim into that bill. There are several bills on this same subject pending before the Committee on the Judiciary. I hope there will be no conflict between the committees on this subject. I myself have no pride of authorship or of committees in regard to this matter. I do want to see this Congress pass some bill which will take this vast amount of private claims from before us and refer them to some competent tribunal for judicial investigation.

Mr. BOWMAN. I suggest to the gentleman that he can offer his amendments when the bill comes up. I myself favor some of those amendments; but I did not dare to put them in the bill for fear the House would vote the measure down. I proposed a simple bill as a test. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me a single suggestion. Under the rules of this House we cannot move as an amendment to a bill any other bill pending. Therefore I want it understood that in this case we shall be allowed to move as an amendment the substance of any other bill, in whole or in part. [Cries of "Agreed!"]

Mr. BOWMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HUBBELL. Let it be added to the resolution.

Mr. BERRY. Is it understood that we are to have the whole subject before us?

The SPEAKER. Under the resolution, as it has been read, the Chair thinks another bill cannot be offered as an amendment.

Mr. HOUSE. I hope the resolution will be so modified as to allow that to be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection I believe; it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOWMAN. I have no objection. I want those amendments voted on.

Mr. HOUK. Let the resolution be again read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. HOUK. If this resolution be adopted, will it be in order to offer as an amendment or substitute any other bill providing for the adjustment of these innumerable claims now pending before Congress?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the bill, when it comes up for consideration, will be subject to amendment in accordance with the rules; but——

Mr. HOUSE. I would like to hear the modification which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWMAN] proposes.

Mr. BOWMAN. I am perfectly willing to add to the resolution——

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to hear an amendment which I have reduced to writing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that no amendment to the resolution is in order unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts is willing to accept this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:

"And that all amendments germane to the bill be in order, without regard to clause 4, Rule XXI."

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman from Massachusetts is authorized by his committee to modify the resolution in this way?

The SPEAKER. The amendment, as the Chair has already stated, must, if made, be adopted by unanimous consent. The Chair would not permit the gentleman to modify his resolution without consent of his committee.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think we ought to confine ourselves to the resolution; otherwise we shall get into great entanglement when the bill comes up as to what is in order. I object to any modification of the resolution.

Mr. BOWMAN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that objection, but will allow the whole subject to be considered together.

Mr. HUBBELL. May I make one statement?

The SPEAKER. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUBBELL. By unanimous consent, I wish to say that it seems to me very necessary that the understanding suggested should be arrived at, because the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, who are now considering this same subject, and who think they have perhaps a better bill, intend to invite the chairmen of the different committees to which claims are referred to attend their next meeting and take part in the consideration of the proposition before that committee. When this subject shall come up in the House, it ought, therefore, to be in order to substitute, if the House should so desire, the bill of the Committee on Civil Service Reform for the bill referred to in the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the modification proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. KASSON. The mover of the resolution consents that the words "and revenue" may be inserted between the word "appropriation" and the word "bills."

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent for this modification? The Chair hears no objection.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. BOWMAN to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution as modified, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House take a recess till half past seven o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that by unanimous consent a session was ordered for this evening, to be devoted to the consideration of District business. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion to adjourn is in order.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I insist upon it.

Mr. NEAL. I hope the House will vote it down.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The Chair stated that the session of this evening was for District business. I believe it is confined to the District code.

The SPEAKER. That is a more accurate statement of the matter.

Mr. NEAL. There is no appropriation of money in it.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the order for an evening session was made by unanimous consent I withdraw my motion to adjourn.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House take a recess till half past seven o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement of the vote the Chair will submit some requests.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. PARKER, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey, until February 24, instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILSON, for this night's session, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BELMONT, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. KNOTT, for this evening's session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, Mr. CAMP, will preside at the evening session.

And then (at twenty-five minutes to five o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess till seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., Mr. CAMP in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By special order of the House the only business to be transacted this evening is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1295) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia. The Clerk will read the order of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be evening sessions of the House on Tuesdays and Thursdays of each week, commencing Thursday the 16th instant, to be devoted to the consideration of House bill No. 1295, to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia, and shall continue until the consideration of said bill is concluded; and upon said days the House shall take a recess until seven and a half o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session was changed to this evening by unanimous consent instead of to-morrow evening.

MUNICIPAL CODE.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, it may be well for me to state how this bill comes before the House. Some years ago Congress authorized the District commissioners to employ a competent person to codify what you may call the ordinances of the District of Columbia, for this is but little more than city ordinances. They employed a competent gentleman of the District, a lawyer by profession, who made a report and that report was introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] into the Forty-fifth Congress. That Congress did not act on it, but at the extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress a gentleman from Virginia, then a member of the House, General Hunton, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, reintroduced that bill. It was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and Congress authorized a sub-committee of that committee to meet during the recess between the extra session and the first regular session for the purpose of thoroughly revising the bill as introduced by General Hunton. That was done. I was a member of that committee, and we devoted a large portion of the time faithfully, and I think conscientiously, to the work. We had before us, in considering the various parts, the District commissioners, the members of the school board, the superintendent of schools, and the architect of the District, Mr. Entwisle, in the preparation of the building regulations, and after months of hard work on our part we reported the bill to the House. The bill was considered by the Forty-sixth Congress very thoroughly, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] will bear witness, as also my friend from New Hampshire, [Mr. BRIGGS,] who lent their best efforts to perfect the bill and make it as nearly what the District required as was within their power. The bill passed the House, went to the Senate, and was there considered by the Senate committee. They suggested a number of amendments and reported it to the Senate, but the Senate failed to act on it for want of time, consequently the bill did not become a law.

Now, for the necessity of it. There is no way in the world I know of, except by long and thorough study, for a person to become familiar with the laws of the District. As an illustration: I had occasion the other day to ascertain what the statute of limitations was in this District. I went to the laws of Congress relating to the District, supposing I would find a law of that character, but found there was none. I made inquiry and then learned I had to go back to the Maryland laws passed prior to the Revolutionary war in order to ascertain what the laws of the District of Columbia were, and I am told that there are a number of the laws governing the District of Columbia which were passed by a Maryland Legislature prior to the Revolutionary war; because all the laws of Maryland that were in force at the time of the cession of the territory composing the District of Columbia by the State of Maryland to the General Government were continued in force. I apprehend that it would take an ordinary lawyer pretty near a life-time to find out what the laws of the District are.

This code does not pretend to do anything more than to codify what I might call the ordinances of the city, together with a tax bill, because the tax laws of the District of Columbia are so imperfect that the arrears of general taxes to-day constitute a book of hundreds of pages. Owing to the imperfection of the laws relating to the collection of taxes, people who do not wish to pay taxes do not pay them, and when you go to sell a man's property for delinquent taxes no one will buy because he does not know what he is buying. The result is that those who are good citizens—those who are good citizens without compulsion—pay their taxes, while those who are not do not pay them, and for years there has been a book of several hundred pages containing the arrears of taxes. The present bill contains provisions covering all of these points, as will appear when the bill is being read for consideration, and the bill before us supplies the want which has been long felt.

During the summer vacation, I, not having very much work to do, took the bill as reported by the Senate committee and carefully reviewed it, adopting in two or three instances the amendments suggested by the Senate committee, believing that those amendments really improved and perfected the bill, but ordinarily I rejected the Senate amendments, because it seemed to me that they were not important.

The bill is divided into titles, and each title into chapters and sections. The first title of the bill is on the construction; the second relates to officers, their duties, &c.; the third relates to taxation, to real and personal property, to licenses, collection of taxes, delinquent sales, &c.; the fourth title relates to public schools; the fifth to public works in the District; the sixth to the public health; and the seventh to the water service. Then there is a title in regard to the Metropolitan police; and there are other titles and provisions covering many other points, which the House will be familiar with when the bill is being read by sections.

I do not desire to say very much in regard to this code. I do say, however, that it seems to be a very necessary work. It is in my judgment an imperative duty upon us to do this in behalf of the District, for they cannot have a policeman, they cannot collect a dollar of tax, cannot redress a single wrong without the action of Congress. The amount of money which has been collected here within the last ten years on account of taxes has been collected by people appointed under the authority of the United States. All the money has been spent by United States officers. All the taxes have been assessed by United States officers, and this indebtedness which is now hanging over the District of some twenty million dollars or over was made by United States officers, who were the creatures of Congress. Nobody in the District to-day has an opportunity of saying a word in his own behalf, or in behalf of the District, or with reference to the laws of the District, for nobody knows what the laws are. Therefore it seems to me the bounden duty of this Congress to legislate promptly, intelligently, and to the extent that the interests of the District require.

Again, this code must bear the same fate that all revisions do. I am told when the United States Statutes were considered in Congress for revision, (I believe in the Forty-fourth Congress,) that a few members who were interested in the work, as we are, gathered together, met to perform that duty, and perfected it. When this code was considered in the Forty-sixth Congress I believe that we had at no time a constitutional quorum present; and yet the members who were gathered around this desk to consider that code came here actuated by one spirit and one motive, and that was to make for the District of Columbia the best code of laws that it was possible for them to devise.

Now, this work, if it succeeds, must succeed because the members who attend the sessions devoted to its consideration come here actuated by that same spirit. If it is to fail we want to know it at once.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that it is necessary for me to say anything further in a general way in reference to the code. I trust it will receive the fair, candid, impartial consideration of the House; and while I have no pride of opinion in regard to its provisions and am willing to accept any amendment the House may think necessary to incorporate for its improvement, I do trust it may finally become a law, so that the people of the District may not be at a loss to know what their laws are or where to look for them; at least that they may know where to go to find what their laws are, which they cannot do now.

In regard to officers the only change that has been made from the original report of the sub-committee on the District of Columbia is in striking out the treasurer and assessor. I was in favor of striking out treasurer—of abolishing his office—at the time I reported it, because I did not understand why the treasurer and assessor were also necessary. I deferred to the judgment of the president of the District commissioners, who said that it was impossible to get along without it. But the Forty-sixth Congress, in its appropriation bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB,] voted to strike out the treasurer, and I do not understand that there has been any trouble in getting along without that officer for the last year. The offices of treasurer and assessor are a joint office. In preparing this code I have stricken that officer out in deference to the sentiment of the House as expressed in the consideration of the last appropriation bill. The District commissioners tell me frankly it is impossible to get along without the assessor, but having no other code before me than the experience of my own State I have this to say, we get along without any such permanent officer in the State of Ohio, provision being made for assessors when they are necessary to value the property for taxable purposes. But it does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the fewer prominent officers you have connected with this District, the greater responsibility you place on those you retain, the better it is for the District and for the Government. We want to put the responsibility on as few persons as possible, so that they may feel that responsibility and act accordingly.

With these remarks I would suggest that the bill be now read section by section.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question for information simply. First, who prepared the code; and, second, by whom has it been reviewed? I put these questions that the fact may be known to us, this being rather a ponderous document.

Mr. NEAL. As I have already stated, the code was prepared some years ago. The Forty-fourth Congress, I think, made an appropriation for the preparation of this code. I believe it was the Forty-fourth Congress, but am not quite certain. The District commissioners employed a lawyer named Ingersoll, whom I have found to be a very competent and painstaking man. He prepared the code. It was presented to the House by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] when he was chairman of the District Committee in the Forty-fifth Congress, of which I believe the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARDENBERGH] was a member.

As I have stated, action was not taken upon it by that Congress. It was again introduced in the Forty-sixth Congress by Mr. Hunton, who was then chairman of the District Committee, and it was referred by the House to a sub-committee of the District Committee, who sat during the recess, composed of Mr. Hunton, Mr. Henkle, a member of the House resident in Baltimore, and myself; and we gave it as careful consideration as we were capable of, spending upon it months of time.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Has this code received the sanction of the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. NEAL. It received the sanction of the District Committee of the Forty-sixth Congress; and the District Committee of this House has authorized me to report it to the House.

I move that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule, as in Committee of the Whole, if a motion of that kind is necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be so ordered by unanimous consent. [After a pause.] In the absence of objection, it is so ordered. The Clerk will now read the bill by sections, during which amendments may be offered.

The Clerk read the first section, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., in manner and form following, that is to say:

TITLE I.—CONSTRUCTION.

SECTION 1. In the construction of the laws contained in the following chapters the following rules shall be observed, unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the law, or repugnant to the context of the same chapter, that is to say.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the last word in order that I may make a suggestion to which I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.] Undoubtedly, as we pass along in this bill we shall find provisions that will be deemed of great importance; and it may be—because such was the experience during the revision of the code in the Forty-sixth Congress—that gentlemen may wish to suggest amendments, and will not be satisfied with the vote of less than a quorum upon the propositions they offer. Now, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio at this time and in the hearing of all other gentlemen present, that if we arrive at that point when a quorum is to be insisted upon, in some way there should be an understanding to pass over for the time being the disputed point, saving the right to go back to it and have a vote on it in a full House. That does not arise now, but I mention it that an understanding may be come to, so that we may not lose our night sessions and annoy both the members who attend and members who may be absent by having a call of the House and bringing here members who are entirely willing the consideration of the bill generally should go on by consent without the presence of a quorum being necessary.

I am satisfied amendments of an important character will be proposed, and gentlemen will object to certain features of the bill, and want a vote, a vote, too, that will be declaratory of the sentiment of the House. By and by we will find that we will run against an obstruction that we cannot overcome without having a quorum, and it may be well that we should have now the understanding I have suggested.

Mr. NEAL. I suggest then, Mr. Speaker, that whenever we arrive at that point when an amendment is proposed on which gentlemen will not be satisfied with a vote of those who are present, either for or against the amendment, but demand the presence of a quorum, we shall uniformly pass over the section to which the amendment is offered, and consider others to which there is no objection, and go back and consider those disputed points at such time as we may have a quorum; so that we shall not be required to have a quorum here at times when it is not necessary in proceeding with the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that if, during the consideration of this bill, at any time the House should find itself without a quorum the section then under consideration may be passed over, and that the House be at liberty to return to that section for further consideration when a quorum is present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that for the present we proceed with the reading of the bill. When the case arises which has been suggested it will be then time to make a proposition as to the course to be pursued.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the better plan is to proceed with the reading in the usual way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana objects to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

SEC. 42. If any such officer, being so required, shall fail to give such new or additional bond within the time required by said supreme court, he shall be deemed to have been guilty of a breach of official duty, and his office shall be declared vacant.

Mr. HOGE. I desire to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I suppose it would be proper for me, in order to do so, to move informally to strike out the last word of the section just read, and I do so. I observe that section 36 provides that—

In no case provided in the preceding sections of this chapter shall the original be discharged or affected when additional bond has been given, as herein required, but the same shall remain of like force and obligation as if such additional bond had not been given.

The effect of that, if I understand it, is that although additional bonds are required and given by virtue of the provisions of this law, yet the original bond would remain in full force, and the original sureties would continue liable alike with the sureties upon the additional bond.

Mr. NEAL. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. HOGE. Certainly.

Mr. NEAL. This section provides that the original, that is the principal——

Mr. HOGE. That is, the original bond.

Mr. NEAL. The section provides that "in no case provided in the preceding sections of this chapter shall the original be discharged or affected when additional bond has been given," &c. That refers to transactions that have already taken place.

Mr. HOGE. That undoubtedly would be correct, if such were the construction given to it. But it was in reference to another section that I referred to section 36. Section 41 provides that—

Upon such new bond being given, approved, and filed according to law, the sureties in the former bond and their estates shall be discharged from all liability for any breach of duty committed by such officer after that time.

Mr. NEAL. Yes.

Mr. HOGE. Now, the suggestion I make may not be a very pertinent one, but it is known to the gentleman as a lawyer that in all proceedings to enforce in the courts the liability of sureties, the presumptions are in favor of the sureties. In other words, the liability of sureties is regarded by the courts as constituting a hardship, and the construction given to the law is usually to favor an escape from the entire responsibility of the sureties rather than to enlarge that responsibility.

I think, therefore, it would be better, and that was the suggestion I was about to make, that section 36 should be made distinct as to the limitation of the responsibility of the original bond for any default made by the principal prior to the execution of the additional bond. It is now liable to the construction that the original bond remains in force, and the additional bond is merely a cumulative bond. There is nothing to indicate that the limitation of the original bond is the act of the officer prior to the time the additional bond was given.

Mr. NEAL. Section 41 shows clearly that such is the intention.

Mr. HOGE. Section 41 shows that when a surety has petitioned and sought to be relieved from responsibility, that is the effect of requiring an additional bond. But it renders it possible that there may be a conflict of construction between section 41, employing the language it does, and section 36, which speaks of the original bond remaining in full force notwithstanding the additional bond.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOGE. Certainly.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Sections 35 and 36 are to be read together, and are to be construed together. They could not stand separately and bear a fair construction. Section 35 provides that—

Such additional bond shall be in such penalty as shall be directed by said court, and shall be approved and filed as is provided in the case of the original bond. Every such additional bond, filed and approved as aforesaid, shall be of like force and obligation upon the principal and sureties therein from the time of its execution, and shall subject the officer and his sureties to the same liabilities, suits, and actions as are prescribed respecting the original bonds of officers.

Mr. HOGE. Certainly, from the time of its execution, so far as the additional bond is concerned. But what is the effect upon the original bond?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. It seeks to prevent any liability on the new bond incurred prior to the new bond, but holds the old bond good for that liability.

Mr. HOGE. That I understand to be the intention of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think the section is right as it stands. The section refers to section 33, which provides that—

Whenever the sureties in an official bond, or any one of them, shall remove from this District, become insolvent or insufficient, or the penalty of such bond shall become insufficient on account of recoveries had thereon or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the supreme court of this District, in general or special term, of their own motion, or on the showing of any person supported by affidavit, to summon any such officer to appear before said court at a time stated, and show cause why he should not execute an additional official bond, with good and sufficient sureties.

Then under another section arises the case when the sureties become dissatisfied and seek to be relieved from their liabilities. It was the intention that the additional bond should be of full force, the same as the original, and that the original should remain in full force because the sureties themselves did not, under section 33, come in and desire to be discharged from liability. Consequently, it is all right.

After section 36 comes in the section which provides for relieving securities or sureties upon application for relief. When an additional bond is given, then those sureties who made application for relief are discharged from all liabilities except such as arose before their application for relief was made. I think that the old bond, the original bond, and the new bond, should both remain in full force.

Mr. HOGE. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. HARDY. I desire to move a verbal amendment to section 36 by inserting the word "bond" after the word "original," so that it will read:

In no case provided in the preceding sections of this chapter shall the original bond be discharged or affected when additional bond has been given, &c.

The word "bond" after "original" occurs in the other section.

Mr. NEAL. That is all right; it is a verbal amendment merely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment can be made only by unanimous consent, that section having been passed.

Mr. NEAL. I hope no objection will be made.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER IV.

Officers:

SEC. 43. The following offices are created in and for the District of Columbia, and are authorized by law, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 11, 1878, namely: Collector of taxes, auditor, coroner, water registrar, attorney and assistants, surveyor, superintendent of lamps, market masters, superintendents of public schools, trustees of public schools, fire commissioners, chief engineer and assistant of the fire department, superintendent of fire-alarm telegraph, inspector of buildings, health officer, sanitary inspectors and pound-master, major and superintendent of police, and officers and members of the police force, sealer of weights and measures, such inspectors of food, flour, and salted provisions as may be necessary for the exigencies of the services required of them, one harbor-master, intendant of the Washington Asylum, physician of the Washington Asylum, resident medical students of Washington Asylum, physicians to the poor, to be residents respectively of the districts or localities for which they may be appointed, apothecaries for the poor, to be residents respectively of the districts or localities for which they may be appointed, secretary to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, three trustees of the "Corcoran Charity," to be appointed from residents of that part of the District of Columbia known as the city of Georgetown.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] whether this section creates any new offices.

Mr. NEAL. It does not; it abolishes some already in existence.

Mr. DUNNELL. Name them.

Mr. NEAL. The assessor, for one, is abolished. At the last session, when we were considering this code, the office of treasurer was abolished, under the leadership of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB;] and now we abolish the assessor.

Mr. GARRISON. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. The laws now require, I believe, that there shall be an inspector of wood in this district; in other words, every cord of wood sold here is required to be inspected. I do not see in this list of officers any thing about the inspector of wood. I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether, if we adopt this bill with its repealing clause, the office of inspector of wood will be abolished.

Mr. NEAL. In answer to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GARRISON,] I will state that in the Forty-sixth Congress the House passed the clause referred to in this form:

Such inspectors of food, flour, and salted provisions, such inspectors and measurers of wood and lumber, such gaugers and inspectors of spirituous liquors, and such weighers of hay, straw, and fodder as may be necessary for the exigencies of the service required of them.

In the last Congress the Senate struck out all except what appears here; and the committee now allow the clause to stand as amended by the Senate.

Mr. GARRISON. I think it is all right. I believe the inspector of wood ought to be abolished; and the bill, as I understand, does abolish that office.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I wish to inquire in what respect "resident medical students of the Washington Asylum" are officers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. NEAL. I will state to the gentleman that when we come to consider the asylums he will find what are the duties of these officers. This bill makes no addition to the officers of the District; on the contrary, as I have stated, we reduce them.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I do not see how a medical student in the asylum is an officer of the District.

Mr. NEAL. I have no objection to having this struck out, if the gentleman makes a motion to that effect.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I only wanted to know why it is or how it is that a medical student is an officer of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New Jersey withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know whether an understanding was reached at the opening of the consideration of this bill that it should be in order to go back to a section already passed if an amendment should be found necessary by reason of an amendment to a subsequent section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A proposition was submitted that such an order be made, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objected.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; "the gentleman from Indiana" did not object to that at all. What "the gentleman from Indiana" objected to was a proposed understanding that if a section should be reached, on which a contest developed the absence of a quorum, it should be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request was that when upon any section or clause it might be found that no quorum was present, the provision should be passed over informally, to be returned to afterward. Under the rule there is no right to return to a clause which has been passed, unless unanimous consent be given.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did object to the proposition which the Chair now states, but I thought the suggestion was also made by some gentleman on the other side that if it should appear proper to go back to a section already passed to make an amendment rendered necessary by action on a subsequent section, it should be in order. It has been found necessary to do this already, I believe, in one case; I therefore submit it might be well to agree that wherever an amendment made to any section renders it important to go back to a preceding section to make a corresponding amendment, it shall be in order to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be in order at any time, of course, to ask unanimous consent to go back to consider a section already read and considered.

Mr. HOLMAN. But if that unanimous consent were given now it would be more satisfactory.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That certainly ought to be done. But the suggestion which I made and which I would like to have my friend from Indiana consider again—because I think he misapprehended it——

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no doubt that can be arranged in a way entirely satisfactory when we reach such a question.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think so. My expectation is we shall be able to go on in perfect harmony.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] renew his request?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. No, sir; I think whenever we reach a point where it is necessary to pass over a provision informally, there will be no trouble about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

ASSESSMENTS.

SEC. 52. The auditor shall have charge of all assessments in the District of Columbia, and receive and collect all returns of the same made to him by the assessors. Upon the completion of each assessment, and the revision thereof, he shall prepare in duplicate a complete and accurate list of the same, giving alphabetically the names of all persons assessed, with a description of the property assessed against them, respectively, one of which said lists shall, in book form, be retained in his office, and the other transmitted to the collector of taxes; and the said auditor shall, in addition, prepare in book form and retain in his office a list giving in numerical order the number of square, subdivisions, and lots assessed in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, with the names of the owners thereof; he shall also provide a book, in which the recorder of deeds and register of wills shall each day enter, in a manner sufficiently distinct to enable the changes to be noted on the tax-book and assessment-lists, all transfers of real estate in the District of Columbia, with a description of the property so transferred, and the said treasurer shall enter such transfers as may be thus recorded upon the assessment-books in his office, and in the office of the collector of taxes.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I do not know it is not all right, but we are going on so rapidly I do not catch it exactly. I see in the new bill the word "treasurer" is gone and we have "auditor" instead. I see also in the new bill "assistant assessors," but I believe they were included in the old bill. What are the duties of the auditor?

Mr. NEAL. A portion were devolved on the auditor and a portion on the treasurer. I see there is a verbal amendment necessary in this section.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I see in the last portion of the section the word "treasurer" is in.

Mr. NEAL. I move to strike out the word "treasurer" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "auditor," in lines 19 and 20, page 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 62. Upon receiving the certificate of the collector provided in section 50, he shall issue a license to the holder of said certificate for the purposes designated therein, stating when issued, the amount paid, and the date of its expiration, and he shall each week compare the record of the collector with his own record of license certificates issued, and shall keep an account of any and all transactions which by law may be required to pass through his office.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. In the old bill it was provided the "treasurer" should submit a weekly statement to the commissioners of the finances of the District. Is the auditor to do that in the new bill?

Mr. NEAL. We do not suppose weekly reports to be necessary if the officer keeps his books correctly.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If it is not necessary, all right.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 91. The ways, alleys, or passages, laid out or expressed on any plat of subdivision, shall be and remain to the public, or subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision, at all times under the same police regulations as the alleys laid off by the commissioners on division with the original proprietors.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to strike that out for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, a question. I find here that the "ways, alleys, or passages laid out or expressed on any plat of subdivision, shall be and remain to the public, or subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision, at all times under the same police regulations as the alleys laid off by the commissioners on division with the original proprietors." Now, here is a declaration for the filing and recording of a plat from which, by number, I suppose descriptions hereafter are to be taken, but these same plats are to be subject to the uses declared by the person who makes out the subdivision. I want to know where any provision is made for record of limitation of use by the proprietor of this subdivision.

I raise this question. While this town is not similar to the one I refer to, at the same time the idea is made clear to the House by referring to it. A plat was filed in a certain city in my State and certain reservations were made upon the plat and filed with it and became part and parcel of the plat, making record of the division of streets and alleys and limitations of their use, so the whole matter became of record and everybody was notified. But here is a provision in which use is referred to, and a man may lay off a certain tract of land and designate the use he wishes of the same. Now, where is the declaration on file and of record to go with the plat?

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas will notice that in these plats there is no reservation, but it merely provides that the ways, alleys, or passages laid out or expressed on any plat of subdivision shall be subject to police regulations the same as other ways, alleys, or passages. That is all this is intended to provide for, that the police may go through and keep them clean, and things of that kind.

Mr. HASKELL. And it is provided that they are to be subject to the uses declared by the persons making such subdivision.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, that the ways, alleys, or passages laid out or expressed, or any plat of subdivision, shall be and remain to the public; that is the ways, alleys, or passages shall be and remain to the public or subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision at all times, subject to police regulations the same as ways, alleys, or passages laid out by the commissioners. As a matter of course where a man lays out a plat or subdivides a lot and has it recorded, he sets forth in the subdivision he has recorded the uses for which he does it. For instance, he may reserve a private way not to become public at all. If, on the contrary, he dedicates it to public uses, he so expresses it.

Mr. HASKELL. Where is the record of that use?

Mr. NEAL. It requires the subdivision to be recorded and that must include the ways, alleys, or passages laid out or expressed.

Mr. HASKELL. Where a square of ground is laid off he may provide a use or limitation of use, and eventually he may transfer it to somebody else, but that limitation of use should be referred to somewhere. The use he proposes to put it to should be somewhere of record. I think all the limitations he is going to have, all the control he reserves of uses not absolutely under the control of the city should be written out on the plat so it shall be seen what he grants and what he does not grant.

Mr. NEAL. The only object of this section is to put these ways, alleys, and passages at all times under police regulations.

Mr. HASKELL. I withdraw the motion to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 97. The surveyor shall keep his office in a room designated by the commissioners for the purpose, and shall, in his said office, preserve and keep all such maps, charts, surveys, books, records, and papers relating to the said District of Columbia, or to any of the avenues, streets, alleys, public spaces, squares, lots, and buildings thereon, or any of them, as shall, for the purpose of being deposited in his office, come into his hands or possession; and shall, in books provided or to be provided for that purpose, keep a true record of every survey, certificate, or account, which shall be made, issued, or prepared by him, and also shall preserve and keep in good order and repair, at his own expense, the instruments in his said office belonging to the Government.

Mr. GARRISON. I will move to strike out the last word of that section, in order to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has gone out for a moment.

Mr. GARRISON. Very well; I will wait until he returns.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 101. The surveyor shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the commissioners, and the compensation therefor shall be fixed by the commissioners.

Mr. GARRISON. As the gentleman from Ohio has now returned, I move to strike out the last word, in order to make a suggestion to him. I wish to call his attention to section 91, to which the gentleman from Kansas raised some objection. I think perhaps this has been misprinted, or there ought to be a change in the phraseology. Section 91 provides that the "ways, alleys, or passages laid out or expressed on any plat of subdivision shall be and remain to the public, or subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision."

Mr. NEAL. Go on.

Mr. GARRISON. "At all times under the same police regulations as the alleys laid off by the commissioners on division with the original proprietors." Would it not read better in this way: Ways, alleys, or passages, laid out or expressed on any plat of subdivision, or subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision, shall be and remain to the public at all times under certain police regulations.

Mr. NEAL. That would not express the same idea expressed here.

Mr. GARRISON. I do not want to declare in this section that when a party lays out his lot of land and subdivides it that it shall be and remain subject to such uses as may be declared by him. That is practically what you do now by this section.

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman, if he will examine closely, will see that this applies only to the ways, alleys, or passages laid out in such subdivision, but does not refer to the land.

Mr. GARRISON. But you say it shall be and remain subject to the uses of the party. Now, will it not be subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision?

Mr. NEAL. But at all times under police regulations.

Mr. GARRISON. But the gentleman must see that this does not convey the meaning. You say here that ways, alleys, or passages, laid out, &c., shall be and remain to the public, or (shall be and remain must be understood) subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision.

Mr. NEAL. And at all times subject to police regulations. That is what is intended.

Mr. GARRISON. Then you had better express it in different terms, so as to cover the ground.

Mr. NEAL. I think it is right now.

Mr. GARRISON. I do not think it is right.

Mr. NEAL. These provisions about the surveyor were prepared under the direction of a competent surveyor, one familiar with the District of Columbia, a man of great experience in that direction. For myself, I must say that I do not know much about it, but we have the statement of this gentleman, on which we relied. We have also the provisions of the code, which are precisely the same as this, passed by the Forty-sixth Congress and approved by the Senate committee, as I think the report of the committee which I now have will show.

Mr. GARRISON. I do not wish the gentleman to understand me as objecting at all to the subject-matter. I have no objection whatever to the object you seek to accomplish; we are agreed about that. But why we should declare that when a party lays out his piece of land and subdivides it that it should remain subject to the uses declared by him, whether under police regulations or not, I cannot understand.

Mr. NEAL. If the gentleman will pardon me, it does not say that. It says the ways, alleys, or passages shall be subject to such uses under police regulations.

Mr. GARRISON. I do not think the language would convey that meaning. It says that it shall remain subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision for all time. Now the exact expression would be, I presume, in this connection, that it shall be, and remain to the public, under the same police regulations, &c.

Mr. NEAL. It is subject to those uses at all times, under police regulations, that is to say, the ways, alleys, and passages shall be at all times subject to police regulations, the same as other alleys, and the object of the present law is to provide that the same shall be applied to these subdivisions for the purposes named.

Mr. GARRISON. I think it ought to be modified in some shape, so as to express more clearly its meaning.

Mr. THOMAS. If the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his amendment I will move an amendment.

Mr. GARRISON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is manifest here that the chairman of the committee desires to fairly express the idea that these ways, alleys, or passages shall be subject to police regulations. Whatever his intention may be, this sentence is certainly as awkwardly constructed as one may well conceive, and fails as completely of its purpose as it is possible to imagine. It seems to me that a little pruning here will make the proposition as clear as day. Suppose the section to read in this way: the ways, alleys, or passages laid out or expressed on any plat of subdivision shall be and remain at all times under the same police regulations as the alleys laid off by the commissioners on division with the original proprietors. If you simply strike out the balance of that section you will clearly express the idea intended to be conveyed. Whereas under the section as it is now printed the party having land so subdivided reserves to himself the power to resume control or possession of ways or alleys, and subject to such uses as he may prescribe in the plat. Now there is certainly no such intention on the part of the committee. So I move to strike out all that part of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2 of section 91, after the word "remain," strike out the words "to the public, or subject to the uses declared by the person making such subdivision;" so that it will read:

SEC. 91. The ways, alleys, or passages, laid out or expressed on any plat of subdivision, shall be and remain at all times under the same police regulations as the alleys laid off by the commissioners on division with the original proprietors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 101. The surveyor shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the commissioners, and the compensation therefor shall be fixed by the commissioners.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the preceding sections—after defining the duties of the office of surveyor with great care covering the whole ground—seem to me to make this section unnecessary.

This section provides for additional duties to be performed by the surveyor under the direction of the commissioners, and necessarily conveys the idea that compensation is to be made. I apprehend if these duties are performed at the instance of the commissioners the compensation will have to be paid out of the public Treasury. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio, therefore, if there is no good reason for incorporating this section, that it had better be excluded. Unless there is some special necessity I think an ambiguous section like this should not be retained. I hope, therefore, the gentleman from Ohio will move to strike it out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no question before the House. Does the gentleman make a motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out this section.

Mr. NEAL. It will be perceived that the preceding sections define the duties and prescribe the fees to be received by the surveyor. Now it may be that during his term of office there may be other duties which should be performed by the surveyor.

He is called upon to perform those duties by the commissioners. They have a right to call upon him to do so. If you do not confer this authority upon them, then all he is compelled to do is simply to perform the duties prescribed by law and to receive fees accordingly. I do not know but he might be called upon to survey the ruins of a burnt public building. I do not know what all he might be called upon to do. He might be called upon to survey the grounds which some of these squatters along the wharves are occupying, belonging to the Government, in order that they might be ousted. There may be diverse and various duties he might be called upon to perform. Now, if the commissioners do not have the authority to call upon him to discharge those duties, then there is no one connected with the Government who could properly discharge them, because there is no other person in the employment of the District who is skilled in the art of surveying so that he could discharge these duties in an intelligent way, and in such a way as to make his testimony in court effective.

I do not think there is any danger of this being abused. The commissioners are creatures of law, of the executive department of this Government, and not of the people of this District.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana is to strike out section 101.

Mr. HOLMAN. The fact that there are two engineers in the employment of this District aside from the Engineer Corps renders it scarcely possible that any duties like those referred to by my friend from Ohio should be required or could be rightly performed by this officer. The gentleman from Ohio will perceive there are several difficulties about this section. Who is to prescribe the fees? You require fees for all the duties performed by this surveyor. Who is to determine what are the fees and who shall pay them? Do you propose to confer upon the commissioners the power to determine the fees?

Mr. NEAL. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that under the law as it now is the commissioners cannot pay anybody anything. They can simply estimate for the expenditures and ask Congress to appropriate for them.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio no doubt is correct in that statement. In this section it is stated that these duties may be prescribed by the commissioners, and the compensation therefor shall be fixed by the commissioners. Now, up to this time the compensation paid to this surveyor has had to be paid by the persons who have the services rendered, and these are almost uniformly private parties. They are the only persons interested as a general thing. These other duties can certainly not be duties to be performed for the Government, because they have two competent engineers. I therefore, if the gentleman does not think those words should be stricken out, suggest to him to add the words "and paid by the persons for whom the service is performed;" so that it will read:

And the compensation therefor shall be fixed by the commissioners and paid by the persons for whom the service is performed.

This addition is necessary to make this section correspond with the other.

Mr. NEAL. I do not know there is any objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has already moved to strike out section 101. Does he withdraw his first amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is always in order to perfect a section before you vote on striking it out.

Mr. NEAL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that we should agree to let this section stand for the present until we get further along the code, and find out whether there are any duties required of the surveyor, and then we may go back and if necessary amend this section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] asks unanimous consent to pass over this section for the present, with the understanding that it may be returned to hereafter.

Mr. COBB. Before that is agreed to, I desire to call the attention of the House to what I conceive to be the meaning of this section. The object of this section, as I understand it, is to enable the commissioners to call upon the surveyor to survey public grounds; for instance, the site for a school building or the site for a market-house or a station-house. They may buy a piece of ground with the view of locating on it some one of those public buildings within the District. Now, the object of this section is to enable the commissioners to call upon the surveyor and require him to make the survey for them.

I agree with my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] that the commissioners ought not to be allowed full rein to fix the compensation. That ought to be limited by this act. They should not be allowed to give this officer $30 when his services might not be worth five. But that, I think, is the object of the section, to enable the commissioners to call upon the surveyor to aid them in their survey when they are required to erect a public building or any thing of that kind.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Would it not be better to insert, after the words "such other duties," the words "connected with his office," so that it will read:

The surveyor shall perform such other duties connected with his office as may be prescribed by the commissioners.

Otherwise they may require this surveyor to perform duties which would constitute another office, entirely in addition to the one he actually holds. Let it be clearly stated that he is to perform only such duties as are connected with his office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves to strike out section 101.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion to strike out; although I desire to say it is always in order to move to perfect a section which is proposed to be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman cannot move to strike out the section and at the same time offer an amendment to add something to the section which he proposes to strike out, although another member might offer such an amendment.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I propose to limit the duties of this officer to the particular duties of his office. Otherwise by the construction put upon the section he might be appointed to discharge the duties of any other office the commissioners might prescribe. This makes it clear.

The question being taken on Mr. HARDENBERGH'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I move to further amend the section by adding to it the following:

And any work done under the direction of the commissioners shall be paid for by them at the same rate as if done for private individuals.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that by general consent this section be passed over for the present, to be returned to hereafter if desired.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

FIRE COMMISSIONERS AND OFFICERS OF THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

SEC. 102. All persons employed in the fire department shall be appointed by the fire commissioners, and shall hold their places during good behavior, and who, upon trial, may be fined, suspended, or expelled: Provided, That the accused shall first have written notice of the charges against him, except, however, in cases of misconduct coming under the personal observation of one or more of said commissioners, or chief engineer, when there may be an immediate suspension by said commissioner, or chief engineer, until charges shall be presented to and determined by the board, and in the trial of such persons said board shall have power to summon and compel attendance of witnesses and administer oaths.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusets. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman move to strike out the last word?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I will, if necessary; or, if it makes any difference, I will move to strike out the last two words. [Laughter.] I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL,] for I suppose he can tell at once, how many fire commissioners there are. It is not stated in this code.

Mr. WAIT. And let him state at the same time in what manner they are appointed.

Mr. NEAL. I do not know what number there are; I never inquired of the commissioners. They are appointed by the District commissioners.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I take it the number is fixed by the law of 1878, referred to at the beginning.

Mr. NEAL. I am told there are three fire commissioners.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Appointed under authority of an act of Congress?

Mr. NEAL. I suppose by authority of an act of Congress; but I do not know what one.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I am not very much of a fireman, but there may be trouble to some one who may aspire to the dignity of that position. I see in line 10 of this section the words "until charges shall be presented to and determined by the board." That is the first place the word "board" is used. Board of whom, and of what? The title of this provision is "fire commissioners and officers of the fire department." Here is a provision for a sort of court, a quasi judicial tribunal, clothed with the power of punishing an accused fireman—punishing him by fine, suspension, or expulsion from the department.

And then in the latter part of the section I find this: "And in the trial of such persons said board shall have power to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses and administer oaths." Now that is a pretty broad power to give to the chief officers of a fire department, to establish a court and to try offenses. I do not know but that it is wise, yet it strikes me that it is a new provision and I would like to know if there is any precedent for it.

Mr. THOMAS. And at the same time I would like to know what is the number of this board.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I have inquired about that. Perhaps it would be well to pass over this section for the present. Such a provision as this may be very desirable, but I believe it will be found to be a rarity in the States. I hardly think these fire commissioners should have the power of holding a court and compelling the attendance of witnesses; not firemen alone, but you and I and everybody else must go on their summons. And suppose we do not obey; are we punishable for contempt of court; and, if so, how and by what process?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] suggests that this section be passed over for the present. If there is no objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

SEC. 110. The fire commissioners, the chief engineer and his assistant, and foremen of companies shall have full police powers while going to, while at, or returning from fires or alarms of fires.

Mr. HOGE. I move to strike out the last word of section 110 with a view of inquiring how many fire commissioners there are.

Mr. NEAL. There are three.

Mr. HOGE. Where does that appear?

Mr. NEAL. It does not appear here, but that is the number established.

Mr. HOGE. Where is the section? I have been looking for it, but I am not familiar with the bill. Where is the section that provides who shall constitute this board of fire commissioners? There is nothing in the bill that I can find to indicate who shall constitute the board or how many fire commissioners there shall be. It strikes me that this whole title should be passed over for the present, in order that it may be more carefully revised. This section provides that "the fire commissioners, the chief engineer and his assistant, and foremen of companies shall have full police powers," &c., without declaring the precise number of either class of these officers. I move by unanimous consent that all the sections relating to the fire department and the fire commissioners be passed over informally.

Mr. NEAL. I have no objection.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I move now to go back to section 101, to which I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. NEAL. Let that rest for the present.

Mr. GARRISON. We may as well amend it now, if the amendment is ready.

Mr. NEAL. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEZENDORF] moves to return to section 101.

The motion was agreed to.

Section 101 as amended was as follows:

SEC. 101. The surveyor shall perform such other duties connected with his office as may be prescribed by the commissioners, and the compensation therefor shall be fixed by the commissioners.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I move to amend the section by adding to it the following:

And any work done under the direction of the commissioners shall be paid for by them at the same rate as if done for private individuals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is still understood that section 101 is passed over informally?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All the sections relating to the fire commissioners and fire department have been passed over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I mean section 101, to which the amendment was just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection it will be so considered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COBB. That part of this bill relating to the fire department, I understand, has been passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was asked and no objection was made. Those sections therefore are passed over to be returned to hereafter if desired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 119. It shall be the duty of the harbor-master to keep a register of the denomination, name, burden, and master's name of every vessel coming within his control, and the port to which she belongs, and from which she last came, which register he shall submit to the inspection of any applicant, and from which he shall make out and furnish to the commissioners, within ten days after the expiration of each month, a report, in which he shall also state precisely the amount received from each vessel as harbor-fee or ballast-fee, and the aggregate amount received, and pay over the same to the treasurer.

Mr. HARDY. I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] to state awhile ago that the office of treasurer was abolished. It seems to me necessary therefore that this provision should be changed. I move to strike out "treasurer" at the close of the section and insert "auditor."

Mr. NEAL. It should be "collector" instead of "treasurer." I move to amend in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 122. The following property shall be exempt from taxation:

First. The property of the United States, or the District, and of foreign governments held for legation purposes.

Second. The Corcoran Art Gallery, with the works of art contained therein, and all real estate now owned by said institution and used therewith.

Third. The Soldiers' Home property and the Louise Home.

Fourth. All church property held and used exclusively for religious worship. All property, real and personal, used or the rents, issues, and profits of which are used, exclusively for the endowment or support of institutions for the free education of youth, so long as such property is so used.

Fifth. All lands used exclusively as cemeteries, or grounds for burying the dead, except such as are held by any person, company, or corporation, with a view to profit, or for the purpose of speculating in the sale thereof.

Sixth. Homes for reformation of offenders, almshouses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, and conducted without charge to inmates, and without a view to profit or income.

Seventh. Household property not over the value of $300.

Eighth. Personal property of non-residents, brought into the District for temporary purposes, and not to remain for a period of one year, if taxed elsewhere.

Mr. WARNER. It seems to me that the words "household property," in the seventh clause of this section, are very indefinite; they might exclude the property of a great many poor persons, mechanics, and others, who actually need exemption from taxation. I move, therefore, to strike out "household" and insert in lieu thereof the word "personal."

Mr. NEAL. A young man may have a watch worth $300 or $400. That is personal property; but we do not want to exempt it at all. Another man may have one hundred dollars' worth of whisky or beer which he is selling at a grocery. That is personal property; but we do not want to exempt it. The object of this provision is to exempt household property; that is, property belonging to the family—chairs, tables, beds, bedding, cooking-stoves, provisions, &c., to the amount of $300.

Mr. WARNER. Kitchen utensils might not be embraced.

Mr. NEAL. Oh, yes; they would certainly come under the definition, "household property."

Mr. WARNER. Not necessarily. Besides, mechanics have their tools which ought to be exempt. We certainly ought to exempt the tools required by all workmen and laborers to earn their own living. It seems to me the language should be more guarded. I think the provision had better be passed over.

Mr. NEAL. The object of this provision was to exempt household property; that is, the furniture of the house, not the tools of a mechanic, the horse and dray of a drayman, or any thing of that kind, because that is property belonging to single persons. Household furniture is not ordinarily owned by single persons. This provision corresponds with the most approved tax laws of the States at the present time.

Mr. WARNER. I think that over two-thirds of the States of this Union use different language from "household property" in defining exemption from taxation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to have this section passed over.

Mr. COBB. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether under the one hundred and twentieth section it is intended to leave out the capital stock of national banks.

Mr. NEAL. No; that is provided for elsewhere. I will state that we cannot tax the capital stock of these institutions; but this bill provides for the listing of the stock as personal property by the bank, which shall pay the taxes and charge them to the account of the stockholders.

Mr. HARDY. I move as a substitute for the seventh clause to insert the following:

Furniture and other household property not over the value of $500.

Mr. WAIT. I suppose the object of this clause is that household furniture which is in use by a housekeeper or by a family shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. NEAL. That is it.

Mr. WAIT. But the clause does not say so distinctly and clearly. The language is so general that it might cover furniture in the hands of a dealer to be sold. The object undoubtedly is that household furniture used by a family for the purpose of housekeeping shall be exempt. In my own State household furniture to a certain amount is exempt from taxation, provided it is used by the party owning it for the purpose of housekeeping. That is the language of the law, so that there can be no misunderstanding as to the household furniture which shall be exempt. Now, I think there should be a provision of that kind here. It should read, I think, "household property not over the value of $300 or $500."

Mr. NEAL. Five hundred dollars is too much.

Mr. WAIT. I think so myself; $300 is a fair limit. The provision should be: "household property not over the value of $300 used by the owner in housekeeping." Otherwise a dealer in furniture might have an exemption to the amount of $300 on his business stock, which is not the intention I know of my distinguished friend from Ohio in drawing this bill.

Mr. HARDY. My amendment is to make it read as follows:

Furniture and other household property actually in use as such not over the value of $500.

Mr. NEAL. I suggest $500 is too large an exemption.

Mr. HARDY. It is the amount we have in my State. It is not too large. Three hundred dollars was the old amount twenty or thirty years ago. Since then the value of furniture has greatly increased.

Five hundred dollars is not more than the value of ordinary household furniture in actual use.

Mr. NEAL. I will say to the gentleman from New York that household property is not valued at its full worth. In Ohio we only exempt $200; and furniture does not cost as much as it did twenty years ago.

Mr. WAIT. My amendment is as follows:

In actual use by the owner of the same in housekeeping.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Is it $300 or $500 exempt from execution or taxation?

Mr. NEAL. From taxation; this has nothing to do with execution.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. There is no property exempted from taxation in my State. There is exemption from execution, but not from taxation. If they can afford to hold it they can afford to pay the taxes on it. I move to strike it all out.

Mr. NEAL. I move to strike out "$500" and insert "$300." The Senate made the exemption $300, and it was in deference to them inserted here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is not in order, as there is an amendment to the amendment already pending, moved by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. WARNER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. WAIT'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I move to strike out the whole section.

Mr. NEAL. Let us perfect the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from New York as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GARRISON. Let it be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Household property in actual use by the owner of the same in housekeeping, not over the value of $300.

The substitute was agreed to as amended.

Mr. COBB. I move to strike out the whole clause as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That amendment is hardly in order, as this clause has just been inserted, as it is not in order to strike out what the House has inserted.

Mr. HASKELL. I suggest it would be in order to strike out what has been inserted, provided it be coupled with other words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The substitute embraces the whole clause.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Why cannot my motion come in, to strike out the whole clause?

Mr. COBB. That motion I have already made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order, because the subdivision as it stands has just been inserted, and to strike out what the House has inserted is not in order.

Mr. COBB. I do not understand we have inserted the whole clause, but only amended it. I move to strike out the clause as amended. Let it be read as it now stands.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. That was my motion before it was amended.

Mr. COBB. I understood your motion was passed over in some way or other.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. The Speaker decided I was out of order at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment was first made to this subdivision to strike out "household" and insert "personal." That was rejected. The gentleman from New York moved a substitute for the whole subdivision; to that the gentleman from Connecticut offered an amendment which was adopted, and then the substitute as amended was agreed to. It is not in order now to strike out what the House has just inserted.

Mr. HASKELL. It cannot be amended. When the substitute has been amended and as amended has been adopted that is the end of it.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Has the substitute been adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been voted on as amended, and it was adopted by the House.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. As the House did not understand it, I move to reconsider the vote by which it was adopted.

Mr. NEAL. I move we waive the strict enforcement of the rule and take a vote on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out these two lines.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that will be done.

Mr. COBB. It is well known the Government of the United States, under the late organic act, pays one-half the expenses of this District. I submit we ought to require all the property that is owned by citizens here be taxed. If a man owns three hundred or two hundred dollars' worth of property he is as well able to pay his proportion of tax as the individual who owns three thousand dollars' worth is to pay his share. I do not believe in exempting any property from taxation.

I would exempt property from execution under certain circumstances, but I certainly would not exempt any property from taxation. It will afford a shield for rich men and shield thousands of dollars of property from taxation, and I submit that we ought not, in justice to all, exempt any property from taxation. I think that there should be no exemption of property from taxes; but when it comes to the subject of executions, that presents another question.

Mr. WAIT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio what is the exact limitation of this section?

Mr. NEAL. The section provides that household property not over the value of $300 shall be exempt from taxes. That is the original section, for which the substitute has been offered.

Mr. WAIT. It seems to me that the language should be changed. It seems to exempt that which is less in value than $300.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, $300 or less. Nothing over $300.

Mr. WAIT. But you have incorporated the words not over $300. I think those words should go out.

Mr. NEAL. That is certainly very good grammar, and conveys exactly the meaning of the committee.

Mr. WAIT. While I do not insist upon it, yet it seems to me it should read not to exceed in value the sum of $300.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out the seventh subdivision of the section.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I was in hopes, Mr. Speaker, that somebody else would oppose that amendment besides myself. It seems to me that it is not wise to strike out that exemption. I must confess that I am rather surprised to learn, as I do from the conversation of those around me, that it is the policy in several of the States to tax household furniture—useful furniture—even down to cooking-stoves and chairs. That is not the policy in the part of the country and in the State where I reside, and I may say that it scarcely ever occurs in the State of Massachusetts that household furniture of any value is taxed. I am not speaking of executions. The line is drawn clearly and distinctly between taxes and executions.

It is not the policy, it seems to me, to tax such property. Suppose you bring it down to $300, and you proceed to levy your tax upon all useful household furniture down to that; it may be the property of a very poor person, hardly worth the amount of the tax to anybody else. I think it very likely that there are a great many poor people living in this District, the value of whose household furniture would not reach $100, or perhaps not even $50, and there is no possible income derived from the ownership of such property, which is simply for the convenience and use of the poor family. If it was properly used for purposes of profit, or from which an income could be derived, there would be some justice in imposing a tax upon it, but not otherwise.

I think the true idea of taxation is to tax the sources of income, to put your taxes upon that which yields something; and when our tax laws reach that point, I believe we will have arrived at a perfect system.

But it does not yield any thing in the way of taxes to take the bed that some poor man or woman sleeps on, worth perhaps a couple of dollars, and levy your tax upon that. It is hardly worth while to take into consideration a sum so insignificant as that, and when you get down to $200 or $300, or even a smaller sum, and remember that these things constitute the absolute necessaries of life to these people, articles in actual every-day use—there is no luxury about them, but simply the modest, ordinary articles of every-day life—I think it hardly good policy to tax them. If something yields a return, if it is a means of earning a livelihood, that is another matter.

I only state this, Mr. Speaker, because, as it seems from the expressions of gentlemen sitting around me, that this system prevails in other States. It is not the practice in that part of the country where I live or in the States east, and it certainly accords with my sympathies and my view of what is right. It seems to me like a very small piece of business to levy a tax upon such property. As my friend on my right says, I want to put the taxes upon that character of property which should properly bear taxation, but I do not think that much would be gained in the shape of taxation by assessing it upon a little bit of property that some poor man has saved by his hard labor and devotes to his household purposes; property which is in daily use, which is gradually shrinking away and wearing out day by day, until, finally, it is worn out and amounts to nothing. And if I were a tax assessor, I should feel it to be an ignoble business to go around assessing the property of some poor man, and demanding a schedule from him of every broken chair, every piece of damaged crockery, every old stove, and all of the little odds and ends representing the absolute necessities of his family, amounting in value to less than $300 in all.

Mr. COBB. That is all very well, and I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts in much of what he says, but this paragraph which I propose to strike out applies to the rich as well as to the poor.

Mr. NEAL. It only exempts $300.

Mr. COBB. Yes, $300; but $300 of the rich man as well as of the poor man. I think with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who has just spoken; and if he will limit this exemption to the poor, who really need it, then I should be in favor of granting that relief, even perhaps to the extent of $1,000. I should be willing to incorporate such a provision. But to say that he or I, worth twenty or thirty thousand dollars, as the case may be, shall have our property exempt even to the extent of $300 from taxation I believe is not right.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Indiana bear with me for a moment? Just so much as you take off of the property of the rich and poor alike you will have to assess on the rest of the property which belongs to those who are able to bear the burden.

Mr. COBB. I understand that.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And that is the character of property which you finally reach, and which is able to bear the burden of taxes. You take it off the poor man to the extent of the exemption, say $300; and if you take a similar amount off the property of the rich, you leave the remainder to bear this burden of taxation.

Mr. COBB. The trouble about it, I submit to the gentleman, is this: it enables the tax-payer to cover up a large amount of property upon which he ought to pay taxes. With a fixed limit, unless you tax all the property, you give this opportunity of covering up a vast amount of property that ought to be taxed, and injustice will be done in that case to both the poor and the rich.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to ask the gentleman how the exemption of $300 of household property enables a rich man to cover up valuable property exceeding that amount.

Mr. COBB. He will say "my property is not worth more than that."

Mr. NEAL. And then the assessor comes in and finds that it is worth more.

Mr. COBB. He makes up his mind to return a certain amount of property, and says the property sought to be taxed is within the amount that is exempt.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to say to the gentleman, he will find when he comes to examine the provisions in regard to the taxation of personal property that they are very stringent in their character, and cannot be easily evaded. When this code was before the Forty-sixth Congress a memorial was presented by a large number of residents of this District, representing this feature of it as Draconic in its character, inquisitorial, &c. It is inquisitorial in this respect, that it seeks to search out all property that is liable to taxation and to deal with it in such a way that taxes may be assessed upon it.

Mr. HATCH. I do not desire to make any argument on the pending amendment. But I ask that under the rule adopted to-night this entire section 122, embracing these eight subdivisions, shall be passed over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see any object to be attained by that, after the full discussion that has been given to the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The section can only be passed over by unanimous consent. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. HATCH. This courtesy has been extended to every gentleman who has asked for it to-night; and if it is denied to me now, I notify the gentleman he will have to get a quorum to vote on this section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] to strike out the seventh subdivision of section 122.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the gentleman from Missouri wishes to offer an amendment to perfect the section in any way, I would be glad he should have that opportunity.

Mr. HATCH. I claim the privilege that has been accorded to every other gentleman who has made the request this evening.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to offer an amendment to section 122.

Mr. NEAL. That is not in order if the House agrees to pass that section over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request has been made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that the section be passed over for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and having read the remainder of chapter 2, title 3, read the heading of chapter 3, "The listing of personal property."

Mr. NEAL. It has been suggested that we should stop at this point for this evening. I wish to make this suggestion to the gentlemen present, who I am glad to see are taking an interest in this code, that I should like them before the next evening for the consideration of the code to give as much of their attention to the remaining sections regarding taxation as they can conveniently with their other duties. This is a very important matter. The provisions are very stringent in their character, and I think will have the effect of enforcing the collection of taxes, so that we shall not get year by year such a delinquent list as is represented by this volume. [Holding up a bulky report.]

Mr. HASKELL. And I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] that I hope when we have adjourned he will give his attention to section 146, which will come up at the next sitting. I want some information about it.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 21, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the money expended for the education of Indian children; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 937) to enable the Postmaster-General to delegate authority to sign warrants.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 124) to establish distinct United States courts with distinct officers in the northern and southern judicial districts of the State of Georgia, and define their jurisdiction and powers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund;

A bill (H. R. No. 1049) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service, and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2944) authorizing the Lancaster National Bank of Lancaster, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 977) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, of the United States Navy; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a memorial signed by a large number of citizens of Washington and other parts of the United States interested in the subject of education, asking that an appropriation may be made for the establishment of a free national training-school for kindergarten teachers. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I present the petition of the American Chamber of Commerce of New York, praying for the passage of the bill providing for a commission on the tariff. This chamber of commerce is a body entirely non-political. I find among this list of officers the Hon. Mr. Bailey, of Clarksville, Tennessee; the Hon. Peter Cooper, of New York; ex-Governor Penn, of Louisiana; E. K. O'Brien, a leading Democrat, ship-builder in Maine; the mayor of Jersey City, leading Democrats, Greenbackers, and Republicans. It presents reasons in favor of the commission very concisely stated, to nearly all of which I give my adhesion. It is said that we protection men, we who are charged with being protectionists, we men in favor of protection as such, are opposed to a commission and favor the bill simply for delay.

That is not true, sir. We believe that the tariff needs a careful revision and large amendment, and I concur in nearly all of the reasons that are given by this chamber of commerce in favor of the passage of the bill. I move that the petition be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of the American Chamber of Commerce showeth—

That this chamber is composed of more than 700 representative manufacturers, agriculturists, mine owners, bankers, lawyers, merchants, importers, exporters, and other citizens resident in all the States and Territories of the Union;

That since the present tariff laws were enacted, the conditions of American manufactures and commerce have materially changed;

That it is generally conceded by the representatives of every class of industry, and by persons of each political party in the country, that the present tariff laws need revision;

That irritating and dangerous attacks upon the import duties affecting particular industries are continually being made;

That special legislation in relation to separate classes of imported goods is prejudicial to commerce, alarming to capital, and detrimental to the growth of our manufacturing interests;

That the gratifying revival of trade in the several States and Territories would be better appreciated if it were generally known that Congress would immediately take steps for a thorough investigation and general amendment of the tariff laws as a whole;

That the regretful expressions of opinion by renowned statesmen in foreign lands regarding past legislation affecting their national manufactures, the energetic protective action of other foreign governments and legislatures recently exhibited, the anxiety of Great Britain, France, and Canada to effect special commercial treaties with this country, and the peculiar opportunities now presented for enlarging our export trade, are so many reasons for a statesmanlike examination of this momentous subject, and the passage of a comprehensive tariff law, easy of interpretation and execution, and worthy of a great and prosperous nation;

That the only means for speedily and safely arriving at wise conclusions upon the many questions which arise in relation to tariffs would appear to be in the appointment of a sufficient number of duly qualified persons to act as a commission to inquire into and report upon the present tariff laws, and the alterations and amendments necessary to be made for the promotion of national prosperity.

Your petitioners therefore pray your honorable House to pass a bill for the appointment of a commission as before mentioned, and that until the said commission shall have made its report there may be no piecemeal legislation by Congress altering the present tariff laws.

And your petitioners will, &c.

Given under our corporate seal, at the city of New York, this 7th day of February, 1882.

By order of the executive council.

H. S. BELLOWS, Secretary.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, presented a petition of 40 citizens of West Virginia, praying for the passage of a law for the suppression of polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present resolutions of the Legislature of New York, representing that, by the recent decision of United States Circuit Justice Blatchford, no tax can be collected in the form of head-money for the inspection of immigrants landing from foreign ports in the harbor of New York, and urging upon Congress to pass some law to protect the State from the care and expense which belongs to the unwise and unjust importation of persons who in many cases are paupers, criminals, and lunatics, afflicted with diseases and permanent physical and intellectual disability. They desire Congress to remedy this great evil. They feel confident there is no mode of redress unless it can be obtained through the legislation of Congress. I ask that these resolutions go to the Committee on Foreign Relations and be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want to object to printing this petition in the RECORD, but I think this is the second or third petition that has been ordered to be printed in the RECORD to-day. I fear we shall lumber up the RECORD unnecessarily if we print petitions.

Mr. LAPHAM. This is very brief and of an important character.

Mr. ALLISON. I know, but the multiplication of these petitions makes the RECORD very large from day to day. I do not object in this particular instance, but I shall in future.

Mr. LAPHAM. This paper is on a subject of absorbing interest to the people of New York.

Mr. INGALLS. I agree fully with the Senator from Iowa that the practice that is growing up of printing unimportant petitions and other papers in the RECORD is very vicious and ought to be discontinued. The RECORD should contain, as far as possible, a statement of the debates of Congress. It is already unwieldy almost beyond the possibility of examination and expensive beyond the capacity of the Government to print, and I hope, without objecting to this, that the practice may be discontinued hereafter, unless there is some special occasion for the appearance of a document in the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say in addition to what the Senator from Kansas has just said, that it is a practice that has grown up recently to print so many petitions and other matters in the RECORD. I hope the Senate will not order such matters to be printed there unless they are very important, or come from a State Legislature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces that hereafter when a request of that kind is made he will submit it to the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to suggest that this paper is not upon an unimportant question. If it had been I should not have asked that it be printed in the RECORD. The space occupied by it in the RECORD will not be as much as the speeches of gentlemen who have spoken on the subject.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, ASSEMBLY CHAMBER,
Albany, February 14, 1882.

On motion of Mr. BROOKS:

Resolved, If the Senate concur, that in the face of the recent decision of United States Justice Blatchford, that no tax can be collected in the form of head-money, for the inspection of hundreds of thousands of immigrants landing from foreign ports in the harbor of New York, with the probability that the 460,000 landing there the past year may be increased by 50,000 in number during the present year, that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be most earnestly urged to press upon Congress to pass some law to protect the State from the care and expense which belongs to the unwise and unjust importation of persons, who, in many cases, are paupers, criminals, lunatics, afflicted with diseases and permanent physical and intellectual disability to secure their own support, either in this State or in the country at large.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and signed by the presiding officers of the two houses of the Legislature.

By order: CHARLES E. PATTERSON, Speaker.

IN SENATE, February 15, 1882.

Concurred in without amendment.

By order: GEORGE G. HOSKINS, President Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present also a memorial of the Winnebago Indians of Wisconsin, which is a long document setting out all the facts of their case. They conclude with a prayer that they have a select committee other than the Committee on Indian Affairs to examine into their statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator propose? Does he propose to raise a select committee? If so he should introduce a resolution; or does he move to refer the memorial to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. LAPHAM. I think it may as well go to that committee, and they can consider the prayer of the memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of Marietta, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1440) for the establishment of a soldiers' home upon the site of the marine hospital at Erie, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions passed at a meeting of citizens of the twenty-fifth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, favoring the enactment of a law for the suppression of polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Philadelphia, praying for the enactment of a law to suppress polygamy in the Territory of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the mayor and citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the treatment of the Jews in Russia, and in favor of governmental intervention in their behalf, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WINDOM presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota praying for the passage of a bill regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RIGHTS OF INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, a year ago I was charged with the duty of presenting to this body a petition of a very unusual character, both as to the petitioners themselves and as to the subject-matter of the petition. It was signed by a very large number of citizens of the United States representing, by the signatures upon the paper, more than thirty thousand of the intelligent, the educated, and the earnest citizens of the United States; and the burden of their prayer was that the United States would keep its faith with the Indians who are living in their midst. These petitioners have come here again to-day, and many more with them, and I am requested by these petitioners to present their petition this morning. It is signed by Governor St. John of Kansas, Governor Long of Massachusetts, Hon. William E. Dodge of New York, Judge Shipman of Hartford, leading presidents and professors of colleges, and the officers of various educational and charitable and missionary institutions and associations throughout the land. In addition to the individual signatures are the official signatures of churches without number, representing in each signature the individual desire of each member of the church personally expressed; and in that way more than one hundred thousand of the citizens of the United States have joined in this petition, and their petition is:

To the President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned men and women of these United States, do most respectfully but most earnestly pray our President and your honorable body:

1. To maintain all treaties with Indians with scrupulous fidelity until these compacts are modified or abrogated by the free and well-considered consent of the Indian tribes who were also parties to these treaties.

2. That since the number of Indian children within the limits of the United States does not probably exceed sixty thousand, or one-third the number of children in the public schools of some of our larger cities; and since treaties with many tribes already bind our Government to provide a teacher for every thirty Indian children among these tribes: therefore we pray that a number of common schools sufficient for the education of every child of every tribe may be provided upon their reservations, and that industrial schools also may be established among them.

3. We pray that a title in fee-simple to at least one hundred and sixty acres of land may be granted to any Indian within the reservation occupied by his tribe when he desires to hold land in severalty, and that said land shall be inalienable for twenty years.

4. We also earnestly pray for the recognition of Indian personalty and rights under the law, giving to Indians the protection of the laws of the United States for their persons and property, and holding them strictly amenable to these laws; also giving them increased encouragements to industry and opportunity to trade, and securing to them full religious liberty.

This puplic opinion, Mr. President, has been gathered into this form of expression by ladies of character and of influence in different parts of the United States, associated together in an association which bears this significant title, "Indian Treaty-Keeping and Protective Association." The officers of this association have themselves personally accompanied this petition with a letter addressed to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, and with your leave I will read it:

Memorial letter of the Indian Treaty-Keeping and Protective Association with their petition for 1882.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Again the women of a national Indian association beg leave to present to your honorable body the petition they have circulated and received again from the people of the United States. Their roll represents at a low estimate considerably more than a hundred thousand citizens—instead of thirteen thousand as did their first, three years ago—and is an earnest plea for a righteous, speedy, and permanent settlement of the Indian question.

Among the petitioners are many hundreds of churches which have adopted the petition by a unanimous rising vote, this often having been taken at a regular Sabbath service; various popular meetings have also here presented their plea similarly expressed; while the roll contains names of members of legislative bodies, of governors, judges, and lawyers; names of bishops and of many hundreds of the clergy—among the latter the entire ministry of three denominations in the city of Philadelphia, numbering nearly three hundred; names of the professors and students of theological seminaries like those at Hartford, Cambridge, Rochester, and Upland; colleges and universities like Yale, Harvard, Brown, Cornell, Rochester, Washington, and Lee; names of editors of leading periodicals; the boards of hundreds of missionary and other benevolent societies, not a few of these being national ones, with names of art, literary, and social clubs. Besides all these the roll contains the signatures of hundreds of business and manufacturing firms who control capital to the amount of many millions of dollars, and who employ many thousands of operatives—all showing that not only has there been a rapid growth of sentiment among the religious and intellectual leaders of the community demanding legislation which shall end oppression of Indians and secure to them full opportunity for industrial, mental, and religious development, but that the commercial interests of our land also are fast coming to demand a just and speedy settlement of the Indian question.

Permit an expression from the association presenting to-day to your honorable body their third annual petition—an association having sixteen State committees and one in each of the larger cities, with helpers in every State, all these committees being composed of patriotic Christian women—permit these to say that into their ears and hearts comes the cry of suffering, undefended, ever-endangered Indian women and children, and that this cry is our appeal to you to secure for them legal protection; that the plea of Indian women for the sacred shield of law is the plea of the sisters, wives, and mothers of this nation for them, the plea of all womanhood, indeed, on their behalf to you as legislators and as men. Permit us also to say that in laboring by every means in our power to fill our land with a knowledge of the present condition of Indians, and of our national obligations to them, we most deeply feel that while justice demands the recognition of Indian personality before the law, thus most surely and simply, it seems to us, securing to Indians protection and fostering care, we yet feel that legislation securing this recognition will be an honor to the present Congress and to our beloved country. For this legislation we most earnestly and respectfully pray.

MARY L. BONNEY, President Indian Association.
AMELIA S. QUINTON, General Secretary Indian Association.
Mrs. A. S. QUINTON, (Chairman.)
Mrs. SENATOR HAWLEY, Connecticut,
Mrs. SPEAKER KEIFER, Ohio,
Mrs. BISHOP SIMPSON, Pennsylvania,
Mrs. WM. E. DODGE, Sen., New York,
Mrs. REV. DR. GEORGE D. BOARDMAN, Pennsylvania,
Petition Committee.

Mr. President, the work in which these ladies are engaged could not have been done were it not that there is a widespread and increasing public conviction that, notwithstanding the administration of our Indian affairs by this Government hitherto, notwithstanding the great proclamation which has accompanied it of efforts at maintaining our obligations with them and our personal care for them, nevertheless the spoliation of their domain and the disregard of their rights, as well as neglect of our own obligations to those into whose heritage we have entered, still continues with little if any improvement.

I move that these petitions and the accompanying letter of these ladies be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the motion to print and refer is put, I desire to say a few words. The sonorousness with which the Senator from Massachusetts delivers the message intrusted to him by the letter he has read indicates to me that he really believes it. I am not going to join issue with him now specially on that point, but I desire to call attention to one particular paragraph in the letter which he read and upon which he dwelt with more than usual emphasis, and that was the great wealth of some of the persons interested in this movement. And that leads me to say that some people do think on the whole that wealth is about all there is in this country; and we had a proposition made in another place to apportion population on the basis of wealth, which I am happy to say was incontinently sat down upon.

I have noticed another, Mr. President, and that is that interest of a certain kind in the Indian is in the exact ratio of distance from him, and perhaps I might add in increase ratio to their knowledge of him or his actual need.

Beyond that, this letter and the emphasis which the Senator from Massachusetts gives to it also contain an implication that Congress and the nation have habitually and always violated and are now still violating their obligations to the Indians. I say that that is not true. I say that the more recent occurrences which have happened in the nature of differences between the two races have grown out of a strict observance on the part of the Government of treaty stipulations.

An appeal is made for the womanhood of Indian women. You can not get an Indian any more than you can get a Mormon woman to advocate a change of the relations that exist now between the Indian women and the male members of the tribes, or any modification whatever of the tribal relation. It is just simply an appeal to deaf ears. Indian women do not want and are not going to have any change by legislation or otherwise. It is a sympathy which is mainly misapplied.

Mr. President, a little occurrence that happened in 1878, of which the Senator from Massachusetts has some knowledge, had something to do with the womanhood of some persons living on the frontier of the State of Kansas. In September of that year a tribe in treaty relations with the Government escaped from the reservation where pursuant to treaty it had been placed by the Government, and went across the entire frontier of the State of Kansas. Every man who lived upon that frontier was living upon Government land to which he had been invited to go by the Government, land that was surveyed, that was not only not then an Indian reservation, but never had been the property of an Indian tribe. Those settlers were poor, as men ever are upon that frontier, representing as society does there every nationality and every State of this Union, peacefully pursuing their occupations at their own firesides on their own homesteads, persons who had never had experience with Indians, who had never even dealt with these or with other Indians, without arms or other means of defense. Without warning, without cause or provocation, these Indians descended upon that frontier, making literally a track of fire, pillage, destruction, murder, and outrage across the entire width of the State. Not a house within their reach escaped the torch, not a human life accessible which they did not take, except where they left the bruised and outraged bodies of the women upon whom they had wreaked their lust; not an article of value, food or otherwise, they did not appropriate or destroy.

More than forty of the citizens of that State were murdered in cold blood on land which the Government had invited them to go upon, and nearly twenty of their wives and daughters were subjected to outrages which I dare not mention here. And yet not one single Indian ever was punished for these crimes—not one—and not one single dollar of damages has been paid, although the treaty with these Indians provided that they should pay all damages done to white people by them. Whole settlements were depopulated, scores of people reduced to beg gary, and yet the Government has not punished the perpetrators or compelled them to compensate the sufferers.

Mr. President, at a later period an outbreak occurred among the Ute Indians in Colorado. The agent of those Indians, himself a man representing the philanthropic class so solicitous about the Indian, so lacking in solicitude for the whites, was foully murdered at his agency, and his wife and his daughters subjected to similar outrages to those I mentioned as having been perpetrated on the women of Kansas—an inoffensive old man and inoffensive women; not the enemies of the Indians; philanthropists; people who went there guided by as pure a spirit of philanthropy as ever possessed anybody, designing only the good of the Indian, moved by the strongest possible sympathy in that direction; and yet these people were singled out for murder, for outrage by these Indians, and the Government has not punished a single one of the Indians engaged in those outrages.

Mr. TELLER. And we are paying them annuities every year.

Mr. PLUMB. And, as the Senator from Colorado says, we are paying them annuities every year, and I think the annuities have been increased.

Mr. President, I want the relations of the Indians to the whites and the Indians to the Government to be brought down to a practical basis as much as the Senator from Massachusetts or anybody else; but I want to be done with all this talk which elevates the Indian, murderer and ravisher though he be, above the white people upon whom his crimes are committed. I do not want an imputation covert or direct cast upon those who have pushed the line of civilization westward under the invitation of the Government and have encountered the Indians in their savagery, and whose graves are found on every hilltop and in every valley of that ever-advancing line, on which they have planted new altars and new homes at the bidding of the Government, which invited them to go upon its frontier domain.

Mr. President, there seems to be a prevalent impression among the uninformed that land in severalty for the Indian and a classical education are the two things necessary for the salvation of the children, and yet the Indians fail to recognize the great merit of these propositions—do not take kindly to them. They will take the education so long as it permits them to be idle, but land in severalty they will not take except in rare cases. If they are forced to it they will revolt or starve. The very Ute Indians of whom I have spoken were sent to Utah to be placed on land in severalty, and though it was provided by treaty that they should take the lands in that way they will not do it, and no power but brute force will compel them. That means another war.

The problem is not so simple as it seems. People near at hand and familiar with the Indian, his habits, and capacity are doubtful as to the best method to accomplish the desired result, and do not find a panacea in any single measure.

We need something beside sentiment. I admit that there have been abuses in the Indian service; but I am not willing there should be an assumption here that the sacrifices and the sufferings have been wholly on the part of the Indians and the outrages solely committed upon them, when I know from my own observation that the contact between the whites and the Indians upon the frontiers of the West, as I believe, has been as much the fault of the Indians as of the whites. I do not care to have this constant assumption made that the Government has been wholly unmindful of its treaty obligations and that men who have extended the frontier, who have created new empires, and new States to be represented on this floor and in the other branch of Congress, who have added to the material wealth of the country, who have made it possible that the continent might be girded with lines of railroads and carry with them the opening of new fields for the investment of Eastern capital, should now be so charged by having accomplished their purposes by wrong and outrage, or that they were parties to such on the part of the Government. The later history of the country in the matter of its dealings with Indian tribes will compare favorably with the earlier; and it is now common sense and not sentiment that is needed to adjust so much of the problem as remains.

Mr. DAWES. I regret exceedingly that these ladies have stirred up the wrath of the Senator from Kansas in presenting to this body a petition couched in the most respectful language and asking most proper consideration of a grave subject affecting the interests of the whole country. I have failed to find a word in it or in the letter which I read to justify any special excitement upon the part either of the Senator from Kansas or of any other Senator or citizen upon the western border who, more frequently than I, I confess, comes in contact with the Indians. There was nothing in it, and nothing in anything I said, which intimated that any one of the brave and bold pioneers who carry civilization westward in this country was guilty of any wrong in which these people did not as much participate and were not as much responsible for the consequences of to the Government and to Him who holds each man responsible for his acts. There was nothing in the list of names here that justified the Senator from Kansas in saying that this was a complaint from people farthest from the presence of the Indians, and just in proportion as the distance from them increased did the intensity of this complaint increase, when his own governor was among the first who signed this petition and to complain of this national, not local, treatment of the Indians.

The Senator intimates that he is surprised; that I talk as if I believe what I say. I have no hesitancy in assuring the Senator that I do believe, not only what I have said myself but what I put upon record here in the petition; that the record and the history of the nation are full of irrefutable evidence of the truth of everything uttered in the petition or upon this floor in reference to the subject-matter.

I do not wonder at the sensitiveness of the Senator. I know he has suffered and his people have suffered more than my people at the hands of the Indians. I know of the awful outrages committed upon the people of Kansas to which he alludes; and he has never heard a word from me but in condemnation of them and in effort, so far as possible, to redress that grievance. But the Senator knows that there is another side to that picture. The Senator knows that the Army of the United States took from their home among the mountains of the North and marched down into the Indian Territory, against their will, a whole tribe of Indians, and undertook to force them to live in a strange land and among a strange people; and when three hundred of them started to find their way back in peace and in quiet to their own homes, where their fathers had lived and where their children had died, the Army of these United States pursued them and attacked them. They told the Army that they had no war to make upon any living soul. They only begged for permission to go peaceably to their home, but to be forced back into exile they would not. Then the Army, without orders and without law, fired upon them and made war; and they turned in answer to the dictates of nature and self-preservation and fired upon their assailants and drove them back to their barracks, where they belonged; and then, in their rage and in their madness, they undertook to retaliate for these wrongs upon the poor and helpless and defenseless citizens of Kansas, and committed these outrages upon the poor settlers on the frontier, from which the Senator does well to recoil in horror.

That is the history of that case, and back of it all, when these poor wanderers were in a snow storm up in the mountain, within sight of their own home, they were surrounded by the soldiers of the United States and corraled in midwinter, with the thermometer ten degrees below zero, in barracks, without fire, without food, without water, and told that they should have neither food nor drink, nor fire to warm them in their destitution and their nakedness until they consented to go back into exile; and when they broke forth to seek their own home they were pursued by the soldiers, and ninety brave men and twenty-three helpless women were slaughtered by the soldiers of the United States; and a cool report of it made and laid on our tables here in print, and not a word of censure ever arose from lips here, or from those at the other end of the avenue under whose orders it was done.

Sir, the Senator may call this sentimentalism, but it has taken possession largely of the American people. They do not justify the outrages of the Indian upon the white man, nor will they countenance the outrages of the white men upon the Indian, in retaliation for which the poor, blind, benighted savage seeks to vent his rage upon the innocent and the defenseless. That is what comes of disregarding treaty obligations and the most common rights of humanity, and it is rolling up, year after year, a debt that will sooner or later be paid to the utmost farthing.

It is only that the Senator from Kansas and those brave pioneers whom he represents may be most efficiently protected against these outrages, and at the same time the remnants of these tribes treated like human beings, that these petitioners ask not money, not land, but justice to the poor and the defenseless, whom this nation itself has despoiled and disarmed, and then driven out without the means either of sustenance or of defense. This is the plea. It will not be silenced by the Senator from Kansas complaining because these ladies spoke of some of the petitioners as men of wealth and influence. Deeper down under all forms and all pharisaical proclamations and pretenses lies the naked truth that the Senator from Kansas and no other Senator regarding the record and the history of this country can gainsay, that for long years treaties have been violated, Indians have been despoiled of their rich domain by covetous land-seekers among the American people, and have been driven in despair and in self-defense to retaliate in their poor, blind, ungovernable way, it may be.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, one word in reply. I referred particularly to the letter that the Senator read as containing substantially the statement of the case; and I now call attention to his remarks to show that while he had columns, so to speak, or volumes I might better say, of defense of the Indians who were taken to the Indian Territory in pursuance of treaty, about which I say nothing, he only had a paragraph for the people whom they outraged in their track across the borders of Kansas. That is exactly what I complain of, that there are barrels of tears, oceans of sympathy for the Indians, and a fragmentary and passing word only for the men who suffered at their hands.

Mr. DAWES. There would have been no outrage on the people of Kansas by the Indians if it had not been preceded by the most unjustifiable outrage upon the Indian by the educated, civilized, law-pretending people of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. What was the justification in the Indians in ravishing and destroying these inoffensive people?

Mr. DAWES. The poor people in Kansas who fell victims had the whole American people behind them to sympathize with and defend them, and redress their wrongs; but the poor Indians, who had been trampled on, and turned as a worm will turn when trodden upon, had nobody to speak for them.

Mr. PLUMB. On the frontier of Kansas the people have reason to pray to be relieved from friendliness of that kind hereafter.

Mr. TELLER and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the motion to refer will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to say a word or two on this matter.

Mr. ROLLINS. I rise to morning business.

Mr. TELLER. I hardly think the remarks of a Senator ought to be cut off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion was made by the Senator from Massachusetts to print the petition and refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Kansas wished to address the Chair on the subject, and now the Senator from Colorado desires to do so, the Chair understands.

Mr. TELLER. I do, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair knows no way of stopping the debate.

Mr. INGALLS. The debate is entirely in order.

Mr. TELLER. I am in order, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire raise any point of order?

Mr. ROLLINS. No; I made the inquiry whether morning business is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is morning business, the Chair would inform the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HALE. How long will the discussion continue?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until half past one o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that at that time I shall move to postpone all pending and prior orders in order to take up and consider the apportionment bill; and I take occasion to say that in view of the urgency of the matter I must insist on making that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has the floor on the pending question, which is that the petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and be printed.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. HOAR. The Anthony rule extends the morning hour until half past one for the consideration of the Calendar. My inquiry is whether that extends the time for the presentation of petitions and memorials until after one? I make the inquiry not in the least with a desire to cut off the Senator from Colorado, for I am sure he ought to have the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed, if he desires to do so.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not need unanimous consent. I have a right to proceed, and I propose to proceed on my rights.

Mr. HOAR. Then I put the inquiry to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair reads this resolution, at the conclusion of the morning business the proceedings under the Anthony rule are in order, but not until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is this—which I should not make but for the fact that the Senator from Colorado, without appreciating the spirit in which I made the remark, says he defies the point of order and says he will stand on his right. Under the rule of the Senate the morning hour closes at one o'clock for the presentation of petitions, memorials, reports of committees, the introduction of bills, &c. A petition is now presented, and the question is upon its reference. That time has expired, and the half hour of extension of the morning hour till half past one is only for the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, not for the consideration of the routine morning business. So the Senator from Colorado does not address the Senate in his right after one o'clock, but he requires either a vote of the Senate or unanimous consent, which I hope he will have; and I wish to assure my friend from Colorado that I made the suggestion with a view to its effect as a precedent in the future, and not in the least desiring to interpose in the way of his speech. He will take my assurance, I hope.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I will proceed without much reference to whether I do it in my own right or by the courtesy of the Senate. It would be rather remarkable if we should not be allowed to be heard now after the very remarkable exhibition presented here this morning.

In the first place, Mr. President, it is somewhat singular that this cry comes from a great number of people, distinguished people as we heard from the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] people whose lot has been cast in pleasant places, who occupy high and mighty positions, but who, when they address this body, are not heard in any other manner than are the humblest and the poorest in the land. They have, when they come here with their great petition, covered with its fine cloth and bound in its ribbons, no greater right to be heard on the floor of the Senate than the humblest frontiersman who shall send up his petition to the national Legislature, complaining of the acts of these wards of the nation and these people who call for so much sympathy from the Senator from Massachusetts, and those who have adopted sentiments like unto his.

Mr. President, I say it is remarkable that any great number of people should address the Senate and beg us to keep the plighted faith of the nation, and it is remarkable that the Senator who has been in public life either in this body or the other for twenty-five years, if I recollect aright, has not been heard oftener upon this subject, and that he has not been enabled in some way to convince the Senate and the House and the people at large that the Government owed this duty and that it should not have done it.

Sir, I am in favor of maintaining the plighted faith of this Government, and standing upon the floor of the Senate again and again I have complained that we have not done so, and the reason why we have not done so is because we have listened to just such appeals as the Senator has made here this morning, full of pathos and full of enthusiasm, but utterly lacking in common sense. And I do not say that in a spirit of insult or of jest, but I say lacking entirely in that common sense that ought to govern the legislation of this body upon such a question. We have proceeded year after year to listen to just such appeals, and we have governed and guided our legislation in that manner.

These petitioners are demanding that this Government shall do that which a very large percentage of these Indians regard as a violation of morals and of right; they ask that we force upon them that which they sturdily deny that they will receive. In 1880 the honorable Senator from Massachusetts voted for a bill that gave to the Indians in the State of Colorado land in severalty, and made it obligatory upon those Indians, no matter what their objections might be, that they should receive that. The men who, without compunctions of conscience, could go out and slay their enemy, who could ravish the women and despoil the settlers, recoiled in horror when it was said to them "You shall live upon land segregated and separated from the common land of the country," and they as honestly declined the offer as the Senator from Massachusetts would to-day if he were asked to slay as a sacrifice one of the members of his family. It is because of the ignorance of just such people as have petitioned this body that we have gone on acting without reference to the character of the Indians or without reference to the fact whether, when we made obligations with them, we could or could not maintain them.

Why, Mr. President, only about the time the Senator came into public life and entered into the other House, we made a treaty with the Indians on the frontier of Kansas, in which we said that that entire country, now occupied by millions of intelligent and industrious people, should forever be devoted to barbarism and ignorance; that it should be the hunter's home and not the home of civilized, intelligent men; and with this cry that the Indian was better than the white man, and that the Indian had been despoiled from the Atlantic to the Mississippi and the Missouri, the members of this body agreed to that monstrous proposition that a third of the continent should be dedicated to ignorance and barbarism and savage life for all time to come; and when we abrogated it, as in the nature of things we must do and had to do, then arose the cry all over the land that we were not maintaining and keeping our plighted faith.

Mr. President, the first thing to do is to determine that you can keep it before you make it. When the honorable Senator stood here two years ago defending a measure that I said then was not in the interest of the Indians, I called his attention to these things; he was then a distinguished member of the committee of which he is now the chairman; but he voted for propositions calculated then to destroy the Indian. Why? Because he was moved by his impulses and his sympathies, and not by his practical common sense, of which he has an unusual proportion if he will divest himself of this sentimental notion and of this sympathy with this class of people.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has truly said that the Senator from Massachusetts has had a mere paragraph for the frontier people who have suffered, and he has had volumes for the Indians who committed these outrages. It is not strange at all that the people coming from that country, like the Senator from Kansas and myself, should be a little restive under this kind of appeals made to this body and sent all over the country, with an indirect intimation at least, if not absolutely direct, that the people of the frontier were responsible for these violations of treaties. It is not so, Mr. President. If they have been violated the responsibility is with this body and not with the people of the frontier, who have greater interests at stake, who are more concerned in maintaining peaceable relations with the Indians than any other people in the world, who are more anxious that these men if possible should be made citizens, should be educated and instructed in the Christian faith, than all the people in the State he represents can possibly be. By their side we live, by their side we expect to live, and by their side, if they do not expire in the course of time, must our children live; and is it to be supposed that we want to despoil them or keep them degraded? Not at all. But we demand for the white men exactly what the Senator demands for the Indians. We say that the forty murdered people of Kansas and the murdered people of Colorado have a right to demand at the hands of this Government as much as any red man, no matter what may be the treaty that he may have made with the Government. Murdered and despoiled as the Kansas settlers were, with a treaty upon your statute book that required the Government to pay from the Indian fund every dollar of damage that those people had suffered, you have not paid yet a dollar—not a solitary dollar—and there is to my certain knowledge the case of at least one woman insane, a pauper upon the community of that State, made so by the conduct of those Indians; and yet the Government, from the large amount of money owned by those Indians, has never paid her or her representatives a dollar.

Mr. President, when the murders in Colorado took place it required a determined effort of a few men on this floor before old Mrs. Meeker, the wife of the philanthropic Meeker, could be paid a pittance of $500 a year, when you were voting away to these Indians millions and millions of dollars that did not belong to them and for which they had no earthly claim upon this Government. And, Mr. President, the Senator need not be astonished if we do not always sit still and listen to his appeals with the patience that he may think they deserve. For the Senator I have the highest regard; as to the people that have sent this petition here, many of them from their names I know to be worthy people for whom I have high regard, but I have regard also for the frontier people. I have as much regard for the people who suffered in Colorado as for the people in Massachusetts who are sympathizing with the Indians. I can safely say that some of the people who suffered by that raid in Kansas, and some that suffered by that raid in Colorado, are the peers, intellectually and morally, of the petitioners, or of at least most of them. They are not ignorant barbarians. They are made poor in property and poor in spirit by the outrages perpetrated, and the Senator has never found time to say a kindly word for them. If a bill which is before his committee now should receive his sanction and the sanction of the others to make good some of their losses, it will be only when it is scrutinized and sifted, and these people will have to prove that every dollar of the money they had was actually lost by the conduct of the Indians.

Now, Mr. President, I do not intend to take any further time in this discussion. I do not propose to find fault with those who make these sympathetic appeals. I know what the meaning is. A little time spent on the frontier would convince them that in the first place it is not so easy to educate an Indian, and secondly that all the evils that the Indians are subjected to do not come entirely from a failure on the part of the Government to maintain its treaties, nor do they come from any improper treatment by the people of that section of the country.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I now make the point of order that the morning hour expired at one o'clock——

Mr. DAWES. Has the petition been referred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. INGALLS. Did the Senator with the motion to refer include a motion to print all that mass of material?

Mr. DAWES. I did not intend that, I only meant that the petition should be printed without the names which I read.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope that the embroidered napkin in which the petitions are pinned, and the red, white, and blue ribbons by which they are tied, may be tenderly preserved in the archives of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. I hope the red, white, and blue will not be a red flag in the face of any Senator living on the border.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair construes Rule VIII in connection with the Anthony rule. The eighth rule is:

> The first hour of daily sessions shall be designated as the morning hour, during which the order of business shall be as follows.

The morning hour proper, for the consideration of morning business, in the opinion of the Chair, expires at one o'clock. It may expire, because there is no morning business, at half past twelve or at any other time within the hour. Then the Anthony rule is in force till half past one; but the Anthony rule is absolutely operative at the hour of one, and it may become operative whenever the morning business expires, and it was the duty of the Chair at the hour of one to have stopped debate on this subject. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to ask to have certain amendments proposed to the bill (S. No. 980) to provide a reserve fund for the redemption of United States notes, and for other purposes, printed for the use of the committee. I ask to have fifty copies so printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. BECK. Was the amendment I suggested ordered to be printed as well?

Mr. MORRILL. No; I waited to have you present that.

Mr. BECK. I offer an additional amendment, to strike out the words "and twenty," in line 4 of the bill; so as to read:

> That a maximum reserve fund of not exceeding $100,000,000 shall be set apart in the Treasury, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will send the amendment to the desk, and it will be printed.

Mr. BECK. It is to be added to the amendments offered by the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. At the end of the bill the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky striking out the words "and twenty."

Mr. BECK. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont simply to ask for the printing of the amendments or the reprinting of the bill with the amendments?

Mr. MORRILL. The reprinting of the bill with the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty copies of the bill with the amendments, for the use of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that it is hardly worth while to limit the number of copies.

Mr. MORRILL. Say one hundred or five hundred, if the Senator prefers it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care specially.

Mr. MORRILL. There will be fifteen hundred printed unless we do limit it.

Mr. INGALLS. Nineteen hundred.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not print the usual number?

Mr. MORRILL. Because we do not need them. I move to print five hundred copies instead of fifty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that five hundred copies of the bill with the amendments be printed for the use of the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL. I am also directed by the Committee on Finance to move that the usual number of copies be printed of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American Company of Revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the same committee to ask that the petition of that company be printed for the use of the committee, and will only ask that fifty copies of that be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. HALE. I now ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the apportionment bill for consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. Wait until we get through the regular morning business.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a report.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely willing to give way for the introduction of reports.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee," reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to consider that bill, which simply gives the right of condemnation in procuring the site for the marine hospital, and it is vitally important that it be given, so that the work may proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Arkansas from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to the consideration of that bill when the morning business shall be through.

Mr. HARRIS. If it takes five minutes I shall not insist. I hope the bill will be considered. It is very important as a matter of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. If it does not cause any debate, I will not interpose.

Mr. HARRIS. If it takes five minutes, I will withdraw the request.

Several SENATORS. Regular order.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 390) to amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 657) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia F. Gordon, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 330) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Missouri, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 726) granting the right of way to the county of Anne Arundel, in the State of Maryland, through the United States Government grounds near the city of Annapolis, Maryland, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 862) for the relief of John Fraser, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1082) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Eliza Francesco, mother of Alexander Francesco, of Kentucky, praying the correction of his military record, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1278) for the correction of the military record of Alexander Francesco, deceased.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLUMB. On a previous day I reported from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (S. No. 67) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, and obtained then the privilege of filing a written report at a later date. I now file a report to accompany that bill.

The report was received and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. HALE. I yield the floor of course. I have no objection to morning business being received. ["Go on!"] There is a general call that I go on. I move to postpone the pending and prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the apportionment bill; or I will ask first unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. The motion is not in order as made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine can move to postpone any specific thing until to-morrow, and then move to take up his bill, or he can wait until half past one, when the unfinished business is taken up, or till the first case is called under the Anthony rule. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has a bill which will be the first one called on the Calendar under the Anthony rule when that call commences. The hour for morning business proper has expired, and it is only by indulgence of the Senate that bills and joint resolutions can be received now.

Mr. HALE. I was only going to ask——

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine modified his motion and put it in the form of a request for unanimous consent; and in view of the importance of the immediate consideration of the bill that he has reported, I will withdraw my request for the present consideration of the bill that I reported a while ago.

Mr. HALE. That was my purpose. I had consulted with the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I will say this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine give way to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HALE. I give way.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a right under the rule to have the bill we were proceeding with last evening called. There is but five minutes of the time left. I am willing and I consent to laying aside that proposition for the purpose of taking up the apportionment bill to-day, which I consider one of the most important bills before the Senate at this time ready for action. I do that; and I desire to say to the Senate that after action on the apportionment bill I shall then by motion ask the Senate to take up the bill that I now consent may be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Maine that there are but five minutes left of the extended morning hour under the Anthony rule, and there is a good deal of morning business that can be received by unanimous consent, and then the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] and then the Senator from Maine can ask that that be postponed and his bill taken up.

Mr. HALE. That will be at half past one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive requests for the introduction of bills.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1279) for the payment of Sewell Coulson for legal services; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1280) for the relief of Captain Nicholas J. Bigley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1281) to provide for the preparation of a centennial record of the Government of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FERRY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1282) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morell in adjusting titles to land in Michigan;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1283) granting a pension to William Orndorff; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1284) for the relief of Oliver Whitsell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1285) for the relief of True E. G. Pettengill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1286) amending an act to amend the act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on Western prairies," approved March 13, 1874; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FAIR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1287) to authorize the appointment of an additional judge for the ninth judicial district of the United States for the State of Nevada; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WINDOM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1288) for the relief of William Webster; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1289) to invest the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to hear all titles and claims of titles in the unpatented lands in the southwest fractional quarter of section 10, township 39 north, range 14 east of the third principal meridian, in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, and State of Illinois, and to invest the proper claimant or claimants of said lands with the legal title thereof by the decree of said court; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GROVER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1290) to amend sections 2586 and 2587 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1291) to provide permanent reservations for the Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, Assinaboine, and Gros Ventre tribes of Indians, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1292) to repeal an act to amend section 2403 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to deposits for surveys, approved March 3, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1293) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Wilkins military reservation at Copper Harbor, in the State of Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1294) for the relief of Jesse Carter and his assignees or representatives; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1295) for the relief of the representatives of Sylvia Wilford, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIR (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1296) for the relief of Lieutenant C. C. Norton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That Francis S. Davidson have leave to withdraw the papers heretofore filed in his case from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Asa Faulkner and others be withdrawn from the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of J. C. Rudd be taken from the files of the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offered a resolution the other day by instruction of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, providing for summoning certain witnesses with a view of giving them their fees. I did not word it very carefully, and the officer does not feel authorized to pay under it, therefore I offer the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to which have been referred bills and petitions for reform in the civil service, be authorized to send for persons and papers, and that the necessary expenses be paid out of the appropriation for special and select committees.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That, as a mark of proper and becoming respect and honor to the memory of George Washington, when the Senate adjourns to-day it will adjourn until Thursday next at twelve o'clock meridian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the resolution is before the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] on the 12th of January, relative to the arrears of pensions act.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to lay aside temporarily this business for the purpose of taking up the bill I have indicated heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine to lay aside the unfinished business so as to proceed to the consideration of the apportionment bill? The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution will be laid aside.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I know so surely what is the feeling of the Senate, and I am so anxious myself that this bill should be put speedily through to final passage, that I do not propose to occupy the time by any remarks upon this bill, simply saying that it speaks for itself. It is the House bill in which 325 is the number fixed by that body as the composition for the next ten years of the House of Representatives. I have endeavored with some faithfulness to study the subject, to read the debate in the House, which seemed to me to be very exhaustive, and I have tried to put myself in an attitude where I should be able to answer any question that any Senator might think fit to ask or to meet any amendment; and so, rather than take more time of the Senate at this hour, desiring that the bill shall pass to-day, all the more because we are to adjourn over to-morrow, I will take no further time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. While for myself and for the State which I have the honor in part to represent we would have preferred a smaller number of Representatives, would have preferred the number now in existence 293, or 307, as I believe was proposed, yet on looking over the bill carefully, believing that it is made as fair as it can be if the present number is increased at all, I shall vote in favor of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I very much regret that there has been so large an increase of representation in the other House. I believe it will operate very much to its inefficiency; but I do not feel at liberty to offer an amendment. If the House prefer this number to any other I shall vote for the bill, but I cannot conceive, if we are to increase the number at every decade by 30 or more, where we can have a room of sufficient capacity to hold the House of Representatives. I think that a lesser number would give to Representatives in the House a larger and more intelligent control of the business than they will have if it is made so large as it is now proposed; that is to say, if there are 290 or 250 members of the House, I believe that such a number would more contribute to the order and practical efficiency of business of the House of Representatives than any larger number.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong a discussion on a bill upon which the Senate seems ready to vote, and which requires prompt action by reason of the condition of business in several State Legislatures; but I desire before voting for this bill to say that I very cordially agree with what has been said by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

It is a marvelous illustration of the patience of the American people that it has submitted so long to the system of rules which prevails in its great representative body. It is almost impossible to obtain a hearing for measures of great public interest, measures peremptorily demanded for the reformation of great abuses, measures upon which the hearts of large numbers of the people are set. Still less is it possible while that system of rules prevails to obtain a hearing for private demands, demands upon the Government required by the plain dictates of justice, disregard of which by a private person under like circumstances would cover his character with disgrace. I have known, as every other member of this body has known in the course of his service, cases which have come to the attention of this body which have met its unanimous sympathy, on which it had acted, and which had gone to the other House, there session after session and Congress after Congress to die in the hands of committees which agreed on favorable reports, because it was impossible to get the attention of the House. That result comes largely, if not wholly, from the large numbers which compose the body; and the effect of that is not merely, as I have said, to make it an imperfect system of legislation, but to throw the power of that House into the hands of its Speaker or into the hands of a few veteran leaders who are chairmen of its important committees. The struggle for the remedy of abuses in this country does not grow out of opposition upon fair vote or in fair debate; it grows out of the incapacity to bring the interests of the American people properly to the attention of its Congress.

But I have been satisfied from much reflection that the cure of this evil will be found, not in resisting every ten years the increase which always comes up and always will come up when an apportionment bill is presented, but by permitting it to go on until a concentrated public attention and a concentrated public demand for a remedy for the cure of this very evil is aroused. Each ten years some State, of course, if the ratio of representation remains the same, must lose a Representative, and the sympathies of members of the House are aroused for the Representatives of a State upon which such loss is likely to be inflicted. Two Representatives, of course, must be thrown into one district, and their associates and fellow-members endeavor to save that result or to have it extend to as small a degree as possible, by increasing slightly and gradually the representation. The number of Representatives has gone up from 65 as it was in the first Congress until now it is proposed to have 325 by this bill, in addition to Delegates from the Territories who have seats on the floor. It multiplies the original number five-fold; and the business of the country, of course, is increased in an infinitely larger proportion.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to record my belief and my prophecy that sooner or later the judgment of the people will imperatively demand a very large reduction in the numbers of the other House. The individual dignity of the Representative, the capacity to make of that body a body for debate, the capacity even to offer amendments to pending legislation is destroyed by this increase of the numbers of the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, all that the Senator from Massachusetts has said revives my recollection and experience of several years' service with him in the other branch of the national Legislature. I do not think it would be difficult upon the many things that his fruitful mind has suggested for me to take an hour; but I am much more desirous, as I have said, of passing the bill and getting it through surely to-day, so that there may be no question in the waiting Legislatures that now stand ready to act upon our legislation here as to what their course may be, and so I will not even touch upon the subjects that he has named. I agree with him, if I could have my way the numbers in the other House should remain where they are or be lessened. I do not suppose that to be a possible thing now. The Committee on the Census so believe. We thought this the best bill we could get, and I believe it is the only bill that can be put through.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am not willing to concur entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts. I cannot believe that the embarrassment in the transaction of public business arises from the numbers in the Senate or in the House, especially in the House. There are two great evils to be removed, on neither of which shall I dwell at any length, but I desire to mention them in contrast to what the Senator has said.

In the first place, the members of the legislative branch of the Government must be relieved from so much of the duties of the executive branch as they have been undertaking to discharge by way of selection and choice among applicants for appointments and the recommendation of persons for employment in the different Executive Departments. I mean that this is to be done by some reform in the civil service, whatever it may be, in accordance with whatever plan may be adopted, that shall relieve us from this great and painful burden, so that we may devote ourselves to that for which we were sent here.

In the second place, I believe there is no government in the civilized world that is so grossly unjust as this Government in the manner in which it has been treating private claimants of a great variety of description. I do not refer alone to those claims that come here asking for small or large sums of money; I refer to the vast number of petitions for individual relief in connection with the Army and Navy and that whole field which I need not dwell upon, the Senate understand it so well. In Great Britain you will hear no such debates in the House of Commons or House of Lords as are had here upon a matter of fifty or one hundred or five hundred dollars where a soldier had his clothing burned by the burning of barracks, and a bill must be passed for his relief, or where there was a little change in a contract by which a contractor is justly entitled to $500 or more, and we have an argument of two hours upon it some afternoon. You do not hear it there, because there is a simple and just process provided by which an honest claimant can go to a proper authority with his petition, have the petition referred to a reasonable and sensible tribunal, and that can decide upon it and award justice without troubling the national legislature at all. That we can certainly do.

There are bills running up to $10,000,000 against this Government. I refer now to the French spoliations claims more particularly. There are claims against this Government from $5 up that are just as honestly due from us as our weekly or monthly board bills, and yet the parties have been hammering at these doors from one month to eighty years without avail. It is a national disgrace in that view of it, and besides that it is that which is practically destroying the legislative usefulness of Congress. It must be amended as the country grows larger, or we shall be hopelessly swamped by attempting to do the duties of a justice's and common pleas court.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I do not understand that there is any exigency arising from the condition of State legislation which requires that this bill should pass at any particular time inasmuch as by its terms special provision is made that where representation is reduced or enlarged, action may be had without regard to legislative action.

Mr. HALE. Is not the Senator aware that at the present time there are Legislatures in session that are waiting and prolonging their session in order to act under this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that there are.

Mr. HALE. There are some.

Mr. INGALLS. If there are such, I feel at liberty to say to them that they can safely adjourn; that none of their rights will be imperiled, and that none of the representation to which their State is entitled will be lost.

But I did not rise so much for that purpose as to enter my protest against the idea suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont, that safety to republican institutions rests in small representative bodies. Sir, the popular branch of the British Parliament, the House of Commons, consists of 652 members. It has never had less than 275 since the days of Edward the First, and I believe that the only safeguard against the encroachment of prerogative, against the aristocratic tendency of this age, is in a great popular representative assembly that shall come directly from the people and be directly responsible to the people; and rather than reduce the number of the House of Representatives to 275, I would prefer to increase it to 500 to-day.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Is not the Senator aware that one result in the British House of Commons of its having greatly increased in numbers to over 600, is the habit or practice of absenteeism, that out of it has come the rule that a number so small as forty is a quorum in the British House of Commons for the transaction of business. So it results that the business, the routine business of the British Empire is not done by its 650 represenatives, but nine-tenths of it by forty or fifty or sixty men, as the gentleman knows if he has ever looked down upon the House of Commons.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine does not instruct me on that subject. What he states is not in accordance with the laws of practice and procedure in that body. I have never had the felicity of looking down upon the deliberations from the gallery of that historic chamber upon the fifty or sixty members of the House who were engaged in protecting the civil and constitutional liberties of the British Empire. What I will say in response to his observation is this, that forty members are not a quorum for the transaction of business in the House of Commons, but that they have adopted the rule that the presence of forty members shall be sufficient to constitute a House for the dispatch of ordinary business, and that when there is a number less than forty present the Speaker is at liberty to declare the House adjourned. That is all the figure that the number forty cuts in the House of Commons.

Mr. HALE. Is not that a substantial quorum?

Mr. INGALLS. A substantial quorum?

Mr. HALE. For the transaction of business.

Mr. INGALLS. It is a sufficient number to permit the Journal to be read and to permit the ordinary routine business of the House to be transacted when there is no demand for a division or an expression of opinion by yeas and nays upon a proposition that is submitted to the judgment of the House, just the same as we here often in this Chamber, without the presence of more than five Senators upon either side, have ordinary routine business transacted. I have seen bills passed here time and time again with a single vote on one side and none on the other. But the assertion that forty members are a constitutional quorum for the transaction of business that is submitted to the judgment of the House of Commons is not historically correct.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that three appropriation bills have passed by forty members, or a few above?

Mr. INGALLS. So they are here passed without five members sometimes.

Mr. HALE. But does not the Senator see that that is essentially different? I know that he sees it with his logical mind.

Mr. INGALLS. Thank you!

Mr. HALE. The essential difference is that the Senator never saw a bill passed here unless one-half the members of the body were present if a single member objected, while in the British House of Commons forty members present with the speaker in the chair may pass any bill; a supply bill, an appropriation bill for millions of pounds sterling, and a single objection cannot prevent it, when here a single objection prevents anything passing unless there are thirty-nine Senators present and voting.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Maine has had the advantage of foreign travel and of personal inspection of the House of Commons; but he never was more mistaken than when he says that if there is a demand for a division of the House of Commons upon any money bill or any question on which their judgment is demanded forty members can act as a constitutional quorum to decide those questions. It is not correct. It is true, as I have said, that we frequently pass great appropriation bills here involving millions of money when there are not five Senators in their seats; but that does not change the fact that it requires a majority of one more than half to form a quorum in case there is a constitutional demand for a division and a request for the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me say to the Senator——

Mr. INGALLS. But this is all immaterial.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me just a word?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I have had the same advantages that the Senator has had with regard to foreign travel, and no more. My figure of looking down upon the House of Commons from the galleries did not come from experience. I have read something, as the Senator has, of the history of transactions in the British House of Commons. If it is not true that forty members constitute a quorum practically for the transaction of business in the British House of Commons, then my reading, whatever it may have been upon the subject, has led me astray, and therein I do not agree with the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. But, as I said, this is immaterial, Mr. President. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts how many members the lower house of his Legislature consists of.

Mr. HOAR. Two hundred and forty.

Mr. INGALLS. Two hundred and forty in a total population of—how many in the State?

Mr. HOAR. One million eight hundred thousand.

Mr. INGALLS. One million eight hundred thousand?

Mr. HOAR. Thereabout.

Mr. INGALLS. And in New Hampshire, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire how many members the lower house of that Legislature consists of?

Mr. BLAIR. About three hundred and sixty-five.

Mr. INGALLS. Three hundred and sixty-five members represent the people of New Hampshire in their popular branch.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Kansas propound the same question to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes. I should like to know what the ideas of constitutional liberty and popular representation are in Vermont.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Kansas has——

Mr. INGALLS. I am asking the Senator from Vermont a question now. I should like to know how many there are in Vermont?

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator——

Mr. HOAR. I yield under the rule to the admirable courtesy of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Kansas asks me what the ideas are in Vermont of constitutional liberty.

Mr. INGALLS. I asked the Senator how many members there were in the lower popular branch of the Vermont Legislature.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator asks me that now, but that was not the question he originally propounded.

Mr. INGALLS. I said, for the purpose of ascertaining what the views of the people of Vermont were on the question of civil and constitutional liberty, I would like to know how many members there were in the lower house.

Mr. MORRILL. The views of Vermont are very radical on this subject, and having originally given to each of the towns in the State the privilege of one representative, it cannot be changed. There are about two hundred and forty.

Mr. INGALLS. About two hundred and forty. Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts. I beg his pardon for seeming to have been abrupt. I wanted to hear the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas asked me the numbers of the State Legislature of Massachusetts.

Mr. INGALLS. In the lower branch.

Mr. HOAR. I replied that there are 240, and I should like to add to that a statement which may seem to the Senator from Kansas somewhat to fortify his argument that formerly there were about 600. I served in that Legislature myself, after the separation from the State of Maine, when it contained 408 or 410 members; but the point which I desired to make, and to which the Senator was replying, is this: not that a more popular branch is not better, where it can transact business, but that the House of Representatives, doing not the business of a little State, not the business of a territory one hundred miles by fifty, but the business required by the vast commerce and manufactures and administration of justice of a great commercial and manufacturing and agricultural nation of 50,000,000 people, had been compelled by the existing numbers of that body to establish a system of rules which has destroyed the freedom of debate, which has destroyed the freedom of amendment, and which has destroyed the dignity of the individual member.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, like Maine and like Vermont and like other American States, preserves for all practical purposes the freedom of debate. The measures which concern that State are discussed to the content of every member of its legislative body. But does not the Senator know perfectly well that if a measure concerning the deepest interests, not only of that State but of the American people, is brought forward in the House of Representatives the chairman of the committee that introduces the bill determines whether there shall be any debate on it, how long that debate shall last, who shall speak for it, who shall speak against it, and whether a single member of that House shall have the opportunity to offer an amendment? The fugitive slave law, a measure which stirred the hearts of the people of this country to their depths, was passed, and it was not in the power of a Representative of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or of liberty-loving Vermont even to propose to that House to incorporate in that measure a jury trial of the question whether the man demanded was a slave.

Now, that is not the great public body; that is not the popular representation; that is not the freedom of legislation or of debate known to the English constitution or known to the experience and traditions of American liberty; and when the House of Representatives can restore to the man who sits there the right to vote, the right to speak upon the measure on which he is compelled under the Constitution to vote, then let it enlarge its membership; but those rights are much more important in my judgment to popular liberty than the mere right of sitting a dumb, uninfluential herd upon the seats of the American House of Representatives.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the condition of things that exists in the House of Representatives is not due to the number of men who sit there, but to the pernicious practices that have been introduced there. There are no Commonwealths on this continent where civil and religious and constitutional liberty are dearer to the people, or where they are protected and enforced with more jealous care than they are in the State of Massachusetts, of which I am proud to be a son, and the States of Vermont and New Hampshire.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. Massachusetts has reduced her membership from 600 to 240.

Mr. INGALLS. Very true, Mr. President; but if the United States were represented in their lower branch by the same ratio that now exists in Massachusetts there would be a House of Representatives of more than 2,500 men, and I have yet to learn that the number of the representatives of the people of Massachusetts in the popular branch of her legislature has not been one of the strongest and most efficient guarantees which her people have enjoyed for the protection of those immemorial rights that were bequeathed to her by the Pilgrim Fathers when the settlement of New England was made; and I am astonished to hear in this body the Senators of those ancient Commonwealths, those original representative democracies, whose politics were originally founded upon the idea of the town-meeting where every citizen participated, come here and represent that the safety and liberty of this country require that popular representation should be reduced down to monarchical and aristocratic limits.

I do not propose to continue the debate on this bill. There is, of course, no danger that the number will be reduced, nor is there any practical difficulty in the numbers proposed by this bill or those that may be introduced under subsequent censuses, provided the House of Representatives adopts the rules of proceeding and the practices of parliamentary debate that prevail in the States of those Senators who are now demanding the abrogation of these ancient rights of representation.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not desire to continue this discussion except to say a few words in reply to the honorable Senator from Kansas.

In the first place, that Senator errs (or I do) when he says that the number of forty is not a quorum of the House of Commons. Unless I have entirely misread, and quite recently, the constitutional provisions which prevail in that house in England, if the most important measure which can be brought before the House of Commons be up for debate and for decision and there be a division, forty votes on both sides suffice. The Senator spoke of the call for the yeas and nays there; I suppose that he undoubtedly spoke inadvertently when he said that. There is no call of the yeas and nays there——

Mr. INGALLS. The tellers take a printed list containing the names of members of the House of Commons and check them off, one by one, as they come in on the one side or the other of the lobby. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. HOAR. The printed list is no part of the machine; they simply count the numbers, but there is no record of the vote of the individual member. The printed list is for mere identification of the member; that is all. If there be a count, a division called for, and they go out into the two lobbies on each side, and 35 members vote one way and 6 another, the bill is passed by a constitutional majority and according to constitutional forms.

Mr. President, the trouble with the position of the honorable Senator from Kansas is this: he contends for the increase of the numbers of the popular branch, when such increase makes it impossible for them to continue to perform the duties of legislation. When the Massachusetts Legislature sat for a State composed of four, or five, or six hundred thousand persons, they could dispose of all the legislative business which that Commonwealth required to be done as they could have done it in a town meeting, if it had been necessary, of a town composed of 2,000 inhabitants; but when commerce grew, when manufactures grew, when wealth grew, when trade grew, the number of questions which were brought to the solution of that body grew so much that it was impossible, with a body of that size, to transact the business which six hundred men had not been too many to transact when the State was smaller, and therefore they were obliged to reduce their number. Will the Senator from Kansas accept his own logic and say that he is in favor of a lower House under our Constitution of 2,500?

Mr. INGALLS. Why, Mr. President, the Senator cannot certainly attempt to place me in that position. I am attacking his position, not he mine.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator, speaking in the first place with commendation of the ancient numbers of the legislative bodies of Massachusetts and Vermont, said that according to that ratio the national House of Representatives would be a body of 2,500 persons; and the very statement which he made showed that he could not derive from the experience of Massachusetts the conclusion to which his argument would seem to point.

Mr. INGALLS. I was showing by the condition of things that existed in the Senator's own State the fallacy of his position.

Mr. HOAR. My position is precisely this, that the number of the legislative body should be so large as is possible consistently with the transaction of legislative business under the particular circumstances of the body politic for which it legislates.

Now the suggestion which is made for the preservation of the numbers of the House of Representatives and continuing to do business under its present rules is that a large portion of what is now legislative business shall be assigned to commissions, or to courts of claims, or to tribunals of an infinitely less popular character than the House. When in Massachusetts there was increase in the demand for legislation, it diminished, it was compelled to diminish nearly by two-thirds, the numbers of its popular legislative body; and in this country of fifty millions the Senator will be compelled to do one of two things: either to put a large portion of the legislative power of this country into commissions, or to deprive the large portion of the body of the power of debate and amendment and give it into the hands of a few members of the House, or to reduce sooner or later the numbers of that House to a body that will be capable of performing its legislative business intelligently and with dignity.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have sent for May's Parliamentary Practice, where it is settled very clearly that forty constitute a quorum of the British House of Commons; but I do not think that is important here and now; it is a side matter, and I do not ask that the authority be read. I simply inquire what is the present state of the question before the Senate. Is there any amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendment has been proposed.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate, having been reported from the Committee of the Whole. It is open to amendment. If there be no amendment, the question is on the third reading.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make a correction of a statement I made a short time ago. The question was asked in reference to the present numbers of the house of representatives of my State. Its numbers were considerably reduced by a very recent change of the constitution. The present Legislature consists in the lower house of 293 members.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I did not think of retarding the passage of this bill even for a moment. I merely desired to express my opinion in favor of a smaller number for the House of Representatives. The references that have been made to the British House of Parliament, I think, are not fully understood by all who have spoken upon that subject. The House of Commons and the House of Lords provide room for about two-thirds of their number, giving twenty inches on a bench for each member; but when the houses are larger than that number they have to take seats in the galleries. On most important questions—take, for instance, the division that occurred within a fortnight. There were less than two hundred who voted in the House of Commons on a most important question that was pending there; and decided I think about one hundred and thirty, who were in the majority, and less than half that number in the minority.

Then there is another vast difference between the House of Commons and the House of Representatives of the United States. There the bills are all prepared by the ministry; their committees do not consider them until they are sent to them by the executive authority. It is different here.

I appeal to Senators who were with me members of the House of Representatives twenty years ago. Then it was a rule that all the appropriation bills should be reported in the first month of the session, and yet now we have consumed nearly three months of the regular session and I suppose not one-quarter part of the regular appropriation bills have been reported to the House.

Again, I appeal to the knowledge of Senators who were in the House twenty years ago, when order was maintained there and the Speaker sat in his chair. Now the Speaker has to stand up all the time and speak in a stentorian voice, and constantly by rapping on the desk to maintain order in a little circle round about the chair, and it is a fact that very few members of the House are able to participate understandingly in the transaction of business.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope we may have a vote.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution in reference to the arrears of pensions act is before the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by Mr. INGALLS on the 12th of January:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the act of January 25, 1879, commonly known as the arrears of pensions act, ought not to be repealed.

The pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BUTLER to add at the end of the resolution the following:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the needy or disabled soldiers of the Mexican war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the question is put, I understood the Senator from South Carolina to agree to a modification of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, he cannot modify it now.

Mr. INGALLS. He can by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course he can. Anything may be done by unanimous consent,

Mr. PLATT. The yeas and nays were ordered on my motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert after the word "disabled" the words "in the line of duty."

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Then it does not need a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be read as modified.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the needy or disabled soldiers in the line of duty of the Mexican war.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL,] in order to cover his point, that after the word "Mexican," the words "and Indian" be inserted, and that "war" be changed to "wars." That would cover the entire proposition offered by the Senator from Florida, and save us the trouble of voting on an independent amendment.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. Then let the amendment be read as modified.

Mr. CALL. I suggest, however, that the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa be a little changed so as to read properly. I suggest as the proper phraseology to say, "needy soldiers or those disabled in the line of duty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the wording of the amendment should be in this wise:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war—

And then insert any other war that may be agreed upon—

Who are needy, or disabled in the line of their duty.

Does the Senator from Kansas accept the modification?

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question touching his amendment. All those who were disabled in the line of duty were originally pensioned under the law, and those who engaged in the rebellion or sympathized with it were stricken from the pension-rolls for that reason. If this should become a law would it restore them to the pension-list?

Mr. BUTLER. That is my understanding.

Mr. INGALLS. This cannot become a law; it is a mere resolution.

Mr. FRYE. It is only a declaration of sentiment; that is, if we vote for the amendment we vote in favor of restoring to the pension-rolls those soldiers of the Mexican war who were disabled in the line of duty.

Mr. INGALLS. That is to be discussed hereafter.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope that will be the effect of it; and I have no doubt in the world the Senator from Maine will be on our side on that occasion.

Mr. FRYE. I am in favor of restoring them to the rolls if they were disabled in the line of duty.

Mr. BUTLER. So I supposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Florida to accept the amendment of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CALL. I accept it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to have the amendment divided. It applies to all who are needy or who were disabled in the line of their duty. Those who were disabled in the line of duty are entitled to pensions now, except such persons as were excluded by participation in the rebellion; and those who are needy have not necessarily become so on account of exposure or service in the line of their duty.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is a fair presumption.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think it is a fair presumption.

Mr. BUTLER. I adopted that phraseology upon the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who stated that to be the rule now touching claimants for pensions on account of service in the war of 1812.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not understand that persons who served in that war and who have become needy are thereby entitled to a pension.

Mr. BUTLER. That I understand to be the rule.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That was the rule in regard to pensioning Revolutionary soldiers.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Revolutionary soldiers were all pensioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Florida as accepting the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CALL. I accept the language suggested by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment will read as follows:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars who are needy, or disabled in the line of their duty.

Mr. BUTLER. That is it, sir.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from South Carolina, or any other Senator, would present a definite proposition to restore to the pension-rolls the soldiers of the Mexican war who would receive pensions but for the fact that they are deprived of them by reason of their participation in the rebellion, I think it would meet with the approval of the Senate, but in this resolution we are asked to do altogether too many things. I do not think it is wise action. I doubt very much the propriety of our being called upon here to express opinions upon abstract questions. I certainly do not want to express to-day a legislative opinion that because a man is needy who has at some time fought in some war, he is therefore to receive a pension. The word "needy" is a relative term, and it is an elastic term. If the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] who fought in the Mexican war, has no private fortune and has only his salary here as a Senator to live upon, I venture to say that he is needy and would be as much entitled to a pension, if such a law should be passed, as the man who labors at $1.50 a day. This matter of need, as I understand, is an element which has never been introduced into our pension laws. It in no way comes from the service.

Mr. INGALLS. Every dependent relative has to establish the fact of need.

Mr. PLATT. That is entirely a different matter.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator said it had never been recognized in the pension law.

Mr. PLATT. With reference to the soldier.

Mr. INGALLS. It is the original proposition in regard to all dependent relatives.

Mr. PLATT. Not with regard to the soldier. I know that the mother must establish her dependence upon the son, and so on.

Mr. HOAR. Does my honorable friend from Connecticut overlook the history of the Revolutionary pensions?

Mr. PLATT. I remember the allusion that was made to that yesterday. I suppose that ought to be excepted from my statement.

Mr. HOAR. I studied that up very carefully a little while ago, but I have mislaid the reference to the statutes. However, the Senator will find that for nearly fifty years after the Revolutionary war that principle was preserved in regard to Revolutionary pensions.

Mr. PLATT. It was not the principle with regard to the war of 1812, which has been alluded to here. The survivors of that war were pensioned simply because they had been connected with the service.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me; they were not pensioned until most of them must have been eighty years old or thereabout, so far as the soldiers themselves were concerned.

Mr. PLATT. They were not pensioned until about sixty years after the war had closed?

Mr. HOAR. It was about fifty-five years after the war had closed.

Mr. PLATT. Now it is proposed within thirty-five years after the Mexican war closed practically and substantially to pension all who served in that war; for anybody who has observed the course of pension legislation will bear me witness that this expression on the part of the Senate to-day will result in the pensioning of every person who served in the Mexican war. We are voting here to-day in this quiet, drowsy manner, a hundred million, yes, a hundred and fifty million dollars out of the Treasury of the United States for these pensions. That is precisely what we are doing.

Mr. MORRILL. And the pensions will date back?

Mr. ANTHONY. There will be arrears?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether it will include arrears or not; but I have no hesitation in asserting it as my belief that if the survivors of the Mexican and Indian wars are to be pensioned, and the widows of those who are dead, it will cost more than $150,000,000. I do not wish to be committed to any principle of that sort until a bill is presented here the features of which I can study and understand; but it will be useless to attempt to consider the features of a bill after we have committed ourselves to the principle as we are asked to-day to commit ourselves. It is the old story of the camel putting his nose within the tent, and then his shoulders, and finally the whole body of the animal. This is giving permission to the camel to insert his nose within the door of the tent. I cannot, for one, and I shall not, upon an abstract proposition of this sort, commit myself in its favor.

Mr. BECK. I desire to offer an additional resolution as an amendment, which is to add the following:

Resolved further, That the Committee on Pensions be directed to inquire into the expediency of requiring the Commissioner of Pensions to cause printed lists of all persons, whether they are officers, soldiers, or the widows, children, or dependent relatives of officers or soldiers of the Army of the United States in the civil war who are either drawing or applying for pensions, to be kept posted in some conspicuous place accessible to the public, in the post-office where the pensioners or claimants receive their mails, giving the names in full, their rank, and the regiments, companies in which the officer or soldier served, when his claim originated, the time when the original application for a pension was made, the time when granted, the amount of the pension allowed, and the arrears paid to or claimed by each. The committee is further directed to inquire in the expediency, first, of requiring each officer and employés in each of the Departments and bureaus of the Government of the United States to forward at once to the Commissioner of Pensions all information which may be furnished to them by any person or of which he or she may have or obtain knowledge or information relative to frauds or irregularities in relation to pension cases or claims, on pain of dismissal from the service; second, as to the organization of a board of officers in the Pension Bureau in Washington to examine the information thus furnished, and report to the Commissioner what steps, in their opinion, should be taken in the various cases as to which information is furnished; and, third, whether or not all such communications from officers and employés of the Government directed to the Commissioner of Pensions ought to pass through the mails free of postage.

Mr. INGALLS. That is intended as an instruction to the Committee on Pensions to inquire into certain matters.

Mr. BECK. That is all, as to the expediency of having this done.

Mr. INGALLS. I see no objection to it.

Mr. BECK. If it is right, that they shall do it; and if it is wrong, that they shall not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will not be in order until the pending question is disposed of. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that for the present his amendment will lie upon the table.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yesterday I offered an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, but at that time my amendment was not in order. I move now to amend the amendment by striking out the words "needy or;" so as to read:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars who were disabled in the line of their duty.

Mr. HARRIS. Was not that language incorporated in the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina as an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. INGALLS. Not by a vote of the Senate. It was accepted by me as a modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No vote of the Senate has been had upon it.

Mr. INGALLS. So that it is subject to amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. It was an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, was it not?

Mr. INGALLS. But accepted.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It was accepted. There was no vote of the Senate adopting the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. It was not placed upon the amendment by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Then it appears as part of the original amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, he having modified his amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. That is true.

Mr. HARRIS. That being true, it is amendable in my opinion, but otherwise it would not be subject to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment was simply accepted. The amendment then would read, that pensions ought to be granted "to the soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars who were disabled in the line of their duty," not those who were needy or disabled, but those disabled.

Mr. ANTHONY. Are not those who were disabled in the line of their duty pensioned now?

Mr. ALLISON. Not all of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to make a speech upon this question at all, but it seems to me that the whole philosophy of the subject of pensions is misunderstood. The principle underlying the whole question is simply that our Government, unlike any other great one, relies entirely upon its militia for its defense and for its aggression. We believe it to be cheaper to pension the soldiers than to keep great standing armies in the field; and our Government says to these men when they go to war, "If you are wounded or disabled you shall be pensioned and taken care of, and when you grow old and become infirm the Government will keep you out of the poor-house." That is the whole case in a nutshell.

I did not intend to say anything upon the original resolution of my friend from Kansas, nor upon the amendments of my friends from South Carolina and Florida. We are not enacting a law, but we are merely expressing the sense of the Senate as to whether it is wise to repeal a law already upon the statute-books, (and looking to the repeal of which nobody has made a motion upon the floor of the Senate,) and also as to the enactment of a new law, not to give pensions for wounds or disabilities received in the service, but to give pensions for infirmity occurring from extreme age or indigence.

In regard to the wisdom or unwisdom of the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, it is not in issue here. The simple question is, ought that law to be repealed? While I will not pronounce upon the opportuneness or propriety of the introduction of the resolution at this time, I shall vote for it, because I am opposed to the repeal of what is called the arrearage of pensions act. I was not a member of Congress when that act was passed, but I happened to be here on a visit, and I was upon the floor of both Houses while the discussion and voting were going on. I remember well that there was great opposition to the proposed enactment outside, but very little opposition to it inside of Congress. People were saying that it was the politicians, and Congress, and the pension agents, and not the soldiers of the country, who were urging the passage of such a law. I remember that I heard it frequently said on the floor of the House, "Oh, let us all vote for it; the Senate will kill it anyhow." But the Senate did not vote against it; the Senate did not kill it. On the contrary the Senate passed the bill by an overwhelming majority.

The bill passed the Democratic House and it passed the Senate almost unanimously, and the Senate was Republican. Democrats and Republicans alike seemed to vie with each other as to who should do the most at that time for the poor, wounded soldier. If the law was wrong both parties are alike responsible for it, and both parties should now stand by it. A law may be wrong in its inception when it is passed, but after its enactment, when the rights of the people have been adapted to it, it may inflict a more grievous wrong to repeal it. We all believed, at least my party and a great many of the opposing party did, that the putting of the ballot in the hands of the newly emancipated slaves was wrong; but to take the franchise away from the negroes now would be a much greater wrong, and nobody is in favor of doing that.

I regretted the other day that my friend from Kansas in his opening speech took occasion to make what I considered an unkind fling against the confederate soldiers. It was not in the least in keeping with his amiable and sweet disposition, for he is as remarkable for the sweetness of his temper as he is for the clearness and vigor of his thoughts. I feel sure that in a moment of excitement in debate he was betrayed into saying (I quote from memory only, but I know that I quote him substantially right) that there were three bills now in the other House, introduced all of them by Democrats and two of them by confederate soldiers, for the repeal of the act known as the arrearage act. I do not know what there is in all that; I have no information myself upon the subject, and if I had I do not know that it would be proper and right to speak of it here; but one thing I do know, that the confederate soldiers as a mass cherish no animosity against the Federal soldiers.

Sir, a brave man loves a brave man, whether he is on his side or fights against him. He loves the man who fights on his side a little the best, it may be, and you cannot censure him for it; but he does not hate the other fellow for all that. I remember a touching scene that attended the surrender of the confederate army under General Johnston in Georgia. I remember how the men came together, confederate and Federal; how the boys who wore the blue and the boys who wore the gray hugged each other for their joy at the prospect of peace. The Yankees brought whisky into camp and our fellows brought tobacco, and they filled up their flasks and all got mellow. That was the feeling then, and all their animosity ended with that feeling.

This fraternization, this cordial reunion of the brave men who had fought the battles is the foundation to-day of the union, of the peace, of the prosperity, of the greatness, and glory, and power of our country. I have often thought that if the questions growing out of the war had been left for settlement to the men who fought the battles we should have had peace in one year, and in five years all the deep furrows of war would have been smoothed; but the management of our affairs fell into the hands of men who had taken no personal risk in the war, men who had stayed at home and made money out of the blood and misery of the country while the soldiers were fighting its battles. They picked up all the devilment that has disturbed the peace of the country since the war; they got desperately mad when the war was ended, and they wanted to fight tremendously then. I do not want to say anything more on that subject.

I shall vote for the resolution, and I shall vote for the amendment of my friend from South Carolina, and the amendment of my friend from Florida, because I believe the time has come when these old veteran soldiers should be pensioned. There are but a few survivors, not more than a handful of the warriors of the Indian wars; and let me say to my friend from Connecticut, that there are not more than 8,600 surviving soldiers of the Mexican war. I say that the time has come when they should be placed on the pension-roll, just as the soldiers of the revolution and of the war of 1812 were placed there. If you intend to do anything for these old men, in the name of God do it before they die; do it before they go where pensions cannot follow them. These are the men whose valor protected the helpless women and children of our frontier against the scalping knife and tomahawk of the ruthless savage foe; and in their old days it is merely asked that the Senate shall declare it to be the true policy of the country that their names should be placed upon the pension-rolls.

My colleague [Mr. BECK] astonished me a little the other day by a discovery which he made, remarkable indeed, that there were so many stalwart and wealthy soldiers in the Mexican war now living who are in Congress and out of Congress. This will be news to my people at home; it will be news to all of us everywhere. By all the figures he could bring he showed that only 9 per cent. of the soldiers of the Mexican war were in indigent circumstances. This is a new discovery of my friend and colleague. All those soldiers are sixty years of age or over. I am over that myself, and I was one of the youngest boys who went to the war. Talk about the two Houses of Congress being filled with soldiers of the Mexican war! As far as I can understand, upon inquiry, there is but one soldier of the Mexican war at the other end of the Capitol, and there are but three in the Senate.

Modest men never boast of their wealth and proud men always hate to parade their poverty; but I know it is news to my friends, General LOGAN and General MAXEY, as well as to myself, that we are hereafter to be classed with that most excellent, highly respectable, and solid class of our community whose names are always mentioned with affection—I mean "the bloated bondholders." Sir, this is a matter of great surprise to the assessors and tax-payers of our States. They would think that General LOGAN, General MAXEY, and myself have been cheating our States out of revenue all this time. My colleague meant nothing by all this. I know he will come up all right when the voting comes, as he always does; but he got a little off; he had a little buck-fever on him, like my friend from Kansas had. His foot slipped a little; yes, he flew the track; but he always comes back in time to win the race before it is over; he gets on exactly where he went off.

Mr. President, I want to say one thing more, which is that not only a resolution but a bill has twice passed the House of Representatives to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war, and once it was passed by a unanimous vote. Twenty-six States of this Union have instructed their Senators and requested their Representatives to vote for putting the soldiers of the Mexican war upon the pension roll. Here are the States: Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, California, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, Nevada, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Maryland, Missouri, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Alabama, Arkansas, and West Virginia. My State instructed me; it instructed my predecessors. Let me say that every instinct of my nature and every pulsation of my heart is in strict accord with the resolutions of that proud old State instructing me, and it is not only a duty that I discharge here, but it is a delightful one.

I shall not detain the Senate any longer upon this question, but I must express the hope, as twenty-six States represented upon this floor have instructed their Senators through their Legislatures to vote to put these old veterans of the Mexican war upon the pension roll, that it may be done. If you are willing to go back upon the soldiers, can you go back upon your own State? I know that in my State every man, woman, and child and negro in it is in favor of pensioning these soldiers. I shall have something to say when the bills themselves come up, but I shall not detain the Senate any longer now. I merely desired to put upon record the reasons which influence my vote.

I am sure that to repeal the arrears of pensions act would not save one dollar to the Treasury. Nearly all the claims are now in, for the limitation took effect on the 1st of July, 1880. All the officers who had arrearages amounting to thousands of dollars coming to them, and the strong men, have pressed their claims through and have gotten their money. Nobody is behind but the small fellows, the humble and poor soldiers, who moved perhaps to a new State and never heard of the law for a year after its passage. Will any Senator think of shutting down upon these men now? Would it not be manifestly unjust, after letting all the big fellows get through, to shut down the mill now with all these little grists waiting for their turn? It would be a monstrous injustice; and if you should do it you would not save a dollar to the Treasury. Then what is the use of all this fuss about the arrearages of pensions? It is the law upon the statute-book made by the Republicans and Democrats, and let the Democrats and Republicans stand together on this question at least and keep faith with the soldiers. Let us keep faith with the old soldiers as well as the young ones, the men who taught the soldiers of the late war the art of fighting; for let me say to you that scarcely a soldier of the late war distinguished himself who was not trained in the Mexican war. Have you ever thought of that, Senators?

Mr. President, I have said a great deal more than I intended to say when I rose. I shall say nothing more until the bills themselves come in from the committee, and then perhaps I shall ask to be heard further upon the question.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate more than one or two minutes. As I have sat here for the last two weeks listening to the discussion of this abstract question, I have asked myself over and over again, is this a moot court or is it a grave legislative body? I remember distinctly in my early childhood attending a debate in a country school-house, where the question was most earnestly discussed for an entire evening upon this resolution:

Resolved, That it is impracticable and undesirable to construct a railroad to the moon.

Nobody has proposed to construct a railroad to the moon, but that country school-house gathering spent an entire evening in discussing that question. No one in this body, and scarcely any one in the country, has proposed to repeal the arrears of pensions act, and yet the Senate has resolved itself into a moot court, and for the last fifteen days has been discussing that question.

I think it is high time that we should close the discussion. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing any of the propositions before the Senate, but I am thoroughly tired, for one, of listening to the discussion of so inconsequential a subject as this. If anybody was proposing to repeal this act, if any bill had been introduced into this body to repeal it, if there was any proposition in the country to repeal the arrears of pensions act, it might be well for the Senate to spend some time in discussing that question; but I say that there is not a Senator on this floor who would vote to-day to repeal it, and yet we have devoted nearly two weeks of the time of this body to that kind of discussion.

Mr. President, is it possible that the Senate of the United States has nothing to do? Is there no practical question of legislation that can be brought before it? If there is, I say let us take up that question and discuss it. Let us bring before the Senate bills that ought to have been acted upon long ago, and act upon them now, rather than devote hour after hour, day after day, and week after week to the discussion of an abstract question upon which nobody proposes any action whatever.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, in general my friend from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] is right; and yet gentlemen have so laden this originally harmless and simple resolution with amendments that it means something, and a vote is of some consequence. It is not mere idle words, or brutum fulmen.

It is proposed that we shall pension all the ex-soldiers of certain Indian wars. I do not know exactly how many Indian wars, or what rises to the dignity of an Indian war, or what skirmish on the western frontier might not be embraced. It is proposed to pension all needy or disabled soldiers of the Mexican war, introducing again the word "needy," which I believe was in the law pertaining to the pensions given to Revolutionary soldiers. I am sorry it was there, and I shall not vote to put it in any other pension law. If a soldier by reason of faithful service and wounds, or what not, has any claim for a pension, I am not going to require him to bring here a certificate of the poor-law officers of his county or town as a prerequisite to his receiving a pension.

But there is more in the proposition. There is a certain political significance in it. I will not say that it is attempted indirectly, because it is direct enough, but it is attempted to get by an amendment here, which is not strictly germane, an expression of opinion upon another subject upon which I at least shall speak with entire frankness. The avowed object of putting in the word "disabled" is to allow upon the pension-roll such soldiers of the Mexican war as became involved in the rebellion and thereby disqualified themselves from drawing pensions. As the law already stands, disabled soldiers of the Mexican war can draw pensions, barred only by their subsequent participation in the rebellion. Congress has refused to remove the bar against them. Now, by inserting the word "disabled" in this amendment to something that it is thought nobody will vote against, it is attempted to get an expression of opinion in favor of removing the bar of treason from those who but for that would draw a pension. That is the purpose of it.

I need not argue this question according to my view of it, for it has no business here; but I never like to be supposed, even to be imagined, to be concealing or withholding any opinion of my own. So I say I shall vote against an independent proposition to pension disabled soldiers of the Mexican war without some restriction or discrimination; for it would put upon the pension-roll men who are disqualified from holding office by the fourteenth amendment, who have never asked Congress to remove their disabilities, and who declare that they never will ask Congress to remove them. It is proposed to go out of the way and present a pension of the United States to those who went into the rebellion and who frankly and bravely say, "As to your amnesty, we will never ask you for it."

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Inasmuch as I presented this amendment and the Senator is now laying at my door the purpose that he thinks I had in view, I should like to know by what authority he passes judgment upon what my purpose was in introducing the amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly in nothing but what I know, and I do not intend the gentleman any offense whatever. I speak of the direct, undeniable effect of the amendment. The law says that a man shall be held to intend that which is the natural result of his action.

Mr. BUTLER. That is entirely a different proposition, as to what the effect of it is; but when the Senator gets up and indirectly and impliedly imputes to me an improper and indirect motive, I desire to know by what authority he does it.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, Mr. President, I had no purpose of saying anything offensive whatever to the gentleman, or imputing to him any indirection or want of frankness. He is not guilty of that sort of thing. But that is the direct effect of the amendment which he has proposed.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a different proposition.

Mr. HAWLEY. Therefore, I suppose he intended it or he would not say that was out of his mind. So I do not know exactly how I am to change my expression. I simply say that those who moved these amendments intended to do what the amendments will do if adopted. I think I am safe in that at any rate. By the way, I should add that with regard to all these Indian wars there should be a discrimination and a closer definition, and without pointing out and remarking the particular wars, I am by no means ready to say that I am willing to pension all those people. That they did not try to serve their country and that they do not deserve well of their country I do not allege, but this is not the place to say that I am willing to grant them a pension indiscriminately.

I have another objection to all this, and it is my really serious objection, but I put in the others lest I might be thought to omit anything purposely. I do not believe in conjoining under one enacting clause or in one resolution a number of different subjects. Two or three years ago we had a three months' session of Congress really resulting from that one fault of combining in a bill different topics indirectly related to it. A majority of the States of this Union have provided by constitution that there shall be but one subject-matter in a bill, and that it shall be distinctly expressed in the title. That safeguard against unwise and always dangerous combination of different subjects has been sanctioned, I say, by a majority of the States of this Union. I may say I think safely (I looked the subject up within a few years) in every one of the newer constitutions such a provision has been inserted, and some of the old original States had the sagacity to put it in. Maryland, I recollect, for example, incorporated it in her original constitution; and I think every single one of the States that have made a constitution under the late light which has shone upon constitution-making has put it in.

My serious objection to the measure is that it is an attempt to get the moral judgment of this body in favor of several really distinct propositions. Bring in a bill to remove the disabilities from all men engaged in the Mexican war who since became involved in the rebellion, and we can discuss it frankly and fairly, and probably we shall arrive at some satisfactory conclusion; and whatever may be the conclusion, I shall submit to it cheerfully. Bring in a bill distinctly in regard to pensioning the soldiers of the Indian wars, describing the wars and stating the length of service in them that shall entitle the soldier to a pension, and then we shall consider the subject fully upon its merits; but I feel now that I should be alike bound on some of these other subjects, because I am not against the repeal of the arrears of pensions act. I propose not to be cornered at this time in any such way. I want one subject at a time; and I shall feel obliged, if these amendments prevail, to vote against the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, because it is improperly loaded, and because there are things attached to it probably that I would not vote for as independent propositions.

I rose with the purpose in my mind to move to lay the whole subject on the table, but perhaps I have said something that somebody else may want to say a word about, and I do not wish to seem ungracious. I shall make that motion very soon, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON,] to strike out from the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] the words "needy or." [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as it would stand if amended as proposed.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "needy or;" so as to read:

> And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars who were disabled in the line of duty.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair state the parliamentary condition of this question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has moved to strike out the words "needy or."

Mr. HOAR. Is that an amendment to an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. What is the motion which it is sought to amend? Is that itself an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HOAR. An amendment to the original resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; an amendment to the original resolution.

Mr. MCPHERSON. There are amendments pending to the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the very anomalous character of this resolution and its perfectly useless character. There is a form of legislation known as declaratory laws, which are admitted by all writers upon the subject to be of a vicious nature because they invade the province of the judicial branch of the Government, by which Congress or Parliament undertakes to express its opinion, or rather to declare the meaning of a law previously enacted. But this proposition goes far beyond. It is to express the opinion of seventy-six men, or a majority of that number, upon previous legislation by Congress, and to go on and say not what they will do but what this quorum of the Senate thinks it proper they should do.

One fact has struck me throughout this discussion. There is, in the first place, no practical measure before the body, no law to be enacted, and no law proposed to be repealed. This discussion was precipitated by the casual remark of a member of the body, in discussing a wholly different measure, derogatory to the action of Congress in passing the arrears of pensions act three years ago. As I say, no practical proposition has been made to repeal it or to amend it; and therefore if you pass this resolution you will be precisely where you were when the discussion commenced so far as any result is reached.

What was the real and admitted truth in regard to the arrears of pensions act which is now being considered for the purpose of passing opinions upon it? I do believe it was an inadvertent piece of legislation. There was not a man who voted for that act in this body who knew the amount he was voting for; there were few who comprehended the principle for which they were voting; and I beg leave here to say (and I believe I shall say it without contradiction and no one will rise in his place and question the truth of it) that if an amendment had been offered at the time the arrears of pensions act was passed limiting the amount to pass from the Treasury under that law to $25,000,000, it would have passed, unless it had probably been reduced in amount. If any one had stood here to inform the Senate and instruct them of that which I understand now is a fact, that the act will require within the next ten years for its execution according to its terms, a sum very nearly $1,500,000,000——

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, no, Mr. President. The Senator is absolutely misinformed on the subject. Will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. INGALLS. The entire amount that will be added to what would have been granted as pensions had the law not been passed is declared by the Commissioner of Pensions, after a careful computation, up to the time when the last pensioner upon the roll will have received his last payment, not to exceed more than $300,000,000. The Senator misapprehends the figures that have been made. The $1,500,000,000 is the entire sum that will be paid in pensions, of which not to exceed $300,000,000 is due to the arrears of pensions act.

Mr. BAYARD. I made my statement in the presence of the Senate in order to be corrected in case I was in error. I am stating that which I have been informed, and I presently will read from figures that I find reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 19. (Page 1271, ante.) I am not permitted by the rules of the body to state in what debate they were reported.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will turn to the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] he will find appended a table prepared by the Commissioner of Pensions, in which this subject is minutely analyzed and the entire amount chargeable to the arrears of pensions act defined; and in that statement, if he will refer to it, he will see that the entire amount chargeable to this act is about $300,000,000.

Mr. BAYARD. I find on page 21 of the RECORD of February 19 (page 1271, ante) an estimate which is alleged to have been made by the Commissioner of Pensions in response to a resolution of inquiry by the House of Representatives; and in glancing over the paper I find I was so far in error that the whole amount of $1,347,651,593 will be the amount of the Mexican pension claim added to these.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, no; the amount of Mexican pension claim, if the resolution should pass into legislation, would be about fifty-one million dollars. The Senator has not analyzed the table.

Mr. BAYARD. No, I have not analyzed it; and I will say frankly, not being a member of the Pensions Committee and not being a member of the Appropriations Committee, that I have gathered what I have learned of these vast and appalling sums from the statements made here in debate; and I have been somewhat affected in that respect by no declarations more than those made by the Senator from Kansas himself, who said there should be, in his judgment, no limitation whatever; that the uttermost cent of the money of the Republic should be given for this object; that you should commit yourself to the principle of absolute fulfillment of what he termed the contract of pension, the date of pension, and the amount of pension; and when you have once settled on that basis you should pursue it, no matter to what extent of expenditure.

Mr. INGALLS. Does not the Senator think the same thing?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator does not think if the principle is just that the soldier is entitled to a pension, he should be paid irrespective of what it costs? He does not think that?

Mr. BAYARD. In the first place, that is assuming a great deal. You say "if the principle is just." I do not assume that the principle is just. I am not disposed to place the question of pensions upon the ground of contract. I do not agree that this is a question of contract. I do not agree that you are bound either to the amount, to the time of calculation, or to what else may be urged. I believe the subject is wholly under the control and the discretion of Congress in regard to what amount they shall pay to persons disabled in the public service.

Mr. INGALLS. Then, if it is not a matter of contract, it is a matter of charity, is it not?

Mr. BAYARD. You may call it so.

Mr. INGALLS. And Congress is at liberty to give or to withhold exactly as it pleases. If that is true, it can of course deprive the soldier of what has been given, because there is no such thing as a vested right to a pension.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no doubt if I grant my friend his premises they will reason up to his own conclusion.

Mr. INGALLS. I am asking the Senator about his own premises.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand the Senator's premises and I understand his conclusion, and I dissent from his premises and from his conclusion. I do not hold it to be a matter to be proceeded upon as a matter of contract either as to the date of the pension, or the amount of the pension, or its continuance. I hold it to be governed by good reason. Nor do I believe as a broad fact affecting legislation that you can take any one meritorious question, any one question of legislative duty, and treat it otherwise than as relatively to all other matters of legislation. I believe the public Treasury of this country has something else to do than to be devoted to an especial and only object. Every question of duty is a question of relation; every question of duty is a question of comparison. I do not hold that you can take any single object of life, however meritorious, and permit it to absorb all other duties, all other rights, and all other obligations.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me one other question?

Mr. BAYARD. With pleasure.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator if he does not believe that the contract made by the Government with the bondholders ought to be paid, if it takes the last cent from the Treasury?

Mr. BAYARD. I have no question as to what an obligation of contract is; and I have just said that I did not believe the matter of pensions to be a contract.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator believes there was a contract made with the bondholder but not with the soldier?

Mr. BAYARD. The contract with the bondholder, in my judgment, is not one whit more sacred than the contract to any other creditor of the Government. I believe the word of this Government should be as good as its bond, and I propose to palter with neither. Since I have been here there never has fallen from me in any way a suggestion that the Government of the United States should act otherwise than upon the highest principles not simply of legal but of ethical and of moral obligation.

That is not the question, Mr. President. I do declare here that the amount to which the Government was committed by the original arrears of pensions act was far in excess of anything that was imagined or anything that was stated on the floor of the Senate or of either House; that we were committed to an amount of obligation that is enormous, that brings with itself results of a most serious character.

Now what is the proposition? To add to it other classes of pensions, shutting your eyes to the error, to the leap in the dark that you did take three years ago when the act was passed. You propose now to extend the same system of careless, inadvertent, ignorant legislation, without knowing to what it will lead you. On the floor of the Senate—whether from my friend from Kansas or not I cannot recollect—but on the floor of the Senate I do remember that when it was asked what amount would be requisite to pay the arrears of pensions, no one suggested a sum beyond twenty or twenty-five million dollars. Is not that so?

Mr. INGALLS. No, Mr. President; that statement contains a calumny so stale, and which has been so often refuted, both by statement and by reference to the debate, that I am amazed the Senator from Delaware should repeat it.

Mr. BAYARD. I asked a question——

Mr. INGALLS. It was only said in debate that to pay the pensions that would be due to those who had been cut off by the previously existing statute of limitations would take about eighteen million dollars; but it was also said that what would be required to satisfy the claims of those who might be placed on the roll thereafter could not be computed, because there were no statistics or data upon which to base a calculation.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator uses rather rough language in speaking of my question as a calumny——

Mr. INGALLS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I feel keenly on this subject. I have been aspersed so violently in connection with my original defense of this proposition that perhaps I employed a word I should not have used. I did not intend to refer that word at all to what the Senator from Delaware has said. I beg him to believe that that was not my purpose.

Mr. BAYARD. I candidly cannot imagine that the Senator meant anything but entire personal respect; nor do I desire to speak in loose phrase of this measure, especially as the Senator does feel that he had a very large responsibility for its becoming a law, and he very naturally desires to defend his action in respect to it. I am not speaking at all of that; I am only speaking of the results of legislation upon the rest of us who may be less well informed than he. It so happened that I was sent by the Senate to perform a sad duty of respect to a member of Congress and was not here when the arrears of pensions act was passed. It had, however, been discussed in my presence, and I remember there existed at that time as there now exists an absolute want of comprehension of the amount of money that would be required to execute the act. Am I not correct? Very well. Then it seems that we did do that which I hold was a feature of unwholesome legislation. We proposed to pass a law to take from the public Treasury moneys, and no man who voted for it had an idea of what the amount would be. I do not think that wise legislation; I do not think it justifiable legislation. It is precisely that sort of legislation which cannot be held to constitute contracts. People who mean to keep their engagements should comprehend them before they enter into them, and then entering upon them, they should strictly guard them and should thoroughly fulfill them.

Therefore it is that I do object to repeating again to-day, even in the shape of expressing an opinion, the very error and mistake that I think was committed by the passage of the original act for the arrears of pensions. Before I vote either an expression of opinion, which I hold to be very idle, or for a bill that shall draw money from the public Treasury, I choose to know the sum that is to come out under it. When that is ascertained, I may judge of its rightfulness or the contrary. If it be said now that there is an obligation upon me as a representative of the American people to maintain their credit, to keep their contracts, and to vote money for their obligations, let that be shown to me, and I trust I shall not be derelict; but I simply say I would never have voted money blindfold, and I shall not do it again. However meritorious may be the object in view, I will not vote for appropriations until I know their amount.

If it leads to anything the whole of this expression of opinion will lead to this: if the resolution be passed, there ought to be a bill brought in by the Committee on Pensions providing for the vague payments and the enormous payments which are contemplated by these various amendments. The question is, before you vote for that, what is the amount? Is there a man in the Senate who can rise in his place and tell you? There is not one. No one will pretend to do it. It would be the vaguest guess-work.

There is one other thing that I want to say. The arrears of pensions act unquestionably has brought enormous profit to a very large body of persons for whom it never was intended. The fixing the time of the pension from the date of the disability for which it is claimed, and not from the time of the application, has led to an amount of arrears which manifestly is shocking and unjust in many individual cases of which I have heard. I cannot now give the name, but I will submit in the hearing of the Senate whether they cannot follow the instance by a great many more of their own knowledge, of men receiving as much as $10,000 in a lump for arrears of pensions—some more than that—and the man who received it had been in health, had been engaged in his own private pursuits, but had subsequently alleged a disability that did not occur at the time of the injury, but by the frame of the law he was able to date back his claim in order to cover an amount of arrears which as I say was not within the purview of justice, much less of generosity, in dealing with questions like this.

I should like to see that law carefully scrutinized and amended. I think it is to be regretted that after the debate between the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Kentucky had ended a resolution was not adopted sending the act to the Committee on Pensions with instructions to inquire whether safeguards are not necessary to protect the Treasury against these large amounts.

Gentlemen may stand here, and talk of paying the last dollar out of the Treasury; they may stand here and declaim in regard to the force of honorable obligation for unknown amounts, but nations as well as individuals are the creatures of circumstance. A nation may be crippled in its resources and disabled from performing its just obligations by bad management, by an evil system of finance, or by too lavish expenditure in any form or shape. Therefore, not only should you stand by the maxim and the truth that you are bound to be just before you are generous; but I say if you mean to be just you must conduct your finances and your expenditures within the limits of good sense, of prudence, of sound economy, or you will soon find yourself unable to complete the engagements which you so ardently desire.

Now, I do say, and proclaim it to the Senate, that we should not commit this mistake over, for it was a mistake for any man to vote for a law the pecuniary results of which he could not calculate; and we should not now embark upon three several new adventures, as is proposed, the cost of which no man who proposes them can rise in his place here and state.

Mr. President, if nobody else makes the motion I shall move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to say but a word. I have not participated in the debate up to the present time, and I am only induced to do so now for the reason that it seems to me a portion of the debate at least has proceeded upon an improper basis so far as the question of pensions is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Delaware as moving to lay the resolution on the table at this time.

Mr. BAYARD. No, I did not make the motion because I did not wish to stop the debate, and I saw the Senator from Illinois rise to address the Senate. I shall make it, however, when I can.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one or two points. I do not wish to discuss the resolution. I think the resolution was superinduced probably from the fact that there is a profound distrust among many of the pensioners of the country lest the law granting them what are called arrears of pensions may be repealed. I do not believe that they need have any fears of that. Hence I do not propose to discuss the proposition as presented in the resolution, but I wish merely to state one or two points in reference to the question of pensions.

First, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the enlistment of soldiers in any war or for any duty where war occurs between governments, they are enlisted under a law which proposes to pay them a certain amount per month or per annum, as the case may be. The law which provides for a certain amount per month or per annum to the soldier or officer under which he enlists is a contract between the soldier and the Government, and I presume no court could be found in this country that would not hold that to be the case. Further, we have laws following up the enlistment of soldiers which provide a bounty of $100 per annum for a certain number of years. I presume no lawyer would say that that was not a contract between the soldier and the Government. If those two laws present contracts between the Government and the soldier, let me ask the lawyer a question. That same law provides that if the soldier, in the performance of his duties under this contract with the Government, shall be disabled from disease or from wounds, he shall be placed on the pension-roll; and the law provides that the pensioner shall receive so much per month, provided he has a certain character of wound, and that he shall receive so much for another character of wound; that is, that he shall be graded according to the character of his disease or wound. Let me ask the lawyer if that is not also a contract between the soldier and the Government when that law exists at the time and is part of the inducement to the soldier to enlist for the performance of his duty to his Government? It is a contract between the Government and the soldier that the Government cannot gainsay.

That being true, if I am correct, another proposition follows. Senators here have discussed the question of arrears of pensions on the ground that it required a great amount to pay them. That is not the legal question at all; but the question is, if a soldier is entitled to a pension on account of his wounds, when is he entitled to that pension? If he is to receive a pension because he has been wounded, when he receives that wound a pension attaches. Is not that true? If the law says "for wounds received in the service he shall be pensioned," what does the law mean? Does the law mean that the Government will pay a soldier twenty-five years after he received the wound? Is it not the true construction of the law that the pension attaches at the time the disability attaches to the person? Will any lawyer pretend to say that that is not the reasonable and proper construction of the law?

The trouble is not that the arrears of pensions act was wrong, but that when the law granting pensions to the wounded soldiers was first passed it provided that the pension should attach at the time the soldier made his application. There is the fault. It was the fault of the law when it was first passed in providing that the pension should attach only at the presentation of the application instead of providing that it should attach at the time the wound was incurred. There is the difficulty.

Let me ask any lawyer in this Chamber a question. Suppose a man is injured by a railroad accident; he is crippled. Under the law, if an injury is received on account of the negligence of the officers of that road, he is entitled to damages. Will any lawyer say that those damages do not attach at the time the injury was received? Is it not for that injury that the damages are given? If the damages are given for the injury, then the responsibility for damages devolves upon the party at the time the injury was received. Every lawyer in the Senate knows that in courts of justice every day questions are tried where persons are entitled to pay for injuries, for trespasses, for injury to property, injury to person, and the responsibility attaches at the time the injury is done, and the damages occurring at the time form the measure that the court will measure out to the party injured.

What I intended was merely to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the law providing that the pension should attach at the time of the presentation of the case instead of at the time when the injury was received, was the fault of Congress at the time that law was enacted; so that the law giving arrears of pensions is merely an amendment to that law, saying that the pensions shall attach at the time the disability was incurred, at the time the soldier was shot down in line, instead of ten years afterward, that being the time that the injury was inflicted. It is merely doing that which Congress should have done at the time they passed the pension act, dating the pension from the time the injury occurred, instead of at any other time. It is merely, then, the correction of an error that grew up at the time in Congress when the act was passed and is not an error itself because of the amount that is expended.

In reference to the large amount that the Senator from Delaware said some persons had received I have naught to say. There have been frauds practiced doubtless in this, as there have been in all matters of this kind where money is obtained from the Government. Nobody disputes that; but the fact that some soldier has received a pension when, in fact, he was not entitled to it does not prove that those who are entitled should not receive their pension. It only proves that there is perhaps a want of energy on the part of those making the examination of the cases or the persons that make the application. It is only proof of the want of good faith perhaps on the part of some officer in making a report that is not warranted by the condition of the person who makes the application. That does not prove that the law is wrong; it only proves that some person is wrong; some man has acted wrong; some man has defrauded the law; some man has deceived the officers of the law; and that is all it proves. A man who violates your criminal statutes by committing a larceny, a robbery, or something else in violation of law is punished because of that violation, but if he escapes punishment that does not prove that the law is wrong. If he escape punishment it only proves a want of vigilance, perhaps in his arrest and in his prosecution, but it certainly does not affect the law if the law in principle is correct.

This much only I desired to say, if I could, in the few minutes I rose to occupy. I wanted to place this thing on the proper principle, to at least try to show that it was not the fault of the pensioner, not the fault of the amount of money, but the fault in the first act of Congress by not placing the pension at the proper time, which was the time when the injury was inflicted, instead of, as it did do, at the time of the application; and this act is only an amendatory act of the other for the purpose of changing that and putting it right, as it should have been at the start. That is all I can seek in this discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON,] to strike out the words "needy or," on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALDRICH.]

Mr. HAWLEY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON.]

Mr. KELLOGG, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS.] I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. McPHERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. SEWELL,] though I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pair of the Senator from Delaware has already been announced with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The pair was made between the Senator from Delaware and myself. I do not know about the other pair.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] paired me with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] but it was under a misapprehension I presume. If that is so, I shall vote at the end of the roll-call. I have come over to the seat of the Senator from North Carolina to confer with him on that point.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KELLOGG. I vote "yea."

Mr. GARLAND, (after having voted in the negative.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is now absent from the Senate. I voted not thinking about it at the time. I do not know how he would vote on the amendment, but I should vote "nay." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. In calling the roll the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] is counted as voting. I did not so understand him.

Mr. KELLOGG. I voted "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Allison,	Conger,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cameron of Pa.,	Kellogg,	Platt,	Windom.
Cameron of Wis.,	Lapham,	Rollins,

NAYS—37.

Bayard,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Beck,	Farley,	Logan,	Vance,
Blair,	Gorman,	McDill,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Grover,	Maxey,	Vest,
Butler,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Plumb,	Williams.
Coke,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Davis of Illinois,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Davis of West Va.,	Johnston,	Saunders,

ABSENT—24.

Aldrich,	George,	Hoar,	Mahone,
Camden,	Groome,	Jonas,	Miller of N. Y.,
Edmunds,	Hale,	Jones of Nevada,	Pendleton,
Fair,	Hawley,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Frye,	Hill of Colorado,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Garland,	Hill of Georgia,	McPherson,	Sherman.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read again.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add:

And that Congress ought to enact a law granting a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican and Indians wars who are needy or were disabled in the line of duty.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by adding after "duty" the words "who have not incurred disability by reason of rebellion, which disability has not been removed."

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. MAXEY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Before putting the question I wish to say that that precise provision was in the bill for pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war which was introduced from I think the Senate Committee in the last Congress and voted for by every person on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the amendment be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment it is proposed to add:

Who have not incurred disability by reason of rebellion, which disability has not been removed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, in the last Congress a bill to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war was introduced from the other side of the Chamber from the Committee on Pensions; it was advocated by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] who had it in charge; it was voted for, if I am not mistaken, by every Senator on that side, and it contained this precise clause which I have offered. I think it passed the other House.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, we are coming to differences of opinion upon matters where the difference is quite warm and serious, and yet in no sense properly related to the original resolution of the Senator from Kansas. I move to lay the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, with the pending amendments, on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator withdraw that for a moment? I wish to ask a question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to make an inquiry, and I think the answer will give the information that I desire. If I understand the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, it does not apply to private soldiers, because their disabilities do not have to be removed, as I understand, but the disability which the Senator's amendment applies to is that of persons who held office under the United States Government prior to the war and engaged in the rebellion, and have not been relieved under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution at their request.

Mr. HOAR. Precisely.

Mr. LOGAN. So that it only applies, as I understand it, to those persons engaged in rebellion who have not asked to be relieved of the disabilities incurred.

Mr. BUTLER. Therefore if they have incurred no disabilities, it does not apply to them.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not apply to private soldiers; it does not apply to the officer of the Army; it applies to nobody except those who held office under the Government and incurred disability under the fourteenth article of the Constitution and have not asked to be relieved.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly.

Mr. LOGAN. It applies only to those persons who have refused to ask that their disabilities be removed. That is precisely the proposition as I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. And only those who held office and were disfranchised?

Mr. LOGAN. And who have not yet been relieved, because they have not asked it, because everybody has been relieved that has asked for it. I am in favor of that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Illinois states it precisely as I understand it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to lay the resolution and the amendments on the table.

Mr. INGALLS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALDRICH.] Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRYE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. GARLAND, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. HAWLEY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON.]

Mr. McPHERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. SEWELL.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS,] who is detained from the Chamber by sickness.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Anthony,	Conger,	Lapham,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Davis of W. Va.,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Beck,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Vance,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jackson,	Platt,	Windom.
Cockrell,	Johnston,	Pugh,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,

NAYS—22.

Allison,	Dawes,	McDill,	Vest,
Blair,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Harris,	Plumb,	Walker,
Butler,	Harrison,	Saunders,	Williams.
Call,	Ingalls,	Teller,
Davis of Illinois,	Logan,	Van Wyck,

ABSENT—28.

Aldrich,	Garland,	Hill of Georgia,	Mahone,
Camden,	George,	Jonas,	Miller of Cal.,
Edmunds,	Groome,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of N. Y.,
Fair,	Grover,	Kellogg,	Pendleton,
Farley,	Hale,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Ferry,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Frye,	Hill of Colorado,	McPherson,	Sherman.

So the resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the pending and all prior orders be temporarily laid aside and the bill which was up yesterday and left as the unfinished business be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no unfinished business.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take up the bill to place General Grant on the retired list, postponing all other orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to take up the bill indicated by him to place General Grant on the retired list, with a view to make it the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withhold his motion for but a moment in order that I may ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1233, which only gives to the Government the right of condemning a site accepted by the Department for a hospital at Memphis, and is important as a matter of time. If it takes five minutes I will not press the request.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I am in favor of his bill; I examined it yesterday; but I desire to get this bill up, not to press it to a vote now, but whenever it is made the order of business, then I will give way and allow his bill to be taken up. All I want is to take this bill up.

Mr. HARRIS. I of course will not insist on the Senator withdrawing his motion.

Mr. LOGAN. I will at once agree to lay it aside for the purpose of taking up the Senator's bill when this bill is once up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to take up the bill indicated by him, in order to leave it as the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 59, to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I am willing to agree that it may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of taking up the bill indicated by the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator might agree that it be left as the unfinished business for to-morrow morning after the expiration of the morning hour, at half past one, if that is the understanding of the Senate, so that it need not be called up again.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that.

MEMPHIS MARINE HOSPITAL.

Mr. HARRIS. Now I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1233, reported from the Judiciary Committee this morning.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the "act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee," approved May 3, 1880, by inserting after the word "purchase," in the second section, the words "at voluntary sale or by condemnation;" so that the act will read:

That the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to procure a proper site in or near the city of Memphis, Tennessee, and cause to be erected thereon a building suitable for a marine hospital, after plans and specifications which shall be furnished under his direction by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money now in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase, at voluntary sale or by condemnation, of said site, and the erection of the aforesaid building thereon; and the cost of the site and the erection of the building shall in no event exceed the sum hereby appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 124) to establish distinct United States courts with distinct officers in the northern and southern judicial districts of the State of Georgia and define their jurisdiction and powers, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 1049) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CHANGE OF A BANK'S LOCATION.

The bill (H. R. No. 2944) authorizing the Lancaster National Bank of Lancaster, Massachusetts, to change its location and name, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair has just laid before the Senate a bill to enable a national bank in Massachusetts, in the county where I live, to change its location and name. That bill is in the usual form. It has passed the other House, and it has been submitted to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance on the application of the bank, who gives it his support, as I understand. It will be quite convenient if it can be passed at the present time. I respectfully ask that it may be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read subject to objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOAR. This bank is merely removed from an old town to a new manufacturing town called Clinton, which was set off from its territory. It changes its location about a mile and a half or two miles of distance, but it preserves the old name; that is, it was formerly the Lancaster National Bank, which is the name of the town where it was, and it is now to be the Lancaster National Bank of Clinton.

Mr. GARLAND. Is it recommended by any committee?

Mr. HOAR. It has passed the House and been examined by the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill has not been referred to the Committee on Finance, but I have been made acquainted with the facts and I am acquainted with the locality, and the bill is in the usual form and has the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Several SENATORS. No objection.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to ask the Senate to consider that bill when it comes before it, for the reason that the bill is exactly the same as one reported by that committee, which has been on the Calendar now for several days.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it the same bill?

Mr. MORGAN. The same bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate consider the bill, as requested by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. INGALLS. Not to-day, certainly not.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I ask that the bill lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with accompanying papers, asking, for reasons stated by him, that Congress may be requested to make a special appropriation for the payment of the claim of Isaac A. Sylvester against the Navy Department.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and accompanying papers, in which he recommends that authority be given for the payment of certain damages which unexpectedly occurred to the property of private persons on the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Arkansas, in consequence of work performed under the direction of the superintendent in the performance of his duty.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 16th instant, relative to the necessity for a deficiency appropriation for the payment of salaries of clerks and laborers in the Patent Office during the present fiscal year.

The subject is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions, in which he recommends that more adequate provision be made for the payment of the expenses of obtaining evidence of the extent of the disability of those pensioners of the United States and applicants for pension who reside in foreign countries.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 21, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I move to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday as relates to the introduction of bills, &c., for reference.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Journal of yesterday was then read and approved.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. KASSON. I am authorized by the Committee on Ways and Means to give notice to the House that on Tuesday next I shall ask the House to proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the tariff commission bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 977) making appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy.

USE OF WATER POWER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers containing information called for by resolution of the House of Representatives of January 31, 1882, regarding the use by persons or corporations of water power created by locks or dams made by the United States on rivers and canals; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MARINE HOSPITAL NEAR MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending the acquisition by condemnation of a site for a marine hospital near Memphis, Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ANDREW GEDDES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition of officers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, against the reinstatement in the Army of Andrew Geddes, late a captain in that regiment; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DRAFT IN PENDLETON COUNTY, KENTUCKY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of February 14, 1882, a list of the names of such persons as were drafted into the military service of the United States in the county of Pendleton, Kentucky, the 6th of June, 1864, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WOOD'S HOLL, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, with accompanying papers, containing the information called for by the resolution of the House of January 11, 1882, relating to the construction of a pier and breakwater at the great harbor of Wood's Holl, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

POST-OFFICE APPOINTMENTS, ETC., IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with House resolution of January 30, 1882, a table containing lists of all resignations, removals, promotions, and appointments, under the grade of Assistant Postmaster-General, of persons employed in the Post-Office service in the city of Washington, excluding mail-carriers and including inspectors; which was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

MORMONS.

Mr. CASSIDY. I have here a short petition of persons in the Territory of Utah on the Mormon question, which I desire to have read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PAGE. Let it be printed without reading it.

Mr. CASSIDY. It is a very short petition.

There was no objection, and the petition was read, as follows:

Hon. GEORGE W. CASSIDY, M. C.; Hon. JAMES G. FAIR, U. S. S.:

The Mormons belong to neither political party, but compose a politico-religious organization which keeps faith with no party not subservient to its policy and crimes; claiming its church to be the government of God on earth, destined soon to subvert all secular governments. Hostile to both political parties and claiming absolute allegiance to itself against all other parties and governments, this theocratic party has no claims to aid and comfort from the Democratic party. The Democrats of Utah deprecate any affiliation with this alien organization.

J. B. ROSBOROUGH, Chairman,
And others of the Democratic Territorial Committee.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SIGNATURE OF POSTAL WARRANTS.

Mr. PEELLE. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 937, to enable the Postmaster-General to delegate authority to sign warrants, be taken from the Speaker's table and considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General may, by appointment under his hand and official seal, delegate to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General authority to sign in his stead all warrants registered and countersigned by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department for the payment of money from the public Treasury on account of the postal service.

SEC. 2. That warrants signed by the said Third Assistant Postmaster-General shall be in all cases of the same validity as if they had been signed by the Postmaster-General himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. PEELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT DENVER, COLORADO.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4171) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the post-office and other Government offices in the city of Denver, Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BELFORD. I will state that there is no public building in the State of Colorado, for the Government has never made any appropriation for such purpose, and I desire to have this bill passed at this time.

Mr. ATKINS. Let the bill be read; we do not understand it.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices, at the city of Denver, Colorado. The plans, specifications, and full estimates of said building shall be previously made and approved according to law; and said estimates for site and building complete shall not exceed the cost of $200,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Colorado shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. The bill has been called up by unanimous consent.

Mr. BELFORD. This bill was unanimously recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this Congress, as a similar bill was by the corresponding committee of the last House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to object to the consideration of this bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The objection is rather late.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear any request made for its consideration.

Mr. BELFORD. I hope there will be no objection to this bill. It has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. No appropriation has ever been made for a public building of any sort in my State. Judge McCrary urges the passage of this bill in the interest of public convenience, and I hope the gentleman will not object to its consideration.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. This bill is reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made his objection somewhat late. Still if he states that he did not understand the request for consideration at this time until the bill was read, the Chair would not like to hold that the objection is too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear any request until the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk first read the title of the bill, after which the Chair asked for objection, and none was made. Does the gentleman insist upon his objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1211——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS and others. Regular order!

Mr. HARDY. I rise to make a report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. REAGAN. Am I not recognized to make my motion?

The SPEAKER. What is the motion?

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1211. I have been authorized by the Committee on Commerce to make this request so that the bill may be passed at once. It is a bill to appropriate $100,000, to continue the improvements on Galveston Harbor. It is necessary, in order to save a great deal of expense to the Government, that the continuation of this work should be provided for at once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct that the title of the bill be read, after which objection will be in order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, all requests for unanimous consent are cut off.

ATTENDANT ON HOUSE TELEPHONE.

Mr. HARDY, from the Committee on Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to employ an additional page to take charge of the telephone in the House lobby, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the compensation of a page.

Mr. HARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR AT NEW BUFFALO, MICHIGAN.

Mr. PAGE. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. McKINLEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order—a privileged report from the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution reported by Mr. PAGE was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to communicate to this House any additional report or reports from officers of the Engineer Corps as to the condition of the harbor of New Buffalo, Michigan, and what appropriation is necessary to make said harbor available as a harbor for commercial purposes.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS C. MACKIE AND OTHERS.

On motion of Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3309) for the relief of Thomas C. Mackie and the heirs at law of William A. Hyde; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

EARNINGS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. POUND. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands. I am directed to report back with a substitute a resolution of inquiry referred to the committee, and to ask that the substitute be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reported by the committee as a substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested to report to this House the annual gross earnings and annual net earnings of the Central Pacific, Kansas Pacific, Union Pacific, Central Branch of Union Pacific, and Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Companies from the commencement of operations of each of said companies until the present time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this resolution, reported by way of substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the original resolution?

Mr. HUBBELL. It occurred to me that the Committee on the Public Lands has no right to report a resolution calling for this information. The matter properly belongs to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. POUND. If the original resolution had been read——

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the original resolution.

Mr. POUND. The House would readily understand that the Committee on the Public Lands has jurisdiction, because the resolution referred to our committee related in part to questions affecting the grants of lands to railroad companies; but that portion of the resolution having been embraced in a resolution already reported to the House and adopted, the Committee on the Public Lands have struck out that part of this resolution, and now recommend the adoption of the residue in the form of a substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the original resolution.

Mr. MILLS. I introduced the resolution for which this is a substitute. It embraced two points: one was a request for information in regard to public lands granted to railroad companies; the other requested information about the net and gross earnings of these subsidized roads. If the resolution had been divided one portion would have gone to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, the other to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HUBBELL. This portion would have gone to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. MILLS. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] has stated, the resolution embraced two subjects; but it had to go to one committee or the other; it could not go to both. The House having already adopted, upon the report of the Committee on the Public Lands, a resolution introduced by my friend from Indiana [Mr. COBB] in relation to the grants of public lands, the committee has struck out that portion of this resolution, and as amended it proposes simply to inquire in relation to the earnings of these companies. Now that is all there is about it. It asks for statistics and other information from the Department.

Mr. POUND. If the Chair will cause the original resolution which was referred to the committee to be read, the House will then fully understand the whole subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the House understands the subject, and

I therefore withdraw my request for the reading of the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas wish the original resolution read?

Mr. MILLS. No, I do not.

The resolution of the committee was adopted.

Mr. POUND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BED-ROCK FLUME, BOISE COUNTY, IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. CASWELL. I now call for the regular order of business.

Mr. POUND. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields to me until I can ask unanimous consent at this time to report back a substitute for a bill referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state what it is he desires, and objection will be reserved.

Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 1913 a bill (H. R. No. 4655) granting to John A. Post, R. W. Berry, D. P. B. Pride, James H. Hawley, and John M. Ballou the right of way and other privileges to aid in the construction of a bed-rock flume in Moore's Creek, Elk Creek, Grimes's Creek, and Granite Creek, in Boise County, Idaho Territory; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARSH. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. CAMP. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off all matters but privileged reports. The morning hour now begins for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. CASWELL. For the purpose of considering the Post-Office appropriation bill, which I think we can conclude to-day if we go to it early, I move to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The motion was agreed to, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the morning hour was dispensed with.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CALKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto by order of the House has been limited to twenty minutes. The Clerk will report first the pending paragraph, and then the amendments which are pending.

The Clerk read the pending paragraph, as follows:

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes, $10,655,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] moved an amendment to insert after the word "dollars," in line 47, the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the United States mails, the transportation of which is paid for out of the appropriation made in this clause, shall be carried without extra charge by the fastest trains run over said routes, whenever the Postmaster-General finds the use of such trains appropriate and convenient for the public service.

The CHAIRMAN. To which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] offered the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter when any railroad company fails or refuses to transport the mails when required by the Post-Office Department on the fastest train or trains running on said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of what is now provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. For which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moved the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by a land grant made by Congress on the condition that the mails should be transported over their roads at such price as Congress should by law direct, shall receive only 50 per cent. of the compensation now authorized by law for such transportation, from and after the 1st day of July, 1882.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose it was dividing by tellers on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. The tellers will now resume their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent, and in order to save the time of the House, to withdraw that amendment and to substitute for it one which I now send to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CASWELL. Let the substitute be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. All points of order are reserved.

Mr. CANNON. Let the proposed substitute be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That every railroad company which has received a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad equal to or exceeding three thousand acres per mile on the condition that the mails should be transported over such road at such price as Congress should by law direct, or has received such grant to the extent aforesaid on the condition above expressed to aid in the construction of a part of its railroad, or has received the benefits of any such grant in the construction of its road or a part thereof, to the extent and made on the condition aforesaid, shall receive for the transportation of the mails over its road or over the part thereof for the construction of which it receives such aid 50 per cent. only of the rate of compensation now allowed by law to railroad companies which have not received grants of public lands for such transportation; but the provisions of the thirteenth section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1876, shall remain in full force as to all railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by grants of public lands of less than three thousand acres per mile of their respective roads.

Mr. CASWELL. I must object to the substitution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw all demand for a further vote on the amendment now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no further objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope now, by unanimous consent, I will be permitted to withdraw the pending amendment, and in its place be allowed to offer the amendment which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no further objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, the present rate of pay for transporting the mails of the United States by railroads was fixed by the law of 1873. I suppose that in fixing the rate of pay for this service some reference was had to the charges made by these several roads for carrying freight for private individuals. The charges for carrying freight by railway service since 1873 have decreased at least 50 per cent. in all parts of the United States. I have here a table showing the rate of pay on several of the principal railroads of the country for this service for the last ten years, showing the rate in cents per ton per mile on the following roads: The Chicago and Alton, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul, Chicago and Northern, Chicago and Rock Island, Illinois Central, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, Michigan Central—showing the aggregate of all, as follows:

Years.	Cents.
1870	2.227
1871	2.032
1872	1.882
1873	1.813
1874	1.820
1875	1.596
1876	1.416
1877	1.330
1878	1.202
1879	.975
1880	1.090

It will be seen that the pay for this service has largely decreased within the last ten years. Now, I want to know why the United States Government is compelled to pay to the railroad companies for carrying its mails, to some of them twelve cents per ton per mile, to some thirteen cents per ton, some twenty-eight, some twenty-five, and so on to different amounts, in some instances reaching as high, I believe, as one to two dollars per ton per mile? I want to ask some gentleman who has given the subject attention and consideration why it is that we are required to pay for carrying the mails of the United States from 1,000 to 2,000 per cent. more than the amount paid by private individuals for carrying ordinary freight?

Mr. HOLMAN. And even on fast lines.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir; as the gentleman from Indiana suggests, freight even on fast lines, express, and other freights. I ask how is it possible that such a difference should exist? Why is the Government required to pay twenty, thirty, fifty, and one hundred cents per ton per mile for carrying the mails over the railroads of the country when the average rate per ton charged private individuals for carrying freight will not probably exceed an average of two cents per ton per mile throughout the country?

I support the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, although I think it does not go even far enough. I am satisfied that the Government is paying largely more than it ought to pay for carrying the mails, and I see no reason why that system should continue. I am willing to pay all that is necessary, all that the service is worth; but I am not willing that the same rule shall be adopted by these railroad companies toward the Government that they enforce toward private individuals: that is, to compel them to pay all that they are able to pay for such services, not what the service is really worth, but they are taxed to the utmost of their physical ability to meet the demands of the companies in this direction. I think that the system should be modified, and the Government be permitted to pay a fair and equitable consideration, and no more, for this service.

These are all the remarks that I desire to submit on this subject. I send to the desk to be printed in this connection a table in support of the position I hold on this subject. This table shows the number of the route, the termini, the title of the company carrying the mails, and the amount per ton per mile. It is as follows:

Number of route.	Termini.	Corporate title of company carrying the mail.	Pay per ton per mile.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. I regret that I have not with me a letter from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, which I think I have in my committee-room, and which I will endeavor to find and insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, showing that the gentleman is very wide of the mark in reference to the compensation paid to the railroads for this service. Away back in the Forty-fourth Congress the gentleman from Indiana, at that time in charge of the bill, sought to ingraft an amendment upon the Post-Office appropriation bill fixing the rate of compensation of the railroad companies at from five to seven cents per lineal foot per mile for this service. After much discussion the measure failed between the House and Senate, I believe.

Now, I asked the adjuster of the railway mail pay but a few weeks ago as to the compensation allowed the roads for this service, and he gave me a statement from the tables on file in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, showing the amount and character of this service, with the amount per lineal foot per mile paid for carrying the mails, which statement shows that in round numbers the amount allowed the roads is less than five mills per lineal foot per mile, a lineal foot representing practically the same amount of space occupied by a passenger. So, Mr. Chairman, this statement will show that the gentleman from Texas is wide of the mark.

The service upon the great trunk lines of the country is being done for even less than the amount proposed in the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana in the Forty-fifth Congress. It is useless and foolish to undertake to apply the same rate of compensation to this mail service of the country upon fast trains that you would adopt for estimating the rate paid for the transportation of merchandise and other freight of private individuals on slow freight trains throughout the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. HOLMAN. According to the statement of Mr. Vail, then superintendent of the railway mail service, the reduction to six or seven mills per lineal foot per mile would reduce the expenses for the transportation of the mails 33⅓ per cent. less than that allowed under the act of 1873, which is still in force.

Mr. CANNON. That was shown to be a mistake. The gentleman will find——

Mr. HOLMAN. I can show the gentleman that this reduction would have followed the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I cannot yield to the gentleman for a speech. The amount paid for this service on the great trunk lines of the country is less than an average of five mills per lineal foot per mile. On the smaller roads the rate reaches in some instances from seven to ten mills per foot.

Now, it would not be fair to decrease them, because with them it is the trip and not the space that is valuable. They have to run their cars anyhow, and as a rule run them not well filled. And the gentleman's bill in the Forty-fourth Congress failed because it discriminated against the small roads and the new roads that were doing this service and had the trip to make anyway.

But I do not care to go into that matter further. I only rose for the purpose of combating the statement of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] because it is liable to mislead the House. I stand ready to co-operate now or hereafter in adjusting the pay of these railroads as it ought to be adjusted in the event of their getting too much. But I cannot be silent when I hear statements made of the kind which came from the gentleman from Texas without stating what I understand the facts actually to be.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I understand by order of the House debate on the pending paragraph with amendments thereto is limited to twenty minutes. My colleague desires to offer a substitute after these amendments have been voted on, in order to correct an error the committee made the other day in regard to the appropriation for transportation over the railroad bridge at Saint Louis. My inquiry is, will he be cut off from debate on his substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order to offer any amendment or substitute for the paragraph, but without debate. All debate on the clause and amendments thereto is cut off after the twenty minutes have expired.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have time to explain his amendment or else that he have time for that purpose after the twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The request for unanimous consent may be made at the expiration of the twenty minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know whether the gentleman in charge of this bill proposes to let the amount for railroad transportation remain as it is after what has been elicited in the debate in reference to the needs of the service. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] produces a statement from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General that the service for this year will cost $10,577,000, and there is only inserted in this bill $10,655,000; not an increase of $100,000. And the gentleman from Illinois tells the House there will be over $1,000,000 of deficiency for this year.

I regret very much that we are cut off by the order of the House from discussing a very interesting question which has been raised here in reference to the compensation for the carrying of mails. For not only according to the allowances now made by law are the railroads being paid enormous rates, not only has there been a failure to reduce the amount of compensation to be paid to railroad companies in accordance with the reductions which have taken place in the course of trade in the carrying of freights on these roads——

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a question of order. There is so much confusion that I cannot hear what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was saying that not only are the railroads being paid these enormous rates out of proportion to what has been found to be a legitimate reduction in carrying freights for private individuals, not only has the compensation of railroads been increased by special facilities, not only has it been increased by postal-car expenditures; but in addition to that I find in a letter to the Postmaster-General, Executive Document No. 72, that an arrangement was made by the last Postmaster-General with Mr. Cassatt, first vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, to run a mail leaving Philadelphia at 4.30 a. m. for Harrisburgh. And in consideration of this being done it was agreed there should be a reweighing of the mails on that line, which necessitated a reweighing on the other lines for a service which, according to my information, I believe might be had for $15,000, but which resulted in an additional expenditure to the Government of over a quarter of a million dollars.

Again, sir, I find in that same document where there had been a request to run postal cars on a certain line, in a letter from Mr. James to Mr. Vanderbilt, whose road is now being paid over $1,100,000, a proposition to increase the pay of that road by the reweighing of the mails. So that there seems to be a system of using not only special facilities but promises to reweigh mails, and letting them date back for many months.

It does seem to me, sir, that fact after fact in reference to the postal service not only as has been so strikingly revealed in the star-route service but in the dealings of the Government with the railroad companies, has occurred to excite apprehension that the great lines have too great an influence with the Department, that its discretionary power ought to be restricted, and that we ought to regulate the use of the people's money as much by law as possible.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to oppose all the amendments offered to this paragraph. There is one which proposes to decrease the compensation to be paid to the land-grant railroads. I do not know how far that amendment would interfere with existing contracts, for I suppose the original grants to those railroads were in the nature of contracts, and this is no time to legislate upon that question.

If at any time the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads come in with a report that an amendment can be made to these charters of railroads, reducing the compensation that should be paid to them, I then may be found ready and willing to vote for it. But I say this is no time to consider that question.

Now, a word in reference to the attacks that have been made upon the special rates to be paid to railroads. Some four or five years ago the American Congress established the principle of facilitated or special mail service upon railroads. That matter cannot be regulated by law. It is utterly impossible for us to pass any law which will regulate the price that shall be paid for this service, for the reason that for the carrying of the mails upon these fast trains special trains are put on the roads which do not depend at all, or only in a very small degree, upon passenger traffic for compensation.

This is the defense that can be made, and I believe with a great deal of strength and power, of the action of the Postmaster-General in reweighing the mails. The mail trains leave the city of New York, for instance, at a time when no passengers or but few take the trains. Yet such trains take all the mails, and it is absolutely necessary that the proprietors of the railroads should know the amount they are to receive under the statute for the mails before they can fix the sum they are willing to take for putting special trains on the road; therefore reweighing the mails is absolutely indispensable for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of additional compensation outside of the statute that should be paid.

In the brief time I have allowed me it is impossible for me to enter more into detail in defense of the paragraph of the bill as it stands. I say to the committee that in my judgment this legislation can find no proper place on an appropriation bill, and it will certainly lead to endangering this fast mail service, and will do no good to the country. I therefore commend to the committee to adopt this paragraph as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and to vote down all these several amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman consider that these amendments touch the fast mail service?

Mr. HISCOCK. The one offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] touches it.

Mr. BLOUNT. By no means.

Mr. HISCOCK. It certainly does, and he so understands it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not think so.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time is there left for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute.

Mr. HOLMAN. After consultation with a number of gentlemen, I offered the pending amendment as an addition to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in place of the amendment which I offered before, which substitute I believe will be absolutely fair and just to these railroads. It provides that the railroad companies which have received a grant of three thousand acres of public land per mile or more shall transport the mails at 50 per cent. of the usual rates. Where they have received less than three thousand acres per mile, then they shall receive the 80 per cent. allowed under the present law. The effect of the amendment will be to pay these railroad companies an ample compensation for their services, independent of the fact that their roads have been virtually constructed by the Government itself.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate is now closed on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto.

The question is first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as an addition to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.] The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That every railroad company which has received a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad equal to or exceeding three thousand acres per mile, on the condition that the mails should be transported over such road at such price as Congress should by law direct, or has received such grant to the extent aforesaid on the condition above expressed to aid in the construction of a part of its railroad, or has received the benefits of any such grant in the construction of its road or a part thereof, to the extent and made on the condition aforesaid, shall receive for the transportation of the mails over its road or over the part thereof for the construction of which it received such aid, 50 per cent. only of the rate of compensation now allowed by law to railroad companies which have not received grants of public lands, for such transportation. But the provisions of the thirteenth section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1876, shall remain in full force as to all railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by grants of public lands of less than three thousand acres per mile of their respective roads.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 69.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, tellers will be ordered.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CANNON and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes 89.

So the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Suppose the committee should adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] can it still adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON?]

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand that the two amendments conflict.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter when any railroad company fails or refuses to transport the mails when required by the Post-Office Department on the fastest train or trains running on said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of what is now provided by law.

Mr. ROBESON. Will it be proper for me to accept that amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no vote on the amendment, and the Chair thinks the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] can modify his amendment.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the gentleman may accept that amendment as his own, and the question will therefore recur upon the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] as modified by accepting the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether the effect of this amendment is in any way to interfere with the special facilities for which special rates are paid.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be a very proper inquiry if debate were in order; but debate has been closed by order of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I trust that by unanimous consent an answer will be given to this inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there unanimous consent that an answer be made to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ROBESON. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there is in this bill a special appropriation for what are called special facilities, covering certain fast trains, certain trains which start at extraordinary times, and make extraordinary connections; but this is an amendment to the provision for pay for general railroad service, which is not paid for out of that appropriation. This amendment provides that whenever the railroad companies so arrange their trains or their time-tables as to make it inconvenient for the Postmaster-General to send the mails on the fastest trains, so that he is obliged to send them by slow trains, then the companies shall receive only one half the pay they would otherwise get. We, by this amendment, say to the railroad companies: "We want the mails of the United States to go on the fastest trains that you run; if you so arrange your trains or your time-tables that you cannot take the mails on the fastest trains, we will only pay you half what we would pay for the fastest mail transportation."

Mr. O'NEIL. Will the gentleman state whether the Post-Office Department has complained of this mail service?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that further discussion is not in order under the order of the House. The Committee of the Whole House cannot even by unanimous consent set aside that order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe there was a point of order made upon this amendment or both amendments when originally offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause inquiry to be made upon that point.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Unanimous consent was asked and given that the gentleman from New Jersey as well as myself should state what, as we understand, these amendments cover. The gentleman from New Jersey has been heard; and now I would like to be heard for only a minute in answer to the question.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will hear the gentleman in answer to the inquiry, although the order of the House cannot be set aside by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this amendment was not offered for the purpose of interfering, and, as I understand, it does not interfere with the subsequent clause of this bill appropriating money for special facilities. It is already the law, as I understand, that these railroad companies must carry the mails upon their fast trains. Now, we propose to come in and amend that law so as to fix the penalty, if the railroad companies refuse to carry the mails upon such trains. We propose to declare that when the Postmaster-General has called upon these companies to carry the mails by their fast trains, and they refuse, they shall be entitled to only one-half the compensation they would receive for fast mail transportation. I think the amendment is very proper.

The appropriation for special facilities—for the purpose of providing special trains making special connections and leaving at special hours—is not affected by this amendment at all, as I think I can show when that clause comes up for discussion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question as to the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey. Is it not in perfect harmony with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois? Is not the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey simply the law as it is now stated to be, that the railroad companies shall, when required by the Postmaster-General, carry the mails upon the fastest trains actually run?

Mr. CANNON. I am inclined to think that is the law now; but my amendment fixes a penalty in the event of the refusal of the companies to carry the mails upon such trains.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why not allow the provision of the present law to be inserted, as the gentleman from New Jersey proposes, and then provide the penalty in addition?

Mr. WILLITS. I wish to put a question to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.] He says that his amendment simply proposes to attach a penalty to what is substantially the existing law. Can he give an instance where the railroad companies have refused to carry the mail on any train designated by the Postmaster-General? If not, what is the necessity for the penalty he proposes?

Mr. CANNON. I will say——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it his duty to enforce the order of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The regular order being demanded, the Chair is now ready to answer the inquiry made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] as to whether a point of order was pending upon these amendments. When the point of order was made upon the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey the Chair decided that it was made too late.

Mr. HISCOCK. I made it as soon as I could possibly get the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decided that the point of order came too late, and the decision was acquiesced in at the time by the gentleman and the committee. It is certainly too late now. Upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois no point of order was made, and none is pending against it. The question is now on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] as modified by the acceptance of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 64.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HISCOCK were appointed.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEILL. Unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Illinois to make an explanation. No time was fixed. He did not make it as I desired him to make it. Therefore I ask now to make a brief explanation in order to get some information before the committee on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair held unanimous consent could not be given; but by unanimous consent the amendment was allowed to be offered.

Mr. O'NEILL. I did not understand objection was made to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOOKER. The committee had no right to extend the time, as it was acting under the order of the House.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 85, noes 69.

So Mr. ROBESON'S amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I give notice that I shall call for a vote by yeas and nays on that amendment in the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, not to offer an amendment, for that I believe I have a right to do, but to explain the necessity for the amendment. It is to correct an error.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read for information, after which the Chair will ask for objection to the gentleman proceeding with his explanation.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. This is in lieu of the amendment I have offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 47, down to and including the word "Missouri," in line 52; that is, strike out the following words: "And hereafter the Postmaster-General is authorized to expend not to exceed $25,000 per annum of the appropriation for transportation on railroad routes for special railroad service between the union depot in East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And the Postmaster-General is authorized to pay for special railroad service between the union depot in East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri, a sum not exceeding the lowest rate which private individuals, express companies, or others may pay for transportation between said points, bu not to exceed for the fiscal year $25,000."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. ask permission to explain that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee at a former session struck out all after the word "dollars" in line 47, and this amendment the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent, as the Chair understands, to offer in lieu of the lines stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object for the present until I can hear some explanation of it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it subject to objection; has not the gentleman a right to offer it?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already perfected that part by amendment, and the Chair is inclined to believe it would not be in order now to recur to it for the purpose of amending the substitute.

Mr. ATKINS. But it is open to amendment, as there was no substitute for the entire section.

Mr. HISCOCK. A motion was made to strike out a portion of the section, and it occurs to me objection to the amendment of the gentleman from New York is not well taken.

Mr. ROBESON. It is perfectly in order as a substitute.

Mr. HISCOCK. We are still on the paragraph, and it is in order to move to insert for the words which have been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that the original amendment struck out the entire paragraph after the word "dollars," and the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from New York restores the words of the original bill after the word "dollars" down to the word "Missouri."

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment is evidently not in order, and I insist that it shall be ruled out.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I suppose it is too late to make that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York that since the amendment striking out was adopted the committee have adopted the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.] Now, if the gentleman from New York will make his amendment conform to the section as it has been amended, the Chair thinks it will be in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to reserve all points of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will refer to Jefferson's Manual, page 124, it will be seen the rule is laid down as follows:

If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order.

That is precisely the case we now have before us. The amendment of the gentleman from New York may be inconsistent with what has heretofore been done by the committee, but it is competent for the committee to agree to it or to reject it, and it is not competent for the Chair to suppress it as against order.

Mr. REAGAN. The committee has already stricken out the substance of the amendment of the gentleman from New York and it is not competent now to move to insert those words in order to have a second vote on the same thing. It is asking us simply to vote up what the committee has voted down.

The gentleman from Illinois calls attention to Jefferson's Manual. The rules of the House, however, I am sure will sustain the position I take. I do not have them before me at this moment, as I did not expect the question to arise. Under the rules, when the committee has inserted an amendment it is not in order to strike it out, unless the motion to strike out includes what was inserted and something else besides. In other words, the amendment must be enlarged or diminished before it can be considered in order. Now if the amendment of the gentleman from New York is received it will be voting over again on the same question which the committee has already decided. He proposes to insert the very words which the House have already stricken out. It must be enlarged or diminished or it is out of order.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from New York is not in substance the same as that stricken out. On the contrary, in the original bill it was provided for a continuing appropriation for the transportation of these mails from the city of East Saint Louis to the city of Saint Louis, Missouri; and this substitute of the gentleman from New York provides that for the ensuing fiscal year there shall be an appropriation not to exceed $25,000 for that service, with some other provisions regarding the payment of no greater rate than that which is paid for the transportation of other material. It is not the same, I repeat, in substance as that which has been stricken out.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I now send to the desk an amendment which has been made to conform to the action of the committee, and I offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] it being his amendment, with an addition to it, which I have now incorporated.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand how the gentleman from New York can offer a substitute for adoption which embraces matter that is now in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas, that the Chair regards this as a motion to strike out and insert, rather than a substitute.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I think the Chair rather misapprehends my motion——

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot understand, sir, how, under the rules of the House and common fairness, this proposition can be admitted now. I assume that the rules of the House were made for the conduct of the business of the House, and not to be played upon. The gentleman from New York offered his amendment in the first instance, which was in substance already incorporated in the bill, and now in order to overcome the difficulty in the way of getting it in, the plan proposed is to offer it as an amendment or a substitute for that which has been already incorporated in the bill, which was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and accepted by the gentleman from New Jersey. Now, this proposed amendment of the gentleman from New York seeks to overcome the rules of the House and get in another amendment. I hold, sir, that it is improper and against the rules to permit it to come in in this way. The substance of the amendment is already in the bill. It is not competent to add to something which is already in the bill, practically the same in substance, and the effect of this motion, if adopted, will be to carry into the bill that which cannot come in properly under the rules. I hope the Chair will hold that this cannot be done. If the rules are worth any thing they ought to be adhered to. It is now in the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is in the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment which the gentleman from New York now seeks to incorporate——

Mr. HISCOCK. His motion is, as I understand it, to strike out and insert something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the condition of the record, so that the committee may be informed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire, in the light of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas, if there is anything in the form of the substitute adopted by the committee for these lines—that part of the section commencing with the word "and," after the word "dollars," and down to the word "Missouri"—which will prohibit an amendment or substitute for the whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will interrupt the gentleman from New York to state the condition of the record, so that the committee will be advised.

The gentleman from New Jersey offered an amendment to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 47, and insert his amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] offered another amendment to strike out the substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey and adopt his amendment; but subsequently the gentleman from New Jersey accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, which was to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 47 of the bill, and adopt his amendment, which the committee agreed to. The gentleman from New York now moves to strike out that amendment and incorporate his proposed amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. May that substitute or amendment of the gentleman from Illinois be now read?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be read for information. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter when any railroad company fails or refuses to transport the mails, when required by the Post-Office Department, upon the fastest train or trains run upon said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of the amount annually provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee having agreed to that amendment, and having incorporated it as a part of the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] now moves to strike out that paragraph and insert the following, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Postmaster-General is authorized to pay for special railroad service between the union depot in East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri, a sum not exceeding the lowest rate which private individuals, express companies, and others may pay for transportation between said points, but not to exceed for the fiscal year $25,000; and this sum shall include depot room and transfer service at each terminal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that it is not competent to strike out the paragraph which has been amended and adopted, and to insert another in the form here offered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say to my colleague——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If the gentleman will allow me a moment. I think the Chair has misunderstood my position. I have not moved to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and substitute my own for it; but I propose to incorporate his amendment with my own as a part of it, in the form which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated, but in order to accomplish that the motion to strike out will first be necessary.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand then the proposition is to strike out the amendment just adopted and put this in place of it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No, that is not it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then to attach it to the amendment as a part of it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if this amendment is to be allowed to come in at this time?

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to know exactly the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas as soon as the proposition of the gentleman from New York is stated.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. What I sent to the desk is a substitute, which I move to adopt.

Mr. REAGAN. I think I understand the position of the question now. We have adopted as a part of the bill the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] as modified by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.] We have by the action of the committee stricken out that part of the clause which authorized the Postmaster-General to expend not to exceed $25,000 per annum of the appropriation for transporting the mail over that bridge. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] in a single motion proposes to strike out the amendment just adopted, and to reinsert it in the same vote. For what purpose? In order to carry in with it an amendment otherwise subject to the point of order. So that we multiply the violations of the rules of order by striking out and reinserting the same thing on the same vote.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that gentlemen may understand precisely what is now proposed, the Clerk will first read that portion of the clause which has not been amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes $10,655,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] which the committee has already adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 47 to the end of the paragraph, and insert the following:

And hereafter the amount paid as compensation for transporting the mails between the union depot in East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri, shall be computed and paid for at the rates which were prescribed in the act authorizing the construction of said bridge, passed March 3, 1873, and the act passed June 9, 1880, entitled "An act providing for the transportation of the mails between East Saint Louis, in the State of Illinois, and Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri," be and the same is hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] now desires to offer a substitute for the amendment which has just been adopted, and which is now in the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. That does not at all affect the remarks I was submitting. I call the attention of the Chair to page 202 of the Manual:

When it is proposed to amend by inserting a paragraph, or part of one, the friends of the paragraph may make it as perfect as they can by amendments before the question is put for insertion.

Now, we have gone on to perfect the paragraph by two amendments, and it cannot be amended afterward at the same stage; because the committee has on a vote agreed to it in that form. But an amendment which has been inserted may be added to.

I understand it will be assumed that this amendment which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] proposes may be added to the other amendment. That does not meet the point of order. The point of order is that the amendment proposed is to reinsert the substance exactly of what was stricken out by a former vote, and the fact that it is proposed to insert it in addition to another amendment does not relieve it as against the rule, because the rule is against the reinsertion of the same thing which was stricken out. If it can be brought in at all it must be by such an enlargement or such a diminution of the substance of the former amendment as makes it a different proposition.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, if the gentleman from Texas will allow me, I will say he is mistaken in supposing that this amendment which I now offer is in substance the same as the clause which has been stricken out. It is totally different in substance; and in that particular my friend from Texas is in error.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will explain further, if the gentleman will allow me. The amendment which I offered and which was adopted by the committee contained an error in fact. The committee will remember that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] not now in his seat, caused to be sent to the Clerk's desk a statute which was read. It was a statute not applicable to this bridge at all; but I was deceived by it, and the committee were deceived by it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did it innocently. He supposed it was the statute which covered this case. Hence we have adopted the clause which recites a statute not at all applicable to this bridge. I wish to get that error of fact corrected at any rate. Secondly, having got to that point I was induced to investigate the merits of this case, and found the proposition as I offered it would work injustice. So I have drawn a new clause which is not identical with or in substance the same as the original clause. It requires the Postmaster-General to have this service done at the lowest rate at which it is done by any other person, express company, or transportation company of any kind, and for an amount not exceeding that which by the original appropriation was given for the service. That is the exact fact.

I do not wish to strain the rules of the House a particle; but I do wish, first, to correct the error into which we were innocently led; and secondly, I should like to do justice not only to the Department but to this bridge company.

Mr. REAGAN. In relation to the first point I cannot speak advisedly, but my remembrance is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania caused to be read the law under which that bridge was constructed.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is a mistake, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BLAND. It was an act for the construction of a bridge below that point.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to inquire if the original charter of this bridge company contained a provision similar to this. I understand it did, but that they have been trying to wriggle out of it by some amendatory act.

Mr. CLARDY. It has no such provision, in my opinion.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand the gentleman does not put the construction upon it that I do; but he does not deny my proposition.

Mr. REAGAN. Do not take all this out of my time.

Mr. SPARKS. Why, I am on your side.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from New York says the amendment is not the same in substance as the clause which was stricken out, because it gives the Postmaster-General the discretion, and a direction that he is to let out this service at the lowest rate allowed for freight by express or other transportation companies. Now, then, see the terms of this clause which followed the word "dollar." Here is what was stricken out:

> And hereafter the Postmaster-General is authorized to expend not to exceed $25,000 per annum of the appropriation for transportation on railroad routes for special railroad service between the union depot in East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri.

Now, while different words are employed as to the means of determining the discretion, the fact is that in both propositions the same amount of money is allowed, and the fact in regard to both propositions is that the same discretion is allowed to the Postmaster-General, except that in the original bill no rule is given for the exercise of that discretion, while in the amendment a rule is given.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the question. As will be apparent to all persons familiar with parliamentary law, the way to proceed is to perfect the clause, and then if it is found that there is an error in it a substitute can be moved for the whole clause, which substitute may embody what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] seeks to accomplish by moving to strike out what has been put in and to insert that which has been rejected by the committee. The proposition, as presented by the gentleman from New York, would be a novel practice, and the Chair agrees with the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] that some course should be followed which would be strictly in accordance with parliamentary practice. After the clause has been perfected a substitute for the whole clause can be offered embodying the idea of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will prepare the substitute in accordance with the suggestion of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. By unanimous consent we can pass over this paragraph for the present, and return to it when the substitute has been prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further amendment to be offered to this clause, the Chair will ask consent that it be passed over for the present.

Mr. ROBESON. Will an amendment to the substitute, when offered, be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course it will.

Mr. REAGAN. Why not conclude the matter now?

Mr. SPRINGER. It will take some time to prepare the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over this clause for the present?

Mr. ROBESON. If I have the right to offer an amendment to the substitute I will not object.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

> For inland transportation by steamboat routes, $800,000.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move to add to the clause just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve all points of order on the amendment until it is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Provided, That the steamboat mail service on the Mississippi River, or any part thereof, between the city of Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, and the city of Saint Paul, in the State of Minnesota, shall not be discontinued so long as the navigation of said river remains open and unobstructed and the mails can be safely transported thereon by steamboats, and the laws of the United States applicable thereto maintained, and the revenues therefrom collected.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. My point of order is that it is new legislation and not in the direction of retrenching expenditures.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I hope the honorable gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. HISCOCK,] will point out wherein this amendment is new legislation. I know of no rule upon the subject of new legislation except the making of a change in existing law. Now, if the gentleman will do that he will oblige me.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is a positive affirmative provision that a certain mail-route shall not be discontinued; and of course the maintaining of that service involves the expenditure necessary to carry it on. Under the present law the Postmaster-General has the power to discontinue the service, and this amendment strikes down that power.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to present the law upon which he predicates the statement that the Postmaster-General has now the unqualified right to discontinue this service.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish the gentleman would withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot do it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I think this is a very important amendment. From my knowledge of the river service, I am satisfied that great injustice will be done to a large number of people, or is liable to be done, if this amendment shall not be adopted. I will not speak to the point of order, for I rose simply to press upon the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the importance of this amendment in reference to that service.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not discuss the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the law before him?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not. It is so well known and has been so long recognized by the Department that I did not suppose it necessary to have it here. These routes can be discontinued in the discretion of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman show me the provision of law or the section of the statute which authorizes this discontinuance? The amendment I have offered does not propose to change any existing law. It merely supplies explanatory words, words needed to give a legislative construction and force to the existing law. In other words, if you please, it introduces words required by a reasonable intendment of an existing statute in order to give sense and meaning to that statute according to the words used in it. It proposes no change of existing law.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that a bare statement of facts will recommend the amendment I have offered to the approval of the committee. I need only refer to the tables introduced into the speech of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to show that on the — day of ——, 1880, the steamboat mail service was discontinued on the Mississippi River between Saint Louis and Saint Paul under the superficially fair pretext that the railroad mail service furnished a sufficient accommodation to the people in the neighborhood of said river. The new Postmaster-General had entered about this time upon a system of retrenchment and reform in the postal service, in some respects commendable but for a prurient ambition for the fame of retrenchment and economy in the administration of his office.

Without personal knowledge or due inquiry into the correctness of his information, and in the face of adverse facts, known everywhere except in his own Department, the steamboat mail service was unlawfully, unjustly, and ignorantly discontinued.

Members of this body from Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois, and Missouri, who will recall to mind the continuous floods in our western rivers before, after, and about the time the steamboat mail service was discontinued, will remember that nearly, if not all, the railroads which then supplied a portion of the river population were submerged, and much of the river line entirely cut off from mail facilities; and to prevent a recurrence of this evil I have offered the amendment.

Now, it was not pretended in the statement read by the gentleman from New York that in the cases of discontinuance of the mails a statutory reason had been given for such discontinuance. The mails were discontinued simply because in the opinion of the Postmaster-General there was no necessity for their continuance, because the country bordering on that river was abundantly supplied with mail facilities without the steamboat mail service.

I have deemed it necessary to offer this amendment in order that the object intended by the statute upon this subject may be accomplished—that the meaning of the several provisions in pari materia with reference to this service may be made effectual.

By the second clause of section 3964 "all the waters of the United States" are declared post-roads. Now how are we to interpret the words added to that clause, "during the time the mail is carried thereon?" Was this clause designed to vest in the Postmaster-General a discretion to say when and how long the navigable waters of the United States should be post-roads? The House cannot so determine upon an examination of the other sections which are to be examined in connection with this provision. Section 3965 provides that "the Postmaster-General shall provide for carrying the mail on all post-roads established by law." Are not the navigable waters of the United States post-roads? Are they not made so by the very statute before us? How long are they to continue such? What was the meaning of this provision declaring them post-roads "during the time the mail is carried thereon?" It is known to everybody except the Postmaster-General that there are certain climatic causes which naturally and necessarily suspend the transportation of the mails during a portion of the year upon some of the navigable waters of the United States; and it is in view of this well-known fact that the words of limitation are added to the second clause of section 3964.

But, Mr. Chairman, by section 3969 it is declared that the Postmaster-General may cause the mails to be carried upon all steamboats plying upon the navigable waters of the United States. It may be said that this section gives the Postmaster-General a discretion. But I hope gentlemen who are disposed to give these statutes a reasonable and a fair construction will bear in mind that while the section uses the permissive word "may," it is nevertheless a mandatory statute. The public have an interest in the exercise of the power granted; and where third parties or the public have de jure a claim upon the exercise of the power granted (which is the case here) then the statute is mandatory. It cannot be denied by the honorable gentleman from New York that the public have an interest in this matter. I will not say any thing now on the merits of this question, although a large portion of our population has been deprived of mail service which has been enjoyed for the last century—I was about to say ever since the discovery of the great Mississippi River. I will postpone any discussion of that matter until the point of order shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the general statute makes the waters of the United States post-roads; but there is no statute providing that the Post-Office Department shall carry the mails upon all those post-roads. It is nowhere made incumbent upon the Postmaster-General to do so. The construction contended for by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] would compel the Post-Office Department to maintain the mail service upon all post-roads of the United States; and it is true that the rivers of the country, including particularly this river, are post-roads.

Section 3969 provides that—

> The Postmaster-General may cause the mail to be carried in any steamboat or other vessel used as a packet on any of the waters of the United States.

There is no legislation which takes from the Postmaster-General the discretion to utilize the waters of the country as post-routes. Every section which can be found relating to this subject recognizes distinctly a discretion in the Postmaster-General.

Now, this amendment proposes to make it incumbent upon him to do that which he now has the discretion to do. It proposes positive and affirmative legislation as to one class of post-roads. Hence, in my judgment, it is an amendment of the existing law, and not being in the direction of decreasing expenditures, is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say——

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would like to say one word before the Chair decides this question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I understand the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to make the point that this amendment takes from the Postmaster-General a discretion. Now, if that is the point insisted upon, this is the first time I have ever heard that discretion is law; I have always supposed discretion to be the absence of law, the want of law. But in this case the statute plainly specifies all the circumstances under which the Postmaster-General is authorized to discontinue the mails. I read from the statute:

> SEC. 3974. Whenever in the opinion of the Postmaster-General the postal service cannot be safely continued, the revenues collected, or the laws maintained on any post-road, he may discontinue the service on such road or any part thereof until the same can be safely restored.

What is the application of this section to the provision I have offered? My amendment declares that the Postmaster-General shall not discontinue the mail service unless for one of the several causes specified in the statute. Now, I would like the gentleman to show me where the Postmaster-General is authorized to discontinue the mail for any other than the causes specified in this statute. The amendment, then, does not change existing law; it simply takes from the Postmaster-General, as gentlemen have said, a power to act in violation of the plain reason and intention of the law.

It does not change the law. If the gentleman or anybody else means to say the second clause of the thirty-nine hundred and sixty-fourth section intended to leave it discretionary with the Postmaster-General to say how long those navigable waters of the United States should remain post-routes, then I will call his attention to section 3975, which provides that where a contract to carry the mail has been made upon a route not declared or established by law, then the Postmaster-General shall report to the next session of Congress, and unless the route is re-established thereupon the mail shall be discontinued.

If the gentleman is correct in his construction of the statute, then, since 1872 the Postmaster-General, by annually letting contracts for carrying the mails on these navigable waters, has been violating the statute by not making a report to Congress and have Congress again re-enact these waters as post-routes.

But I ask, Mr. Chairman, this House to determine this question on presentation of the statute which I have read, Are the navigable waters of the United States post-routes according to the statute? If they are post-routes then mails can be discontinued on them only for cause. It is not pretended mails are discontinued for cause. On the contrary, the statement is made by the honorable gentleman himself that the mails were discontinued because there was no longer use for them, and that in face of the fact that the whole country and every railroad bordering on the Mississippi River were at that time submerged and the country was deprived of its mails. The gentleman from Wisconsin and my humble self, among others, petitioned for the re-establishment of these mails, but the then Postmaster-General, in his desire to connect his name with some reform and retrenchment, would not, and did not, restore the mails which the people were demanding from the source of the river to Saint Louis.

There are five hundred landings and half a million of people who by this arbitrary act, this unauthorized act, this act in violation of the law, were cut off from the ordinary facilities of mail service.

I now ask that this House will do by legislative construction of the law, not by any new act, not by any new provision, but by legislative construction of the law, what is necessary to the proper discharge of the official functions of the Postmaster-General and necessary to fair dealing with these people, so as to prevent the further cutting off of these people from their ordinary mail facilities. This can be accomplished by the amendment which I have offered, and which I hope will be adopted by the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this point of order, as the other day I gave notice, during the general discussion, of an amendment which I intended to offer to the present section, and as the same point of order may be raised against my amendment which has been raised against that moved by the gentleman from Illinois, it is perhaps necessary I should not allow the occasion to pass by. I wish to be heard, therefore, on the pending amendment before the Chair rules upon the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to contend that where by law a postal route has been established, whether on a post-road or railroad or a navigable water-course or wherever by law a post-route has been established, it is in the power of the Postmaster-General, in his option, to discontinue it. If such a power be by law lodged with the Postmaster-General, then he has the right to discontinue the mail service on any mail-route. I do not believe there is any such law granting such power. He can only discontinue them for specified reasons.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HUBBELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

One of the messages announced the approval of the bill (H. R. No. 4240) supplemental to the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the final expenses of the tenth census."

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session.

Mr. HOOKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, to continue. Section 3964 declares what shall be post-roads, and declares among other things that all navigable waters of the United States, during the time the mail is carried thereon, shall be post-roads; that all railroads or parts of railroads which are now or hereafter may be in operation, that all canals during the time the mail is carried thereon, that all plank-roads during the time the mail is carried thereon, shall be post-roads. Section 3965 provides that the Postmaster-General shall provide for carrying the mail on all post-roads established by law as often as he, having due regard to productiveness and other circumstances, may think proper. Section 3966 provides that the Postmaster-General shall cause a mail to be carried from the nearest post-office on any established post-road to the court-house of any county in the United States which is without a mail. By section 3967 the Postmaster-General may contract for carrying the mail on the navigable canals of the several States when, in his opinion, the public interest or convenience requires it.

By other sections the Postmaster-General may discontinue mail service on a post-road not declared by the legislative department of the Government, but only for certain reasons, and when he does a subsequent section of the statute provides that he shall report to Congress why he discontinued it and the reasons therefor.

Mr. HISCOCK. What section is that?

Mr. HOOKER. Section 3975. It declares that the Postmaster-General may, when he deems it advisable, contract for the transportation of the mails to and from any post-office; but where such service is performed over a route not established by law, he shall report the same to Congress at its meeting next thereafter, and such service shall cease at the end of the next session of Congress, unless such route is established a post-route by Congress.

In other words, sir, under the discretionary power with which the Postmaster-General is vested he may create a mail-route not created by law, but he can only do so up to the next ensuing session of Congress, when he must report the facts, and further legislative action must be had before it can be continued for a single instant beyond that.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to call his attention also to the fact that when from any one of the causes stated the route is discontinued, as soon as the cause is removed the same shall be restored.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir. There has been, therefore, Mr. Chairman, discontinuance of the mails on a variety of steamboat routes throughout the country at the discretion of the Postmaster-General, routes established by law, contracted for under the law, and at the rate fixed by law. They have not been discontinued because of delinquency on the part of the contractors, but simply discontinued at the option or discretion of the Department. If you give the Postmaster-General the authority to discontinue these routes, or if you admit his right to discontinue them, there is no point at which he may be required to stop. If, as is insisted upon by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he has this power to discontinue these routes at will, he may at his discretion discontinue the whole mail service of the country. Why should we send to the Post-Office Committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania is chairman and provide that the mail shall be carried upon a specific route if there is to be discretion left on the part of the Postmaster-General to discontinue it at will? And yet, sir, such has been done with reference to the steamboat routes of this country, when there is but about twenty-one thousand miles of that service in all, compared with about ninety-two thousand miles of railway service and two hundred and thirteen thousand of star-route service. He has adopted the pruning system and cut off at his discretion many steamboat routes, to the great discomfort and inconvenience of the people.

Now, upon the point of order, I say that this is not new legislation which is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. Shall it be said that you are making provision for new legislation when you simply provide a bill for the continuance of routes already established by law? Is that new legislation? Unquestionably not, sir; but it is simply a provision to be incorporated in the bill that the routes already established by law shall not be discontinued at the mere option or discretion of the Postmaster-General. This is therefore no new legislation. It is not an expenditure of money. It is not in the line of extravagance, as contradistinguished from the line of economy, but, on the contrary, it simply proposes to continue the existing mail-routes, and provide by legislation for their continuance as already established by the law.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to see how any gentleman can contend that this is a change of existing law—this provision by which force is to be given to the present law. It is simply directory in its character. All the mail service of the United States, whether river or railroad or star, is subject to the limitation of legislation, as I understand it; and I do not see why the Congress of the United States has not the power to prescribe the way that this mail shall be carried. It seems to me, sir, to be plain that it clearly in no wise conflicts with existing law, and is not therefore subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that while this proposed legislation would be perfectly proper when reported by the appropriate committee, the Chair must follow the rule adopted for the guidance of the Committee of the Whole on appropriation bills.

The requirements of the rule are:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures, in one of three ways.

That is the language of the rule.

Now, this provision of the gentleman from Illinois changes existing law in this—and the Chair may state in the first instance that where there is no law on the subject all of the rulings have been in harmony with the construction which the Chair now holds, namely, that any proposed law upon that subject is a change of existing law, because it makes a new law—this provision of the gentleman from Illinois proposes a new law to the extent of curtailing the power of the Postmaster-General, as provided in sections 3970, 3971, and 3972, with several other sections of the Revised Statutes, all of which vest in the Postmaster-General a discretion generally on this subject.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. May I ask to have read in this connection the sections to which the Chair refers?

The CHAIRMAN. These statutes apply generally to all roads and to post-offices along such roads, also to the termini of such roads; so that if this law passes the discretion of the Postmaster-General with reference to this one route would be destroyed. At least it would be a new provision, if it is conceded none now exists upon the subject.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to section 3970 of the statutes, and ask to have that section read in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was just coming to that. The Chair construes this section 3970 to mean that in addition to the general discretion vested in the Postmaster-General upon the subject, this gives him additional latitude in annulling contracts; it increases his descretion, if that were possible, rather than restricts it. At least the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is new in its features, and in that sense is obnoxious to the rule under which we are operating; and for that reason the Chair with great hesitancy feels impelled to sustain the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BRIGGS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, was read, announcing that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census; and, also, that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution to print 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Before the committee rose informally, that a message from the Senate might be received, I had risen to appeal from the decision of the Chair, which I do with great reluctance and without the slightest disrespect to the highly esteemed and distinguished gentleman in the chair. Knowing the general inclination to sustain the Chair I do not hope to reverse its decision, but to avail myself of the time allowed by the rule for further remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois for that purpose.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I believe under the rule I may be heard a few moments on the subject of the appeal.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire for information, not for the purpose of cutting off the gentleman from Illinois, to know what debate is allowable on a question of appeal.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I understand fifteen minutes are allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that where the subject on which the decision of the Chair was given was debatable the appeal may be debated in the discretion of the Chair. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Under the construction given by the Chairman to this statute the Postmaster-General is vested with the discretion or with the power to declare what are and what are not post-roads, how long they shall continue to be post-roads, how long the mails shall continue to be carried on them; which is in violation of the statute which commands him to cause mails to be carried on all post-roads established by law, with no authority, expressed or implied, to abolish any one of them or discontinue the mails thereon except for causes specified.

In order to sustain the construction which the Chair has given to the statute this committee must decide, first, that under the second clause of section 3964 the words "during the time the mail is carried thereon" relate to and limit the service to the will and pleasure of the Postmaster-General, rather than to that annually recurring period when our rivers are frozen up and it is impracticable or unsafe to carry the mails upon them.

I freely admit when navigation is unsafe, when ice is floating upon the Mississippi River and persons and property become insecure on steamboats, then the mails are unsafe and the Postmaster-General is properly authorized under the statute to discontinue them. But the moment that cause is removed, the moment the season of navigation returns, it is in the letter and intention of the statute that the mails shall be restored. The statute declares in language not to be misunderstood that so soon as the causes for which the mail has been discontinued have ceased or disappeared the mail shall be restored.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what railroad or post-road in the United States, what portion of our common country may not by the arbitrary edict, or rescript if you please, of the Postmaster-General be deprived of those postal advantages which we claim to have been extending from year to year, and which have now reached an aggregate cost of $40,000,000, and still denied to the rural people, but profusely extended to cities of 20,000 inhabitants? The Postmaster-General, under the construction which the Chair has given to this statute, may, without any action of Congress, make and unmake post-roads at his pleasure, which I say is a violation of the Constitution of the United States as well as an evasion of the intention of the statute. I say that the amendment I have offered is only explanatory of a reasonable intendment of existing law. It is simply supplying words plain and clear to express the intention of obscure words of the statute which necessarily imply precisely what the words of the amendment declare, but are not comprehended or respected by the Postmaster-General. And I hope, unless this committee are disposed to extend the already dangerous power of any Department of this Government; unless the committee are willing to despoil Congress of the power which the Constitution itself confers and delegate it to the Postmaster-General, it will not sustain the ruling of the Chair. The power of declaring what shall be post-roads is a power committed by the Constitution to the Congress of the United States, and this Congress can not and ought not attempt to commit it to the Postmaster-General or to any other Department of this Government.

I repeat, the amendment proposes no change of existing law, but is intended to supply words of explanation, and thereby give legislative construction and force to an existing law. The several sections of the statute to which I invite the attention of the House are in pari materia, and should therefore be considered and construed as one section or law. Section 3964 declares:

All the waters of the United States are post-roads during the time the mail is carried thereon.

From section 3965 I take as follows:

The Postmaster-General shall provide for carrying the mails on all post-roads established by law.

Section 3974 reads as follows:

Whenever in the opinion of the Postmaster-General the postal service cannot be safely continued, the revenues collected, or the laws maintained on any post-road, he may discontinue the service on such road or any part thereof until the same can be safely restored.

Returning to section 3964, we must here stop and inquire, what is meant by the qualifying words here found, as it is the intention of the law that must govern the decision of this question. By this section it is provided that all the waters of the United States are post-roads during the time the mail is carried thereon. Why is this limitation applied to the waters of the United States and not to railroads. Is it for the purpose of conferring on the Postmaster-General the authority to abandon all the navigable waters of the United States for mail transportation at his will and pleasure, or to express that annually recurring condition of some of the waters of the United States which renders the transportation of the mails unsafe and impracticable by steamboats.

To my mind the reason is obvious and leaves no room for a reasonable doubt that it relates to the season of navigation and not to the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

It is a well known fact that a portion of the waters of the United States, from regular periodical climatic causes, necessarily cease to be, for the time being, post-roads, because they cannot be used as such; and during such portion of the year the laws applicable to post-roads are not in force upon them. It was in view of this well known fact, and to provide for the periodical suspension of navigation and the consequent discontinuance of the steamboat mail service, that the obscure words "during the time the mail is carried thereon" were introduced instead of the words during the season of navigation, which are definite and expressive of the intention of the law.

In support of this view and construction of section 3964, I call attention to section 3974. This section provides:

Whenever, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General, the postal service cannot be safely continued, the revenues collected, or the laws maintained on any post-road, he may discontinue the service on such road, or any part thereof, until the same can be safely restored.

This section forbids any other interpretation than I have given to section 3964, and negatives the idea that it was intended to confer any power, discretion, or authority, except in connection with and under the limitations and provisions of section 3974, which enumerates all the causes which justify a discontinuance of the mail on any post-road.

These contingencies are thus, with particularity and certainty, expressed as follows:

First. When the postal service cannot be safely continued.

Second. Or the revenue be collected.

Third. Or the laws maintained.

The condition of things contemplated and provided for by this statute arises when our lakes and rivers are filled with heavy floating ice, which renders navigation unsafe, or when the rivers and lakes are frozen over and navigation is impracticable. In either case the mails may be discontinued. In the first case, because the mails cannot be safely transported; and in the second they can neither be transported safely, the revenues collected, nor the laws maintained.

If my construction of section 3964, supported by the provisions of section 3974, is correct, and I think there can be no reasonable doubt on the subject, then it is only necessary that we turn to section 3965 to ascertain the obligation in respect to post-roads imposed by this section on the Postmaster-General, which is as follows:

The Postmaster-General shall provide for carrying the mails on all post-roads established by law.

Unless it be successfully denied that the navigable waters of the United States are post-roads during the season of navigation, then the law is imperative that the mails shall be carried on them during such season of navigation. If the navigable waters of the United States are not post-roads, then every letting of contracts for carrying mails upon them since the adjournment of Congress in 1872 has been a positive, plain, and direct violation of the law.

Section 3975 provides that—

When mail service is performed over a route not established by law the fact shall be reported to Congress at its next meeting, and the service shall cease at the end of such session, unless such route is established as a post-route by Congress.

The reports of the Post-Office Department show that the mails have been carried on the navigable waters of the United States for the past ten years, and while thus carried the waters were and continue to be post-roads, to which the provisions of section 3965 are applicable, or they are not post-roads, to which the law of section 3975 is applicable.

It will be observed that all the provisions of the statute relating to post-roads, and the transportation of mails thereon, only authorize the Postmaster-General to "contract," but by section 3969 a much broader authority is conferred in respect to steamboats and other vessels on the waters of the United States. This section is as follows:

The Postmaster-General may cause the mail to be carried in any steamboat or other vessel used as a packet on any of the waters of the United States.

Although the permissive word "may" is employed in this section, it is not therefore the less mandatory and imperative.

The word "may" in this section, as in many others to which I will refer, means shall and must, because the public have an interest in having the act done authorized to be done. See also section 3962.

I presume no well-informed lawyer will deny that it is a well-settled rule of construction that the word "may" means shall and must when the public and third persons have de jure a claim to have the granted power exercised, or where a thing may be done which is for the public interest, it must be done. Let us take for example a case in statutory juxtaposition.

Section 3962 of the act immediately preceding provides that the Postmaster-General may make deductions from the pay of contractors for failure to carry the mail according to contract.

Can it be pretended that the Postmaster-General, under his authority to let contracts for four years, may let a contract for that period at $100 per year for carrying the mail between any given points, and notwithstanding the mail be not carried at all during the whole period, continue to pay the contractor the same as if the mail had been duly transported according to contract. If he could not lawfully do this, then in this section the word "may" means shall and must, because the public have an interest in having the contract performed, as well as the duty of the officer to whom the supervision of such matters is committed.

If I am not right, and the Postmaster-General may create a sinecure for his friends, then cease to prate of the irregularities and frauds of the star-route service under the past administration.

Now, sir, the amendment I have offered does not change existing law, as I have endeavored to, and hope I have successfully shown, but merely supplies words required by a reasonable intendment and construction of an existing law, thereby giving the sense and meaning of the statute necessarily implied from the words used.

I have shown that under existing law the mails are required to be carried on the navigable waters of the United States, but under a misconstruction or disregard of its provisions, they have been discontinued without cause, contrary to the intent and meaning of the law.

The law was made with reference to the practice of the Government from the dawn of its existence, of transporting mails by water during the season of navigation, and any other construction than I have given it confers on the Postmaster-General a law-making power whereby he may make and unmake post-roads at pleasure, a power that Congress alone can exercise under the Constitution.

If the great Mississippi was walled on both sides with a railroad from its mouth to its source it would furnish no excuse for taking from it the natural right of the parent of commerce and social intercourse, or to abandon its everlasting waters for the benefit of the perishable device of human enterprise. Let no man in this House talk of monopoly as long as a Department of the Government, with or without the authority of Congress, may, with impunity, abandon the great natural highways, under the absolute control and dominion of the United States, to patronize, uphold, and maintain their artificial competitors, owned and controlled by corporations.

It is not sufficient, if true, to say that railroads furnish all necessary mail facilities to the people living on the banks or adjacent to the navigable waters of the United States. These waters are public property, and it is the interest of the people and duty of the Government to utilize them to the full extent of their capacity. And while Congress is appropriating money annually, as it should do, to improve the navigation and increase their usefulness, the Postmaster-General is employing the power and influence of his office to defeat that object by transferring the patronage of the Government from the rivers and lakes to the shore, from the steamboats to the railroads, thus catering to a private interest rather than a public good.

Steamboats are built with reference to the authority of the Postmaster-General to command their services in the transportation of the mails, and no power should be allowed to discriminate against them.

It is not the discrimination against steamboats only of which I complain and desire to hold up to the reprobation of this House, it is that foul discrimination against an enterprising and courageous class of people, many of them my immediate constituents, who live on the banks of our rivers and lakes, and who inhabit the contiguous and surrounding country; men who in the interest of commerce are sallowed by constant exposure to the malaria of the fertile valleys of the Mississippi, whose attenuated forms watch by day and night at their respective landings to receive and deliver freight and furnish the fuel and other necessary supplies to steamboats and other water craft.

And, sir, there is still another class of thrifty and enterprising farmers and mechanics remote from railroad transportation and postal service through the medium of railways who are obliged to rely for postal service upon some neighboring steamboat landing, to which, for the whole period of their lives, they have been accustomed to repair at the sound of the boat's whistle to receive their mails.

One hundred thousand people between Saint Louis and Saint Paul, the very bone and sinew of our river trade and country's prosperity, have been unlawfully deprived by the edict of the late Postmaster-General, under a false and frivolous pretense, of the benefits and advantages of our extended and extending mail service, and thus compelled to travel from five to ten miles from their homes and the great highway of their business intercourse to some remote village or city with 20,000 or more inhabitants, there to find the meanest, most useless, and unproductive loafer in pernicious idleness obsequiously waited upon by the uniformed letter-carrier, while he must lose a day from the harvest or the plow, trudging through the sun, rain, or snow, for the expensive privilege of receiving his mail through some small aperture in the city post-office.

Has the Post-Office Department been established and our mail service extended from year to year, until it now costs upward of forty millions a year, to accommodate a class only and to minister to the ease, luxury, and indolence of cities?

Are you gentlemen on either side of this House ready to abandon the rural population of this vast country, the toiling millions, the ungloved and hard-handed laboring people who reside without the limits of cities and towns and remote from railroads, to the capricious changes and ignorant pretexts of any officer of the Government, contrary to the just intentions and spirit of the law?

Shall the farming community, who are as much entitled to your consideration and the benefits of wise and liberal legislation as any other class of men, be driven to the sacrifice of comfort, health, and time, by exposure to the storms and spending a day trudging, trudging through mud and water of almost impassable roads to some distant office, when nature invites you during the season of her greatest beauty and loveliness to accept and improve the means our rivers afford for their better accommodation? Are you ready, gentlemen, to return to your respective districts and tell your hard-fisted rural population that they spend too much of their time at hard labor and are thereby becoming too prosperous to merit your consideration; that they do not deserve and will have no further accommodations until they learn to labor less, have less to sell and more to buy, and deck themselves in the threadbare garments of genteel beggary and organize into idle and contentious corporations of 20,000 inhabitants, and thus recommend themselves to your consideration and favor?

Will you stand mute while the responsible head of the Post-Office Department is abstracting from the greatest natural highway and artery of commerce of this country its most essential feature of usefulness, and one of its most attractive and valued privileges of affording a desirable and necessary intercommunication by mail of the States and people living on its borders?

Shall the great city of Saint Louis, the metropolis of the Southwest, be denied this necessary handmaid of her growing commerce and extending traffic, and her advance to metropolitan greatness and superiority be retarded for a moment by any official action not warranted by law?

Shall Saint Paul and Minneapolis, the brilliant beacons at the head of this great Father of Waters, expanding at each day and hour in social and commercial importance, besides the many intermediate cities of great future promise and present commercial importance and social attractiveness, among which I may refer in their order to the "Gem City" of Quincy, Burlington, Keokuk, Hannibal, Rock Island, Warsaw, and many others of growing business and increasing population, be in like manner despoiled of their natural advantages and reduced to the condition of interior towns, villages, and railroad stations?

Will Congress continue to worry over the long-mooted question of railroad discrimination while the Postmaster-General is left free to discriminate in their favor and against the navigable waters of the United States, which now and forever will constitute their only competitors in the carrying business of the country, and if properly encouraged and patronized by the people and their Government will do more to correct and abolish whatever seeming inequality and injustice there may now be in railroad charges and management than the vanity of Congress has ever assumed to undertake?

If the navigable waters of the United States, supplied to us by the wisdom and beneficence of our Creator to facilitate the intercourse of the people, may be safely abandoned in the interest of any artificial means of communication, it would be equally safe and quite as sensible if Congress, in the latitudinous construction of its powers, should abolish the sun, moon, and stars in order to patronize the greatest monopolies of this generation, substituting the gas-light therefor. I am not, sir, unfriendly to railroads or gas companies, or any of the adjuncts which science and art may supply to nature. As such I would encourage them; but when a laudable rivalry is passed and an attempt is made to reverse the order of creation and make nature stand aside that art and science may levy unlimited contribution on the people, against such a policy I protest in the name and behalf of my constituents and the whole people. In the interest of fair dealing and an impartial administration of the Post-Office Department I protest. And I especially protest against erecting an Executive Department of this Government into a law-making power, whereby it may discriminate against or in favor of any class to the detriment and injustice of any other class. And I protest, sir, at every step against all attempts to impair the usefulness of our navigable waters or weaken their power by the adverse patronage of the Government to compete successfully for the carrying business of this country. And I protest, sir, with the emphasis a wronged and insulted people will lend to what I say, against any unmerited discrimination in favor of cities, great or small, to the neglect and suffering of the farmers and producing classes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I only desire to say that the proposition which has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] has been supported by an argument on his part that the law to-day compels the Postmaster-General to do just that which this amendment would direct and order him to do. Our reply to that proposition is that no such law as that exists; and that this discretion is vested in the Postmaster-General by virtue of those statutes to which the Chair has particularly called attention giving him discretion over this whole matter.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Before the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations takes his seat I desire to ask him whether under section 3969 the Postmaster-General is not commanded to employ the steamboats on the navigable waters in the mail service of the United States?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that the section to which he has referred, read in connection with preceding and subsequent sections to which attention has been called, does not command the Postmaster-General. But if it does command him, then the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois has offered is entirely unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? The Chair will ask a rising vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 10.

So (further count not being called for) the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after the word "dollars" in line 55.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not have the power to discontinue any mail services directed by law to be let, and which have been let after due and legal advertisement, on any of the rivers of the United States to be transported by steamboats so long as the steamboats contracted with shall continue to run in the trade on said rivers; and the said mail routes by steamboats shall be petitioned for by the people to be served on such routes: And provided further, That said service is not better made by rail and star-routes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the same point of order against that amendment that I made upon the last.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not think the amendment I have offered is the same as the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON,] or is amenable to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] against that amendment.

The various sections of the Revised Statutes which have been read in the hearing of the committee undoubtedly invests the Postmaster-General with some discretion in reference to the discontinuance of mail routes, where he has established other mail routes to perform the service. The amendment which I have offered is made general and applicable to all the waters of the United States, for I do not want to apply it to one river more than to another.

But it was intended and designed mainly to reach the case of the discontinuance of mail service on the Sunflower and Yazoo Rivers, tributaries of the Mississippi River above the city of Vicksburgh, and to which my attention has been especially called by the action of the city authorities of Vicksburgh and the people of that city.

Those are mail-routes where the contracts were let by the Postmaster-General, who was authorized under existing laws to make such contracts for a period of four years. Yet he has chosen to discontinue them, and to establish instead of the mail service by steamboats running from the city of Vicksburgh to places along the Yazoo and Sunflower Rivers, service by little star routes leading from the railroad, which runs along the interior of the State forty or fifty miles back and parallel with the line of the river, to places on the river. He claims that because he has effected certain savings by those little star routes he therefore has the right, as is also claimed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] who makes this point of order, to discontinue this mail service by steamboat, and to substitute in its stead and on his own volition other mail service along routes, some of which are not authorized by law, and can be established only under the statute which gives the Postmaster-General power to establish a temporary mail-route in place of one which has been discontinued.

Now, these very routes which the Postmaster-General says will answer all the purposes required by the service are to-day untravelable in the present condition of the country. It is impossible to carry the mails over them because that whole country is now under water. The mails must go by the steamboats, and they do go by the steamboats.

The First Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Elmer, in a letter which he has addressed to me and which I have in my desk, endeavors to show that the Post-Office Department has exercised only a wise and judicious discretion and economy in the discontinuance of the mail service by these steamboats. He says that the steamboat men who were the contractors said they could not continue the service unless they had the proper mail facilities. And yet that very letter admits that on every one of these streams the ordinary commerce of the country demands that these steamboats shall ply and they are now plying on these streams.

I say that my amendment is not amenable to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, for the reason that so long as there is a route prescribed by law, let by law, contracted for by law, with heavy penalties imposed by existing statutes on the contractor if he fails to carry out the contract with the Postmaster-General, such contract cannot be discontinued at the option of the Postmaster-General.

It is indeed made a misdemeanor, for which the contractor is punishable, to fail to carry out his contract according to his bid and the terms of the contract. And to say that the Post-Office Department possesses the power to discontinue such contract at its pleasure, thus breaking up the mail facilities of a great region of country, the people of which depend upon such contract for their mails, is to give him a power which the statute does not warrant.

If you will look further along in this bill you will find that the Committee on Appropriations recommend an appropriation of one million and three or four hundred thousand dollars for mail-carriers along the lines of the railways. The reason given by the Department why they have the right to discontinue these steamboat routes is that they have established star routes from the railroad to certain points on the river. Now, that does not meet the case, because on each one of these steamboats there is an authorized officer of the Government who distributes the mails to the people on either bank of the river, so that they have the means of communicating with the great terminal point of Vicksburgh on the Mississippi River and with New Orleans, the great entrepôt at the mouth of the river, as has been the case almost from the earliest settlement of the country.

Now, to discontinue this service is to deprive a great portion of the country of the means of having their mails brought by the steamboats to their very doors, and of receiving the letters sent to them and of having the letters which they write in answer taken away.

The answer made to the complaint that this service has been discontinued improperly is that the Department has established post-routes from the little depots on the railroad to certain points on the river. Now that is no answer to justify the great inconvenience to which the people of that section of the country are subjected by this arbitrary action of the Postmaster-General.

My amendment proposes no change of the law, and it does not add one dollar to the existing expense of the mail service of the United States. It does not propose to establish another mile of mail-route by water. It proposes simply to continue the present service by requiring, where there has been an advertisement and a letting of a contract, that such service shall be continued by steamboats, and that there shall be no power to discontinue it on the part of the Postmaster-General, except under the authority which he now has to discontinue a route when he is able to demonstrate that a better route has been established than that provided by law. And even then the power of the Postmaster-General, if he establishes service over a route not declared by law, exists only until the next session of Congress, when he shall appeal to Congress to determine whether such new routes shall be continued or discontinued.

Now, my amendment does not propose a single iota of increase of expenditure, or any increase of mail service on the waters of the United States. It does not change existing law; but simply continues in existence mail-routes already established.

I take the liberty of appending to my remarks the following:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1882.

SIR: In response to your verbal request, I have the honor to submit for your information the following statements in relation to the past and present arrangement and cost of, and necessity for, the mail service supplying offices formerly on steamboat routes No. 18099 and No. 18100.

Route No. 18099 was on June 30, 1881, date of discontinuance of service, from Vicksburgh by Campbellsville, Hollonds, (no office,) Kinlock, Greenwood, Johnsonville, Woodburn, and Indian Bayou to Faisonia, 203 miles and back, once a week in safe and suitable steamboats; contractor, S. H. Parisot; annual pay, $2,916.28.

The service in operation June 30, 1881, to offices named was as follows:

Route No. 18099, as set forth.

Route No. 18172, to Johnsonville and Indian Bayou, from Stoneville, three times a week; cost, $557.50 per annum.

Route No. 18349, to Johnsonville, from Greenwood, three times a week; cost, $1,019.40 per annum.

Route No. 18169, to Faisonia from Riverton, once a week; cost, $86.86 per annum.

Total cost of service June 30, 1881, $4,560.04 per annum.

The service in operation since July 1, 1881, to offices on route No. 18099 prior to that date, is as follows:

Route No. 18386, to Campbellsville from Green Hill, twice a week; cost, $250 per annum.

Route No. 18388, to Kinlock and Gumwood from Johnsonville, once a week; cost, $169 per annum.

Route No. 18172, to Johnsonville and Indian Bayou from Stoneville, three times a week; cost, $557.50 per annum.

Route No. 18342, to Faisonia from Indian Bayou, twice a week; cost, $69 per annum.

Woodburn has special supply from Johnsonville; cost, (?)

Total cost of service since July 1, 1881, $1,045.50 per annum.

Annual cost of service June 30, 1881	$4,560 04
Annual cost of service since July 1, 1881	1,045 50
Net saving per annum of	3,514 54
The same being—
Decrease in cost of steamboat service discontinued	2,916 28
And decrease in cost of star service	598 26
Total	3,514 54

The net revenue of all offices on route No. 18099, except Vicksburgh, which was merely a source of supply, June 30, 1881, for the quarter ended that date was but $109.79, while $4,560.04 per annum was being expended for their supply.

As to the necessity for and manner of performance of service by steamboat I invite your attention to the extracts from a report of departmental agents, quoted hereafter.

It has been stated that the performance of star service to offices formerly on route No. 18099 is impossible from about the 15th of January to about the 15th of March on account of high water overflow. In reply to this argument I have been informed that the performance of steamboat service is impossible during August and a portion of September owing to the low water. I respectfully submit that irregularity in the service, which cannot be remedied, is more to be preferred in the winter season than in August or September, for the reason that in August and September it is important that the growers of cotton should receive prompt and regular advices concerning the market, while in January, February, and March no such exigency exists.

The argument that the boats will not run unless given the mail-service, thus depriving the people of an outlet for their cotton, is not well grounded, as the boats have continued to run since said service was taken from them, when the river has been navigable.

Route No. 18100 was from Vicksburgh by Haynes Bluff, Fox Landing, Satartia, Yazoo City, Belle Prairie, Chew's Landing, Roseneath, Gum Grove Landing, Palmetto Home, Belzona, Deo Volente, Idlewild, Head Honey Island, (no office,) Sheppardtown, Sidon, and Roebuck to Greenwood, 242 miles and back twice a week in safe and suitable steamboats. Contractor, S. H. Parisot; annual pay, $4,800.

Service was discontinued by order of the Postmaster-General June 30, 1881.

Service in operation on that date was as follows:

Route No. 18100 as set forth.

Route No. 18265, to Satartia from Yazoo City, three times a week; cost, $370 per annum.

Route No. 18231, to Yazoo City from Vaughan, seven times a week; cost, $900 per annum.

Route No. 18364, to Chew's Landing, Gum Grove Landing, Palmetto Home, and Belzona, from Yazo City, three times a week; cost $1,490 per annum.

Route No. 18335, to Deo Volente, Idlewild, and Sheppardtown, from Belzona, three times a week; cost $900 per annum.

Route No. 18349, to Sidon, Roebuck, and Greenwood, from Sheppardtown, three times a week; cost $679.60 per annum.

Route No. 18197, to Greenwood, from Carrolton, six times a week; cost $290 per annum.

Total cost of service June 30, 1881, $9,429.60 per annum.

Since July 1, 1881, the following described service has been in operation, at cost as named, viz:

Route No. 18387, to Haynes Bluff and Fox Landing, from Cardiff, twice a week; cost $150 per annum.

Route No. 18265, to Satartia, from Yazoo City, three times a week; cost $370 per annum.

Route No. 18231, to Yazoo City, from Vaughan, seven times a week; cost $900 per annum.

Route No. 18364, to Belle Prairie, Chew's Landing, Gum Grove Landing, Roseneath, Palmetto Home, and Belzona, from Yazoo City, three times a week; cost $931 per annum.

Route No. 18375, to Chew's Landing, from Tchula, once a week; cost $124 per annum.

Route No. 18335, to Deo Volente, Idlewild, and Sheppardtown, from Belzona, three times a week; cost $485.74 per annum.

Route No. 18349, to Roebuck, Sidon, and Greenwood, from Sheppardtown, three times a week; cost $296.70 per annum.

Route No. 18197, to Greenwood, from Carrollton, six times a week; cost $290 per annum.

Total cost of service for supply of offices formerly on route No. 18100, since July 1, 1881, $3,547.44 per annum.

Annual cost of service, June 30, 1881	$9,429 60
Annual cost of service, July 1, 1881	3,547 44
Net annual saving of	5,882 16
The same being decrease in cost of steamboat service, (discontinued)	4,800 00
And decrease in cost of star service	5,081 16
Total	9,881 16

The net revenue of all offices on route No. 18100, (except Vicksburgh, the source of supply,) June 30, 1881, for the quarter ended that date, was $696.76; of which amount $411.10 was derived from Yazoo City, while the annual expenditure for their supply was $9,429.60.

Yazoo City, the principal office on the Yazoo River, received no postal facilities from route No. 18100, as mail for that city was transmitted prior to July 1, 1881, as since by railroad and route No. 18231.

Greenwood received but little, if any, benefit from route No. 18100, its source of supply being by way of Carrollton from Winona, on Chicago, Saint Louis and New Orleans Railroad.

In regard to the necessity for steamboat service on route No. 18100, I invite your attention to the fact that there now exists a direct through connection from Vicksburgh to Yazoo City daily, and from Yazoo City to Greenwood three times a week, as follows, namely: Vicksburgh by Jackson to Vaughan, on Vicksburgh and Meridian, and Chicago, Saint Louis and New Orleans Railroads; Vaughan to Yazoo City, by route No. 18231; Yazoo City to Belzona, by route No. 18364; Belzona to Sheppardtown, by route No. 18335; and Sheppardtown to Greenwood, by route No. 18349, supplying all offices between Yazoo City and Greenwood formerly on route No. 18100. Cardiff, the source of supply for Haynes Bluff and Fox Landing, has three times a week service direct from Vicksburgh. Yazoo City, the source of supply for Satartia, has daily connection with Vicksburgh. Greenwood has direct connection (by way of Carrollton) with Winona, on Chicago, Saint Louis and New Orleans Railroad, six times a week, thus affording a channel for mail bound south addressed to offices on the Yazoo River.

Certainly no better arrangement of service is possible.

The same statement has been made in regard to the boats on the Yazoo River as has been mentioned in regard to those on the Sunflower River, namely, that they will not run unless the mail service is given to them, and the same reply is applicable, namely, that they have been running when practicable.

Service on routes No. 18099 and No. 18100 was discontinued on a report of necessity for and manner of performance of said service, made by agents of the Department, who made such report from personal knowledge and observation. I beg to invite your attention to the following extracts from their report, namely:

"One of the bad features of the Sunflower and Yazoo River routes is that they are run by nominal agents, one consequence of which, as reported to us by the Vicksburgh post-office, is, that mail sent from that office for places on the river is not infrequently brought back to Vicksburgh, the only excuse made for it by the agents being that they were so busy that they overlooked it.

"The Yazoo packet, which left to-day, (May 14, 1881,) took out 92 letters and 30 or 40 papers, the accumulation since Tuesday, (4 days.)"

You will observe from the first quotation that the performance of satisfactory mail service was a consideration secondary to the commercial business of the contractor.

The other quotation shows what a small amount of mail was carried to offices having other regular supply, and what small benefit said offices derived from steamboat mail service.

I also invite your attention to the following extract from a letter received by this office from Mr. J. R. Powell, of Belzona, Mississippi, congratulating the Department upon the establishment of star service, namely:

"The establishment of tri-weekly star service between Yazoo City and Belzona gives the Yazoo River post-offices and tributary sections great relief from the oppressive want of service heretofore inflicted upon this country by the Yazoo River mail steamer, Captain S. H. Parisot, contractor."

In another communication, requesting the establishment of star service from Vicksburgh through to Greenwood, Mr. Powell says:

"This tri-weekly star will be preferred by every man on the river. * * * This office (Belzona) is rarely supplied oftener than once a week, and in winter * * * oftentimes we get no mail for weeks."

Mr. Powell states further that mail from Vicksburgh should be sent up the river by way of Vaughan to Yazoo City, thence by star service, as is now done.

I trust that the foregoing statements may demonstrate to you the utter uselessness of steamboat service on the routes in question.

In conclusion, I have to request that you will favor this office with any information or suggestions which in your opinion will be conducive to a more perfect arrangement of the star service.

I remain, very respectfully,

R. A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. CHARLES E. HOOKER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, this amendment is obnoxious to the same point of order made by the gentleman from New York on the last amendment. It enacts a new provision of law, and is therefore a change of existing law; and while the Chair regrets to exclude the amendment from a vote by the Committee of the Whole, he feels compelled to insist upon a pretty strict construction of the rule; and therefore holds the amendment not in order.

Mr. CASWELL. Before we proceed to the next clause of the bill, I would inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] whether he has perfected his substitute for the preceding paragraph.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It is ready, and I now send it to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the provision offered by the gentleman from New York as a substitute for the clause commencing at line 44, which was passed over by unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland mail transportation, namely, for transportation on railroad routes, $10,655,000. And hereafter, when any railroad company fails or refuses to transport the mails when required by the Post-Office Department upon the fastest train or trains run upon said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of the amount now provided by law. And the Postmaster-General is authorized to pay out of the appropriation for transportation on railroad routes for special railroad service between the union depot in East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri, a sum not exceeding the lowest rate which private individuals, express companies, or others may pay for transportation between said points, but not to exceed for the fiscal year $25,000, including allowance for depot room and transfer service at each terminal. And the act passed June 9, 1880, entitled "An act providing for the transportation of the mails between East Saint Louis, in the State of Illinois, and Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate on this clause has been terminated by order of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not precisely remember the order made when it was agreed that this clause should be recurred to. Is it not open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The order of the House was that debate be closed on the clause and all amendments thereto; therefore, no further debate can take place.

Mr. SPARKS. I want to make this point, Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] moves, as I understand, to go back to this clause.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. By consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent was given by the Committee of the Whole to recur to this clause.

Mr. SPARKS. Consent was given to go back to this with a view to the introduction of a substitute. Now, my inquiry is whether the substitute is not subject to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules one amendment may be offered to the substitute.

Mr. ROBESON. I reserved the right to move an amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from New Jersey, I believe, reserved the right to make an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that the right to offer an amendment can be reserved in favor of any particular member; but one amendment is in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask unanimous consent that two speeches of five minutes each be allowed upon the provision with reference to the Saint Louis bridge, for the reason that it involves legal questions which we ought to understand before we vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the committee has no power to give unanimous consent for further debate. One objection at any time would interrupt any speech which the Chair might allow to proceed, because the House has made a positive order which the House alone can modify. Of course, if no gentleman objects the Chair would not object to listening, or having the committee listen, to further remarks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think we ought to have some brief explanation, that we may understand the legal questions involved.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask that the substitute be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] be again reported. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] who makes a point of order, the Clerk will again read the substitute.

The substitute was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of this substitute.

Mr. ROBESON. I have an amendment to offer which I will submit in a moment as soon as I have ascertained the point in the substitute where it should be inserted.

Mr. CANNON. If there is to be no further discussion upon this, I would like by unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General touching this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
RAILWAY ADJUSTMENT DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1882.

SIR: In reply to yours of the 17th instant asking that you be furnished with a statement showing the service performed by the Saint Louis Bridge Company between East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri, and, as near as can be stated, the value of the service, the existing contract for the same, and the attention which has been given to the subject in determining the rate of compensation proper to be allowed for the service, I have the honor to say that $30,000 was provided by act of March 1, 1881, to pay for this service for the year ending June 30, 1882. This office believed that sum to be more than a fair compensation for the service, and sent two of the most experienced officers in the Department to Chicago and Saint Louis to ascertain the amount and character of the service, and what would be a fair equivalent for the same. The data obtained showed the number of whole railway post-office cars drawn over the bridge and through the tunnel by the bridge company to be—

Per annum	6,258
2,817 route agents' apartments in combination cars—average length 14 feet, being equal to one-third car each or to whole cars	939
Total	7,197

Weight of closed mails carried in baggage-cars per annum, 921 tons.

Subsequent to the making of the above report and prior to the settlement with the company another line of cars was ordered, which increased the number of whole cars 626 per annum, making the whole number of cars 7,823.

The yield of the passenger and express business, as ascertained by the committee, was: from passenger cars, $2.79 each; from express matter, $1 per ton.

The statement was then made up as follows:

7,823 cars at $2.79 each	$21,826 17
921 tons, (express mails)	921 00
For room at union depot and handling mails	2,418 42
Total	25,165 59

The rate of compensation agreed to be paid the company to June 30, 1882, is $25,000 per annum.

Very respectfully,

RICH'D A. ELMER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. G. CANNON, House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask unanimous consent to read the law.

The CHAIRMAN. That the Chair holds would be in the nature of debate and not in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope that the gentleman in charge of the bill will consent that the Committee of the Whole may rise, for the purpose of allowing debate, so that we may act on this question upon proper information.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Committee of the Whole gives unanimous consent, the law can certainly be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will listen until some gentleman objects, but will then be obliged to enforce the rule.

Mr. SPARKS. I want to direct attention to the charter of this bridge company, the act of July 25, 1866.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is discussion transpiring on this amendment?

Mr. SPARKS. I am reading the law.

Several MEMBERS. Let the Clerk read it.

Mr. SPARKS. I can read it as loud as the Clerk.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It is whether an order of the House was not made that all debate on this section and the amendments thereto should be closed in twenty minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Such an order was made by the House.

Mr. SPARKS. I apprehend my colleague does not object to my reading the law under which this company was incorporated.

Mr. CLARDY. No; in the event the gentleman is permitted to read from the law that I shall then be permitted to read the amendatory act.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. If it is to open the matter to discussion I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that discussion is closed, and the order of the House must be enforced if objection be made.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand there is no objection to my reading the law under which this bridge company was incorporated.

Mr. CLARDY. There is no objection if I shall be permitted also to read the supplemental act.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to show, Mr. Chairman, by the law this bridge company is compelled to carry the mails at the same rate as railroads leading to it carry them.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to debate.

Mr. SPARKS. We have a right to amend the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey has an amendment to offer.

Mr. ROBESON. Have I a right to make a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. SPARKS. I have made the point of order.

Mr. ROBESON. My point is that it changes existing law, in that it provides a greater rate than is provided by law. The law of 1876 provides that any bridge constructed under the authority of this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mail.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a point of order, and insist the Chair has decided discussion shall close under the order of the House.

Mr. ROBESON. I am discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on his point of order.

Mr. HATCH. The Chair has decided debate cannot be carried on longer without unanimous consent, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will restrict debate as far as possible, but the gentleman from New Jersey has the floor to state a point of order.

Mr. ROBESON. I do not propose to go into any discussion, but will confine myself to the point of order. The act of 1876, Statutes at Large, volume 14, pages 244, 245, provides what I have read, and, in addition, "upon which no higher charge shall be made for transmission over the same of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile for their transportation over the railroads or highways leading to the said bridge." By the act of 1868, amendatory of that act, to be found in Statutes at Large, volume 15, page 123, I find that when this company consolidated with another company the company formed by such consolidation, under the name and style of the Illinois and Saint Louis Bridge Company, was recognized and declared a corporation by that name, with full power and authority to construct a bridge across the Mississippi opposite the city of Saint Louis, in conformity with the act of which it was amendatory.

This is an act amending the act of incorporation, so stated in its terms as well as in the title of the act, and I say that fixed the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman in fairness now on that point of order, to be permitted to read section 2 of the act from which he has read, passed in 1868:

And be it further enacted, That the said corporation may execute a mortgage and issue bonds payable, principal and interest, in gold, and their bridge across the Mississippi River and approaches thereto when constructed shall be a post-road to convey the mails of the United States, and enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads.

That is the act of 1868, amendatory of and changing the other act. This is a subsequent act, and it is claimed at least that it changes that act.

Mr. ROBESON. I offer the following amendment——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has some hesitation in deciding the point of order, and believes it to be safer to overrule it and leave it to the committee.

Mr. ROBESON. I withdraw the point of order, and offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "year" the following: "The sum necessary to pay for the same at the rate per mile as is paid for their transportation over railroads leading to such bridge."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CLARDY. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARDY. I make the point of order that this amendment repeals existing law, and is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. What law?

Mr. CLARDY. The statute which authorizes the construction of this bridge.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. CLARDY. I trust the Chair will hear me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no discretion in the matter.

The point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri is that this proposed amendment changes existing law; but the Chair thinks it does not, under the construction which has been practically given to it, when the two sections are taken together, and therefore holds that the amendment is in order.

Mr. CLARDY. With all deference to the Chair I hope he will bear with me for a moment, as I wish to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey, who has given his construction of this law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman upon the point of order.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman from New Jersey has had an opportunity of stating his construction of the statute upon this subject, and I want an opportunity of giving mine, and if it is the correct construction then this amendment is not in order if it does not repeal existing law.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that under the statute to which the gentleman from New Jersey refers, which was approved July 25, 1866——

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman claim that it repeals existing law and is not in the direction of retrenching expenditures?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the point of order upon which the Chair ruled. The gentleman made the point of order that the amendment was not in the line of retrenching expenditures, and therefore, under the rule, it was not in order. The Chair will indulge the gentleman, however.

Mr. CLARDY. I think we ought to understand this statute. In this original statute there is a provision, as stated by the gentleman from New Jersey, that all bridges constructed under this act shall be recognized and known as post-roads; upon which roads no higher rate shall be charged for transportation over the same of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States than is charged for the transportation of the mail or other property of the United States on railroads or public highways leading to such bridges.

There is an act amendatory of this, a section of which was also read by the gentleman, which recites among other things that the bridge to be built shall be built in conformity to the act of which this act is amendatory. That is in conformity to the statute of 1866, by which I hold that it means, and I think that it is not susceptible when the whole section is taken together of any other interpretation, that this bridge shall be constructed in accordance with the plan recited in this original act; that is to say, that it shall have the same number of spans, that they shall be the same distance apart; and I take it that the conclusion of that section shows that the reference is altogether as to the manner of the construction of the bridge, because I find one provision added to this section in the following words:

Provided further, That in constructing said bridge there shall be one span of it at least five hundred feet clear between the piers.

That is the only difference between that and the section referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] which provides that this shall be a post-road. There is no provision that any higher rate shall be charged than is charged on roads leading to the bridge, but it simply declares that it shall be and remain a post-road.

Now, I understand that repeals by implication are not regarded with favor. But I also understand that a statute is repealed by a subsequent statute revising the whole subject-matter of the first, and that, too, upon the principle that the mind of the legislator having been directed to the details of the subject, it is presumed that he has expressed his whole intention in regard thereto.

Now, taking this statute and examining it, I perceive that there is an absence in the original act of the language used in all the charters authorizing the construction by railroad companies of bridges across the navigable rivers of the country. Why? Because of the peculiar condition of this company. Because it was not a railroad company; but into that matter I presume I am not permitted to enter at this time.

I want to say, furthermore, and that may not be strictly in order, that we must pay some attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that we must give proper consideration to the construction given by Departments to statutes enacted for their government. And the Post-Office Department, from the date of this statute, has placed the same construction upon it which the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York places upon it. I believe that is all I desire to say in this connection at present.

Mr. SPARKS. I want to say but a word in reference to the point made by the gentleman from Missouri. His point, as I understand it, is that this amendatory act, as I had occasion to say some hours ago, lets this bridge company out of the conditions of the contract it entered into when it was originally incorporated.

Now, I think it does not do that; and hence the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] is not subject to the point of order.

What is this original act? It is a general law for the incorporation of these bridge companies for the construction of bridges over the navigable waters of the United States. Among others was incorporated this Saint Louis and Illinois Bridge Company; and in that incorporation they enter into a contract with the power that makes them; they, the creature, bind themselves to the creator that they will do a certain thing; that is, that they will carry the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war over this bridge at the same rate that the railroads leading to it carry them. That is the original contract. That is the charter, if you please. Now, subsequently that act is amended.

Mr. CLARDY. If it will not interrupt the gentleman from Illinois, I should like to call the attention of the Chair to this provision of the statute of June 19, 1880, which is the law now, and to insist, too, that of course the amendment is in contravention of this statute of 1880, which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SPARKS. The amendatory act is as quoted by the gentleman from New Jersey. Under this amendatory act the company formed by the consolidation—

Is hereby recognized and declared to be a corporation by that name, with full power and authority to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, opposite the city of Saint Louis, in conformity to the act of which this act is amendatory.

My colleague from Illinois, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, draws attention to the second section:

That the said corporation may execute a mortgage and issue bonds payable, principal and interest, in gold, and their bridge across the Mississippi River and approaches thereto, when constructed, shall be a post-road to carry the mails of the United States, &c.

That certainly does not take them without the contract entered into in the original act. Perhaps it is surplusage to use that language in the second section; but they certainly cannot by language like that in the amendatory act get rid of the contract entered into in the original act of incorporation which binds them to carry these mails in the way indicated in the law I have read. Hence I think this amendment is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have read the law sent to the desk by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARDY.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and hereby is, authorized to treat the transportation of mails between East Saint Louis and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri, as other than railroad service, and to pay for the same to the lowest bidder therefor, having due regard to the efficiency of the service, out of any appropriation available for the purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the existing law for the transportation of mails over this bridge at this time.

Mr. ROBESON. But this amendment reduces the expenditure.

Mr. MORRISON. In connection with the point of order I desire to call the attention of the committee to a few facts which it seems to me have been overlooked in considering the real merits of this question. It is probably known to members of the House, those at least who have been discussing this question, that the Illinois roads terminate on the east side of the river or at the east end of the bridge, and the roads making the connection west of Saint Louis terminate on the other side. This bridge does not belong to the railroad companies or any of them. At the west end of the bridge is a tunnel a half mile long that does not belong to the railroad companies or to the bridge company, but belongs to an independent corporation, the tunnel company. Now I insist there is no law in the statute in this charter or anywhere which requires the bridge company to carry the mails across this bridge and through this tunnel eighty times or more per day at any fixed rate, and that therefore it is a matter of contract. A little multiplication will enable gentlemen to ascertain that if the whole of this sum of $25,000 was paid for this service it would not then amount to $1 for each time these mails are hauled across this bridge and through this tunnel from East Saint Louis to the depot in Saint Louis. But the whole amount appropriated need not be paid for the service if it can be had for less than $25,000.

Mr. ROBESON. Since the gentleman from Illinois is discussing the merits of the case, will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. Do not the trains run through the tunnel and over the bridge anyhow? And does it cost any more to carry the mails than to run the trains? Is it not simply an exaction on the Government for carrying the mails?

Mr. MORRISON. The trains stop in East Saint Louis.

Mr. ROBESON. Do they not cross the bridge?

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, no; the bridge is in the hands of an independent company.

Mr. SPARKS. My colleague of course wants to state it correctly. The bridge company have their own locomotive power and the cars run right over, being taken by the bridge company's locomotives.

Mr. MORRISON. An entirely independent company transfers them from one depot to another over this bridge and through this tunnel, which are owned by two different companies, the tunnel company and the bridge company; and I repeat there is nothing in this charter or in any law which requires them to carry the mail at any fixed rate. It is therefore a matter of contract.

I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to another fact: that there are eleven States over on the other side of the river, and there is room for a hundred more the size of New Jersey. There are 10,000,000 of our people over there now, and when that country is as densely settled as the State of New Jersey now is 200,000,000 of our people will be over there. And I call attention to these facts that gentlemen may know it will subject a great many people to great inconvenience and seriously interfere with their business pursuits to have this mail stopped at East Saint Louis or delayed while gentlemen are looking up the law of this question.

Therefore it is, Mr. Chairman, I ask that some discretion be left with the Post-Office Department which will enable it to certainly secure the prompt transmission of these mails. If the Department and its law officer ascertain the law to be as some gentlemen assert it to be, but as I do not believe it to be, then the Department ought to insist that the mails shall be crossed as provided by law. If there be no such law as contended for, then the Department has authority to make the best possible contract and has the money to execute it.

Mr. ROBESON. Does the gentleman mean to say that the mail will stop, though the trains run over the bridge, if the United States Government does not agree to pay $25,000 a year for carrying the mails on the trains that do run over the bridge?

Mr. MORRISON. I mean to say what I have already twice said, that there is no law requiring any bridge company or any tunnel company to carry the mails at any fixed rates, but it is a matter of contract. The carrying of these mails may be stopped or interrupted or interfered with, unless the Post-Office Department has authority to give a reasonable compensation for the service. I am willing to trust the Department, though the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] does not seem to be.

Mr. HISCOCK. In answer to the question put by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] I will say that the evidence before the Committee on Appropriations, as I remember it, was that while there was this confusion in reference to carrying the mails over this bridge, they would be detained for one train, or for twelve hours, which was the direct operation of not making a special arrangement with the bridge company.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. ROBESON. I am willing to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that while he was at first in doubt as to whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] restricted the expenditures further than they would be restricted by the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] upon further reading of the amendment the Chair is of the opinion that upon its face it may retrench expenditures, and therefore the amendment is in order.

Mr. BLAND. Has it not been ruled over and over again that in order to make an amendment free of a point of order it must upon its face reduce expenditures?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this does.

Mr. BLAND. That you cannot go outside of the amendment in order to obtain information. Now, this amendment upon its face does not show that it does reduce expenditures, while it does repeal existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the amendment to be read again, and thinks the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will himself see that upon its face it does retrench expenditures.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The sum necessary to pay for the same at the rate per mile as is paid for their transportation over the railroads leading to said bridge.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will see that the statute originally fixed the amount, and this is restrictive to the amount paid to railroad companies. Therefore the Chair thinks that on the face of it the amendment does retrench expenditures, and so will submit the amendment to the committee.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. ROBESON; and upon a division there were—ayes 26, noes 70.

Mr. ROBESON. I call for tellers.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBESON. I want to see who will vote for this amendment. We had 142 votes for it two years ago.

Mr. HISCOCK. Reflection has satisfied members that they were then wrong.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. ROBESON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 40, noes 78.

No further count being called for, the amendment of Mr. ROBESON was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the substitute for the paragraph which has been offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

The question was taken upon the substitute; and upon a division there were—ayes 82, noes 10.

Mr. SPARKS. That is not a quorum, I think.

Mr. HISCOCK. Where the vote is so decided, I trust no point will be made about a quorum.

No further count being called for, the substitute was adopted.

The Clerk read the following:

For inland transportation by star routes, $7,250,000.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I move to amend the clause just read by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in any case where a contractor on any of these mail-routes shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, the Postmaster-

General may in his discretion make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route, without advertisement, for such period as may be necessary, not exceeding six months, or until the service shall be commenced under a contract made according to law: Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not employ temporary service on any route at a higher price than at the rate of $10 per mile for weekly service and at that rate for any more frequent service.

Mr. CASWELL. I must make the point of order on that amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is intended to remedy a defect in the present law, which in many respects is very deficient and in some cases works a very great injustice. As the law now stands it is impossible for the Post-Office Department, in many cases, to supply "temporary service" on the star routes in any reasonable time when a contractor or sub-contractor has failed to comply with the terms of his agreement. Section 3951 of Revised Statutes, as amended by act of August 11, 1876, 19 Stat., p. 129, provides as follows:

Whenever an accepted bidder shall fail to enter into contract, or a contractor on any mail route shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, or when from any other cause there shall not be a contractor legally bound or required to perform such service, the Postmaster-General may make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route, without advertisement, for such period as may be necessary, not in any case exceeding six months, (it is now one year,) until the service shall have commenced under a contract according to law. Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not employ temporary service on any route at a higher price than that paid to the contractor who shall have performed the service during the last preceding contract term.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is constantly found impossible to obtain temporary service for a short period, and often in the most inclement season, at the same price at which a contract had been let for the full term of four years. It often happens that a contractor or sub-contractor fails to perform his service at a time when both the weather and roads are at their worst, when the contract price "of the last preceding contract term" would be no adequate compensation for the service. Necessarily the mail service stops. At once whole communities are deprived of all their mail facilities. No matter how great the grievance, no matter how intolerable the hardship, the Postmaster-General, helpless under this unreasonable, not to say stupid and outrageous, law, can only answer the indignant people thus wronged that he will begin offering the contract to each successive bidder for it in the order of their former bids, beginning at the lowest, until in some remote future he may find one who will accept the contract.

Just such an outrage as this is now being inflicted on a large and intelligent community in the district I represent in this House. The mail-route from Cadiz, Ohio, to Wheeling, West Virginia, passes through a thickly peopled region, the population of which justly consider their postal privilege one of the necessaries of life. Early in the winter the contractor stopped service, and for months that large section supplied by this mail-route has been without any regular service, to the great annoyance and damage of the people and the injury of both public and private interests. Day after day I appeal to the Department, and it points me to this miserable law.

I hold in my hand now a letter from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who has been making ineffectual efforts to afford relief, but finds the entanglements of red tape and the unwisdom of this law constantly in his way. I will read what he says. After alluding to the efforts to secure temporary service, he says:

If there is no service on the route it is not the fault of the Department, but of the law which limits the pay for temporary service to a price at which it is said to be impossible to procure it.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentlemen who have this bill in charge will not ask that this amendment shall be ruled out on any mere points of order, for there is great grievance and hardship worked by the law as it now stands. It needs remedy. Just and reasonable relief can be given, and I hope the committee will not allow any technical objection to prevent a fair consideration of this matter in the interest of the people. Objection is made to granting to the Postmaster-General discretionary power. That power he now has—necessarily has—in matters of vastly larger import and responsibility than this. Such discretion is indispensable in the demands of his great Department. The statute as it stood prior to 1876 gave him discretion in the employment of temporary service on these very mail-routes. The awkward meddling of a certain committee left it crippled and most damaging. In some cases the Postmaster-General is given full discretionary power, while in smaller things, as in this case, he is utterly powerless to remedy the most flagrant hardships.

For instance, section 3999 provides:

If the Postmaster-General is unable to contract for carrying the mail on any railway route at a compensation not exceeding the maximum rates herein provided, or for what he may deem a reasonable and fair compensation, he may separate the letter-mail from the other mail and contract, either with or without advertising, for carrying such letter-mail by horse-express or otherwise, at the greatest speed that can be reasonably obtained, and for carrying the other mail in wagons or otherwise at a slower rate of speed.

Thus it is obvious that in the operation of a great Department like the Post-Office Department a certain amount of discretion is necessary to its efficient working.

There is no expenditure which the people of this country more cheerfully bear than that which is necessary to furnish the post-office facilities. Millions are expended to carry the mails on the great thoroughfares. In cities millions are expended to carry the mails several times a day to the door of every citizen. The inhabitants of rural districts, who are dependent on the small routes for their postal facilities, have at least an equal right to the consideration of the Government, as they very largely supply its needs and support its burdens. Let all share equally in its privileges and benefits.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CASWELL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt at all that the amendment is out of order, because it changes existing law.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I trust the committee will give the matter full consideration and afford a much-needed remedy for this great injustice.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend the pending clause by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part shall be paid for expedited, extended, or increased service, the cost of which would exceed $1,000, unless there has been a new advertising and letting of the expedited, extended, or increased service under the same provisions of law as were observed in the advertising and letting of the original contract.

Mr. REAGAN. I submit that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] raise the point that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to be heard a moment on the point of order. This amendment relates only to the appropriation contained in this bill; it is not in the form of a general law; it is simply a limitation upon the appropriation made in the bill. It is a direction as to the manner in which the money which we appropriate shall be used. Such a limitation on the use of money appropriated has always been held to be in order.

The limitation in the existing law is that there shall be no increase beyond 50 per centum; this amendment prohibits any increase without the letting of a new contract; and it applies only to the fiscal year covered by this bill. I think there is nothing better settled than that, in making appropriation for any particular service, the House may direct the purpose to which the appropriation shall apply.

The amendment manifestly retrenches expenditures. The Chair has only to refer to the vastly increased expenditures during the last year on account of expedited mail service to see how much a provision of this kind will save.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I have not the slightest doubt that the Chair is correct in his decision; but if I may claim the same latitude that has been allowed to other gentlemen, I would like to submit a few remarks on the point of order.

My district is situated similarly to that of my colleague, [Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio.] We have a rough and hilly country; and the mail service there is performed largely under star-route contracts. I have had occasion to make some investigation of this subject in my own district; and I find that of the fifty star-route contracts there many are performed by residents of the district, and in every such case at beggarly prices. The failures in the service as a rule result from the insufficient compensation.

A MEMBER. Have any of the routes there been expedited?

Mr. DAWES. Two were expedited. If it were permissible upon the point of order, I might make some revelations in that direction.

Let me refer to one star route for which there were fifteen bidders, the highest proposing to perform the service for $4,500 and the lowest for $720. The poor fellow who bid $720 wanted this service so badly that he bid just about half what it was worth. He carried the mail for a short time, and then failed of course. The contract was then awarded at $1,700, which was probably about right. If this discretion be taken away absolutely from the Postmaster-General, then of the fifty star-route contracts in my district a considerable percentage may fail; and then we shall be left without mail facilities, because the local contractors have bid too low. That is the rule with most of the star-route contractors in my district.

Mr. CASWELL. I must insist that the gentleman confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. DAWES. Well, that is all I have to say on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will confine themselves to the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I understand this amendment—and if I misunderstand it I trust the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will correct me—it would inferentially at least allow an increase, expedition, or extension of the service not exceeding $1,000 on a route where the full compensation does not exceed $250. Under the general law such a route could not be expedited more than 50 per cent. Therefore, if I am right in my understanding of the amendment, it is not a retrenchment of expenditures, but, on the contrary, would allow an increase beyond the existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. To show that this will decrease expenditures I desire to have read an extract which I send to the desk.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether I am right as to the purpose aimed at by the amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. It would in reference to small contracts allow an increase; but in reference to such routes there has been no complaint, and it is not supposed this amendment would affect them. But as to large contracts, which are especially intended to be embraced in the amendment, it will operate to retrench expenditures greatly. To show this I want to have read an extract from a newspaper, showing that persons are about to be indicted, or have been indicted, for frauds upon the Government growing out of the absence of law upon this very subject. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

WASHINGTON, February 20.

The grand jury on Saturday night sent down to the District attorney a presentment against twelve persons for conspiracy in the star-route cases. Among those presented for indictment are ex-Assistant Postmaster-General Thomas J. Brady, ex-Senator Stephen W. Dorsey; his brother, J. W. Dorsey; his private secretary, M. C. Rirdell; John C. Miner, of the firm of Miner, Vale & Co.; Captain W. H. Turner formerly a clerk in the Post-Office Department, and J. W. Peck, a brother-in-law of ex-Senator Dorsey. In the cases of S. P. Brown, J. E. French, F. P. Lillie, L. W. Vale, and J. H. Sanderson, whose names have been connected with star-route transactions, and some of whom have already been before the courts, the charges were virtually ignored and dismissed from consideration early in the inquiry. Colonel Bliss says: "I regard this unanimous action of the grand jury as, first, a vindication of the administration of justice in the District of Columbia; second, as a vindication of the administration of President Arthur, who has insisted from the first that justice should have full sway in these cases, and that the guilty, if there were any, should be punished; and third, as a vindication of the prosecution, and in a minor sense of myself; for I have said all along that these parties ought to be indicted and that I believed they would be."

Mr. HISCOCK. [Before the reading of the extract was concluded.] Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman from Illinois consuming all the time he may think proper; but I appeal to him, in common fairness, whether this article from a newspaper is a proper subject upon which to consume time on a point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the House can afford to spend five minutes upon a subject the neglect of which has cost us many million dollars during the past year. I make no apology for consuming five minutes upon such a question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that we all read the newspapers; the great public reads the newspapers; and he is not enlightening any body by having this inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen having eyes see not and ears hear not.

Mr. HISCOCK. That does not apply to me.

Mr. REED. The gentleman simply has it read to get it into the RECORD.

Mr. HISCOCK. My record will stand the closest scrutiny.

Mr. SPRINGER. I had no reference to the honorable gentleman.

Mr. HISCOCK. I imagine not. There is no one on this side of the House who is not willing to be subjected to scrutiny.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the rest of the paragraph be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment does change existing laws and does not retrench expenditures. The gentleman may argue that it does retrench, but the very moment you have to get at the retrenchment by argument then under the rulings the point of order cuts it out. In my opinion the amendment upon its face not only changes the law but increases expenditures, and I am quite sure such would be its effect in fact.

The CHAIRMAN. It is true this amendment would increase expenditures on its face as applied to all short contracts where $1,000 would be greater than 50 per cent. but to large contracts it would on its face retrench expenditures. The Chair does not see how he can rule this out of order upon the ground that it does not retrench expenditure.

Mr. CANNON. Pardon me; a single question. I do not wish to wrestle with the Chair, but how can the Chair say, even if there was a new advertisement, there would be a new letting at a less rate than the former letting with the increase of $1,000? In other words, you have to make an argument before retrenchment appears, and you have to make a presumption that the new contract would be less than the old one. Argument and presumption both have to be made before any retrenchment can appear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appreciates the point made by the gentleman, but thinks it a legitimate one for the decision of the committee. He therefore overrules the point of order and lets the committee decide upon the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make a remark on the merits of the question. It seems to me it will not work well. The power to increase is limited to 50 per cent. of the amount of the original contract. This makes an arbitrary limit without reference to the size or character of the contract. The contract might be for ten miles once a week at $50, and it might be increased to the amount of $1,000. A thousand dollars in other cases might perhaps not be insufficient or inequitable on account of the increased service. Fifty per cent. of the amount of the contract would be equitable if we allowed for any expedition or extension of the service at all.

I can see how this might be made to work, and indeed it could not avoid working detrimentally to those who have longer and more important contracts as contrasted with those who have shorter and less important ones. I think the amendment is inequitable and does not establish a safe rule.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I can give an instance which strengthens the position taken by the gentleman from Texas. There is now a route advertised from Miles City to Bozeman, with two schedules for bidding. There is a certain slow schedule and a certain fast schedule. The lowest bids are $21,000 for the slow schedule and $37,500 for the fast schedule. The Department has been considering upon which of these it will let the contract. The necessities of the service require it should be let on the rapid schedule, which would require $37,500. But the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, considering the subject, sees that under the law as Congress passed it last year, which increases expedition only 50 per cent. or one-half of $21,000, he can force the contractors to carry the mail on the rapid schedule, thus saving the Government about $7,000, which he could not do if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois were carried.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the effect of his amendment would not be to repeal the old 50 per cent. limitation on contracts under $1,000?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not affect it at all.

Mr. MAGINNIS. On all contracts over $1,000 it would repeal the 50 per cent. limitation.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HASKELL. I am inclined to think that it would take the place of that old 50 per cent. limitation; that the effect would be to substitute this in place of it, and that it would enable you to increase all of that service to an unlimited extent, and at an unlimited expenditure, provided you can get a new contract. If that construction be true, then any contractor who can get a petition for an increase of the service and get it agreed to by the Department is at liberty to go on and make this increase over his original contract to 200 per cent. or more if he can get a contract. I think this proposed amendment not only does not retrench expenditure but it practically opens the door to as glaring frauds as were ever perpetrated under the old law before this limitation was enacted; and the gentleman from Montana has given an illustration, where on a single contract $7,000 would be lost to the Government.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the committee, because it is a matter in which the people living in remote parts of the country and far away from the towns and villages are most interested, that in all these matters pertaining to the star-route service every attention and consideration possible shall be given. I desire to secure a most careful consideration of these star routes. I want them to be as thoroughly guarded, however, as the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois will permit; but there is nothing that these people in the rural districts and at remote points from railroad centers have a greater interest in or prize so highly as this service, which enables them to secure their weekly newspapers and mail, and, in most instances, the cost of the star route—for they run by the door of the farmer—is only a few hundred dollars per annum.

In view of the uncertain effect of this amendment, which is regarded here as of a doubtful character, tending to increase expenditures, perhaps, in one direction, but crippling the star-route service in another, and where there is such a manifest diversity of opinion as there is in this connection, it seems to me to be ill-advised, and I submit that it is not wise that we should undertake to incorporate such a provision into a mere appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I can be recognized in support of this amendment, as the time has possibly expired on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment has been exhausted. The gentleman can make a pro forma amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to strike out the last word. This amendment simply provides that where it may become necessary by the growing interests and necessities of any locality to increase, extend, or expedite the service to that point, that expedited, increased, or extended service shall be let to the lowest bidder, just as the original contract was let, except in cases where the service amounts to less than $1,000 increased service. So far as the 50 per cent. limitation is concerned, and in reference to that, I wish to say this is not a change of the law. In matters below $1,000 of increase there is no change, and the 50 per cent. limitation remains. This provision contemplates the reletting of contracts when the service is increased to exceed $1,000. Now the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Texas have made most ingenious arguments in support of their view of this question, while the gentleman from Montana imagined another very ingenious case where the Government would be involved in a considerable loss.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It is not an imaginary case; it is an actual case.

Mr. SPRINGER. And all of these gentlemen have argued against the propriety of this amendment. With all due respect to these gentlemen, I must be permitted to say that their arguments are not well founded so far as this proposition is concerned. If the Postmaster-General, with the knowledge of the existence of this law, will originally advertise for service upon a particular route, as may be required by the necessities of that particular locality, and let the contract upon those necessities and with a view to the business interests of that locality, there will not be a case in a thousand, I venture to assert, where that contract will be required to be relet during its life-time.

This amendment simply refers to the basis upon which these contracts may be made hereafter and strikes at the very root of the evil, making it practically impossible for a palpable violation of the law by the Assistant Postmaster-General in the letting of such contracts in future.

Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of impairing the efficiency of the star-route service. I acknowledge the great and growing importance of this service, as pictured so graphically by the gentleman from Kansas, and I, for one, would be unwilling to interfere with it except so far as an interference may redound to the advantage of the service itself and the necessities of the people who are supplied by it. But I do insist that these great routes which cost so much money shall be subject to a construction in pursuance of law when they are necessarily increased.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman if his proposition is not this, that the competition furnished by reletting the routes, on advertisement, will be practically a safeguard against extravagance?

Mr. SPRINGER. Precisely the same safeguard that was practiced in the original letting of the service. That is all I ask in this amendment. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] Whatever his object may be, whether it is to evade a state of affairs that existed a year or more ago, I am unable to say. But whatever the object may be, in my judgment his amendment would fail to meet the purposes I have no doubt he intended his amendment should meet.

Under the law as it now stands no service can be expedited more than 50 per cent. of the original contract. Prior to two years ago the law provided that this service might be increased to any amount that the increase of stock or the increased expedition of the service might cost.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any reason why the gentleman from Illinois, or any other member of this House, should seek to strike down the star service of this country. I hold in my hand the report of the Attorney-General of the United States, in which it is shown that the star service per mile cost less than the railroad service of the country. My friend from Illinois, who represents a State in this Union where there is no star service, but railroads run through every portion of the State, can afford to stand upon the floor of this House and provide for striking down the star service of the country which carries the mail to one-half or nearly one-half of the States of this Union and to the people of the far West. But, Mr. Chairman, I say I know of no reason why there should be an attempt on the part of the gentleman from Illinois to provide for a reletting every time an increased population shall render it necessary to increase the number of trips or the expedition of the service. It is not in the interest of economy; I deny it. It is in the interest of a class of men who reside about the capital of this Nation who have formed a ring, and who to-day have secured three-fourths of all the star-route contracts in the West. It is in the interest of perpetuating one of the most damnable rings of star-route contractors that ever existed in the country, who are here about your capital, and who do nothing but watch your bulletin boards to see if a route is to be relet, that they may join together and obtain the contract and then sublet it to some poor fellow in the West who has had the stock on the route and been carrying the mail. That would be the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

I say, Mr. Chairman, I am here to speak for the people who are not as fortunate as the constituents of the gentleman from Illinois, the men who have their service on horseback or by stage once or twice or three times a week, and in a country that has increased in population, in many instances, at a rate that it often becomes necessary in a few months to increase the number of trips, or to increase the expedition of the service.

And I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the railroad service of this country costs $11,613,368, (including $1,364,107 for railway post-office-car service,) equivalent to $11.22 a mile, notwithstanding this great Government has given an empire in public lands to build the roads; and yet the star service of this country costs the Government only $8.74 a mile, as against $11.22 for the railroad service of the country. I ask this House not to strike down or attempt to do anything that will injure the people of the western country, a country growing in population and increasing in importance. I ask that their mail service may be protected and maintained unimpaired. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will be voted down and that the law will remain as it is now, and that you will hold your public servants to strict accountability for the faithful execution of the laws.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew it. I trust the committee will not adopt the amendment of my friend from Illinois. I think the gentleman himself on examination of it will find that it certainly does not accomplish what he wants, and it certainly accomplishes what he does not want to accomplish. I ask the attention of the committee to the reading of it. It is to insert the following proviso:

That no part thereof shall be paid for expedited, extended, or increased service, the cost of which shall exceed $1,000, unless there has been a new advertising and letting of the expedited, extended, or increased service, under the same provisions of law as were observed in the original contract.

Many of these contracts date back two or three years; three-fourths of them, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] states, and I have no doubt it is true. They reach back to a date before the passage of the law passed in the last Congress limiting the increase that might be paid to 50 per cent. of the sum.

Now, my friend from Illinois proposes to go back of that law to what? To the provisions of law which were observed in the letting and advertising of the original contract, so that the results of all the struggles we had in the last Congress in reference to the letting of these contracts, and in reference to the increasing of trips and the expediting of service which resulted in the enactment of the 50 per cent. law, are obliterated, and we are remitted back to the abuses that obtained prior to that. Such will be the effect of my friend's proposition if it shall be adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Where does he find that in the amendment?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have read the amendment to the committee, and it seems to me that that is very clearly the effect of it. And it seems to be the apprehension of every gentleman who has been discussing this proposition except my friend from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I cannot see any application in his conclusion to the fact.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have simply stated my own conclusion. I may be in error.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. BLOUNT. And my friend may possibly be so too. It does seem to me very clear that my friend, by presenting this proposition, is seeking to bring this House to undo the very legislation which we all agreed upon in both Houses during the last Congress, to prevent abuses in the matter of multiplying trips and expediting service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say but a word. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has criticised the phraseology of my amendment, and asserts that it will repeal the law that was passed at the last session of Congress in regard to the letting of contracts. Now, my amendment says that the new contracts shall be let "under the same provisions of law as were observed in the advertising and letting of the original contract." That has reference solely to the details of letting, to the advertising, &c. It does not change the law in regard to the 50 per cent. limitation, except in reference to contracts over $1,000; and it changes no other law, except that it provides that the contracts for the new service shall be let under the same provisions of law as to the letting of contracts as existed when the original contract was made.

The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] has said that my amendment is in the interest of the ring of mail contractors around this Capitol. I cannot find where the gentleman discovers any such thing in my amendment. It is not in the interest of contractors, but I aim my amendment against their interests. I hope this committee will see that it is so, for in my judgment it can be viewed in no other light.

I am as much opposed to that ring of contractors as any other gentleman on this floor. When the gentleman from California says that this amendment is in the interest of that ring, he does himself injustice and does injustice to me, for he certainly cannot mean what his language imports.

Mr. WHITE. I move to amend by adding the following to the paragraph:

Two hundred thousand dollars of which may be used in the discretion of the Postmaster-General for supplying the necessary office furniture for seperating post-offices of class 4, if in the interest of economy and for the benefit of the public service.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane to this provision of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. I have been trying, Mr. Chairman, ever since this bill has been under consideration to find some place where I could offer an amendment for the benefit of fourth-class post-offices which, in the opinion of the gentlemen having charge of this bill, would be germane. I am sure that if I left it to them I should never find such a place.

I speak in behalf of a class of postmasters who are far removed from what are considered the centers of civilization. They have not their agents here at the capital; they have not their newspapers to speak for them, nor have they heretofore found many members of Congress to represent them and call attention to their grievances, for they have a grievance.

On another occasion I attempted to get the committee, while considering this bill, to make some provision that would in some measure give a fair compensation to these overworked postmasters. I think that it is in the interest of economy to insert here a provision that a part of this money, which is going to a ring so graphically described by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] and re-echoed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] it is but fair to put in here a proviso that some provision shall be made to give the postmasters of small offices the necessary furniture for handling the mails, and to give them some adequate compensation for the work they perform.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. We are exceedingly anxious to finish this bill to-night, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is not confining himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the gentleman will not be so fastidious. I mean to say that my amendment is clearly in the interest of economy. The postmasters in the small towns who are compelled by the law to separate the mails, and who depend for their compensation upon the number of stamps which they cancel, should be provided with the necessary furniture for performing their duties.

I have made inquiry at the Post-Office Department, and they tell me that they have no fund to meet this emergency. It does seem to me that instead of paying out so much money to a ring for carrying on this service, you had better pay a little of it to the postmasters who are required to distribute it properly. The large cities are interested in this matter; the whole country is interested in it. These postmasters are required by law to classify the mail, to bind it up in certain packages to go to points beyond their immediate localities, to cities in their State and in other States. What I mean to say is that they have not enough pay for looking at their work, much less for performing the service properly.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it in order now to move an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER?]

The CHAIRMAN. There is now pending an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. I thought that had been ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was made against it, and the Chair will now rule it out of order as not being germane to this paragraph.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois by adding to it these words: "but this shall only apply to future contracts."

I am not sure that the comment upon his amendment made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] was not a proper one. But I think the amendment I have offered will meet the objections they have urged.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sure that both those gentlemen concur with the gentleman from Illinois who offered this amendment, in desiring to throw every possible safeguard or protection around this matter to prevent extravagance, to prevent fraud, to prevent the operations of "rings." The whole history of those gentlemen for years past in connection with this subject establishes in my mind and in the mind of the public the fact that they desire to prevent these abuses and frauds. Now, I am certain that the amendment I have offered will obviate the objection which gentlemen make, and, that being done, this must be a good amendment, because it is simply a restriction upon the power of the Postmaster-General, so that he shall not make an increase upon any route amounting to over $1,000—not even 50 per cent. or any per cent.—unless there be a readvertisement and a reletting.

The safety of the public Treasury and the safety for purity of administration lies in the invitation of competition by readvertisement and reletting of the contract. I believe this provision is in the interest of justice. Instead of being in the interest of "rings," as the gentleman from California has intimated, it operates right in the teeth of the "rings." There is not a "ring" in connection with this matter but would want this amendment defeated.

Mr. SPRINGER. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Tenneseee is accepted as a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the amendment as modified be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 57 of page 3 the following:

"Provided, No part shall be paid for expedited, extended, or increased service the cost of which would exceed $1,000, unless there has been a new advertising and letting of the expedited, extended, or increased service under the same provisions of law as were observed in the advertising and letting of the original contract. But this shall only apply to future contracts."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to appeal to the members of the committee for their attention while I state very briefly wherein this proposed amendment is vicious. Of course I understand that my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] in urging this proposition believe that it will accomplish good, but I do not so believe.

Now, gentlemen will bear me out in the statement that the abuses which grew up prior to the amendment of the law two years ago did not grow out of the expedition of the service to the extent of 50 per cent., but out of an increase of 200, 300, 400, and 500 per cent. Those abuses grew out of letting contracts at $8,000, $10,000, or $20,000, and then by expedition of the schedule and additional trips increasing the compensation to $200,000 or $300,000. Hence, after full discussion and consideration, the House and the Senate agreed upon an amendment to the law, taking away from the Post-Office Department the power to make increase exceeding 50 per cent. of the original contract price. That law is working well. No man can point to a single instance since the amendment of that law wherein there has been an abuse. There can be no very great abuse as the law now is.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. Now there is a ring of people about this city and that extends to different parts of the country who, as the gentleman from California has said, bid on most if not all these routes; who put in small bids, frequently straw bids, and who after getting contracts allow the service to fail. Sometimes they bid blindly and are glad of the chance to let the service fail. Now all that they need is a corrupt official or one they can impose upon to get them out of such contracts under the proposed amendment, by getting the service increased by $1,000 or over. I believe from my observation touching these matters, through investigation and through some little familiarity with the postal laws, that the amendment here proposed would serve as a gateway through which dishonest men could creep, and would not in any way promote the interests of the service.

Mr. ATKINS. How can that be the case if the contracts are readvertised and relet?

Mr. CANNON. In this way: when a man gets a poor contract and has at the other end of the line a corrupt official all that would be required to enable him to get rid of the contract would be to have it expedited up to $1,000 or over, when the law would step in and require readvertisement and reletting.

Now, there are these contractors who take the contract for five hundred or a thousand routes without ever having seen them. This ring of contractors crowd out those who would contract throughout the country. But sometimes the contractors in this ring may get bitten. Now, if there is an obliging official at this end of the line, how easy it will be under this amendment for them to unload a contract upon which they are bitten. I think the safe way is not to amend this law any further upon an appropriation bill.

The law touching contracts and the regulations thereunder should be thoroughly understood as a whole, and the abuses that now exist, if any, or that may exist under proposed amendments, should be thoroughly considered by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and upon their report fully considered by the House before we venture upon amendments. Any other course, however well intentioned, will lead to unwise legislation.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope now the gentleman will allow me to ask just this question: whether the contractor could slip out in the manner the gentleman speaks of without the collusion of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, very easily.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has not he done it, and will not he do it still?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will move a formal amendment for the purpose of taking the floor for a few minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question I ask of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] is, whether the objection stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was well taken unless there is collusion. Yes, it obtains when there is collusion, and our object in legislating here is to guard against such collusion. It obtains again where the Post-Office Department may be deceived by false representations and all that sort of thing. There are two objections to it. There may be corruption on the part of the officials, for men may be corrupt in that position, and we are legislating to guard against that corruption. As I have said before, there may be absolute deception and the officer may have acted in good faith.

Now I desire to say a word on the merits of the proposition. We considered this question in the committee long and well, and we reduced the amount that should be paid for expedited service to 50 per cent. For aught I know the law is acting well. I say in the main it matters not so much what the law is if it be permanent. There comes no request to us from the Post-Office Department, in which we all have confidence, so far as this question is concerned, for a revision of the law. I join my colleague on the committee in protesting against this species of legislation on the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to present a feature of this question which has not been presented, although we have spent some time on it. I have not the list before me to verify what I am going to state, but I think our common observation will substantially verify it. It is this: that in three-fourths of all contracts made the larger proportion is perhaps much below $1,000. If this be adopted all contracts under that sum are taken out of the provision which prohibited an increase of over 50 per centum. It substantially takes away, in my judgment, the good fruits of the legislation of Congress at the last session by opening up three-fourths of the contracts now made by the Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. Above $1,000.

Mr. REAGAN. I say at $1,000.

Mr. ATKINS. It does not apply to any under $1,000. It leaves them where the law now leaves them.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me to apply to contracts under $1,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is expedition.

Mr. REAGAN. You are talking about expedition and I am talking about the cost of the contracts. I say under that amendment a contract to carry the mail for ten miles once a week at a cost of $50 may be expedited to $1,000.

Mr. ATKINS. As I understand the amendment, it does not apply to any contract under a thousand dollars one way or the other.

Mr. REAGAN. My friend from Tennessee misunderstands the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I cannot understand the English language.

Mr. REAGAN. It refers to expedition and not to the original contract. Therefore if the amendment is adopted it will let in all the evils in all contracts under a thousand dollars which we attempted to cure by the legislation of the last Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. This leaves contracts under a thousand dollars exactly where the law now leaves them.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment:

Provided, however, That whenever any contractor shall sublet his contract for the transportation of the mail on any route for a less sum than he contracted to perform the service the Postmaster-General may declare the original contract at an end and enter into a contract with the sub-contractor, without advertising, to perform the service on the terms at which he has agreed with such original contractor to perform the same.

Mr. CASWELL. I make the point of order it changes existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it changes existing law it is nevertheless germane to the bill, and on its face retrenches expenditure. It complies with the two conditions of Rule XXI, and is therefore in order.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to state the point of order, which I think all will admit is well taken and will prove the amendment ought not to be adopted. If any route is sublet, the Postmaster-General may declare it vacant. All they will have to do then is to have the Postmaster-General, or the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who wants to do it, and he can void every contract that is sublet. I think it is a mischievous amendment and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman from Indiana understand by this amendment he submits that in any case where the contractor chooses to get rid of a bad contract he can sublet it to a man of straw, and without any collusion with the Postmaster-General or other official the responsible contractor can be relieved and the sub-contractor put in his place without bonds or anything else—a mere man of straw?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very glad the gentleman from New York has asked the question. It is very evident the gentleman did not hear the proposition aright.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is the amount of it, as I understand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman could not have heard it read. The proposition is simply this, that if you sublet a contract at a less price than the original contractor receives, the Government may enter into a contract with the sub-contractor on the same terms, and with the same securities and requirements that the law imposes in all other contracts; that is, of course, it implies the taking of a bond.

Mr. HISCOCK. It sublets it to a man of straw.

Mr. HOLMAN. It requires a bond to be given which is satisfactory to the Department, as in the original letting.

Mr. HISCOCK. Because a man is tired of his contract, and it does not pay him, and he wants to get rid of it, he may get rid of it to an irresponsible party, and under this amendment he can do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from New York will give me his attention for a moment. The Postmaster-General is authorized in such cases to enter into a contract with the sub-contractor. He is subject to the same terms under the law that are imposed in the original letting of the contract. He must give a bond to be approved by the Department, as in the case of original contract, and the gentleman cannot talk about straw-bidders in this connection, for it has no application to the case where a man enters into a contract upon the same terms that the old contractor entered into it.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say a word upon the point of order. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is not subject to the point of order. Upon its very face it retrenches expenditures. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana provides that if a contract shall be let for, say, $2,000 dollars, and the original contractor proposes to get it carried, or lets it to a sub-contractor, for $1,500, the Postmaster-General may enter into a contract with the sub-contractor for $1,500, under existing law. Therefore it is clearly in the interest of economy, and it is right, and I stand here to-day to say to this committee that this is, in my judgment, the only amendment that I have heard offered here yet that is in the interest of the honest mail contractors of this country. It is the only amendment that will break down the corrupt ring that hangs around the Post-Office Department like vultures. [Applause.]

I hope the amendment will be adopted. I shall vote for it. It is not amenable to the rule. It is clearly in order, and it certainly retrenches expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has nothing whatever to do with the character of the amendment, except under the rule, and in that connection alone feels called upon to consider it. The Chair, therefore, is of opinion that it retrenches expenditures, upon its face is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and consequently is in order for consideration at this time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment in opposition to this amendment. I say very frankly, sir, that I fail to appreciate the argument which has just been made by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.] In my judgment this amendment if adopted will accomplish directly the opposite result from what he suggests, and it will be in the interest of the ring of contractors that hang about Washington. In my judgment it opens the door through which they may pass in order to be relieved from onerous contracts into which they have entered; and if this amendment is adopted it places upon this bill a measure for which there is not a member of the contracting ring in this city or elsewhere who will not be thankful and fraternally shake hands with the men who vote for it.

These contracts have been entered into, and every man who wishes to shirk the responsibility of his position will find that under such an amendment all that he has to do to effect that object is to sublet the contract to a man of straw, and without responsibility, whom the Government takes in place of the original contractor. He is guaranteed indemnity from the obligation of his bond, and all further obligation on his part is released by the Government. I repeat what I said before, that this amendment, if adopted and placed upon this bill, comes here not in the interest of the Government; but it will come in, if at all, uncalled for, unrecommended by the Department. It comes unrecommended by any one connected with the Department, or any one who is in favor of an honest administration of the affairs of the Department; and I protest, for one, against it on this bill. I protest against incorporating on a bill of this character this species of legislation, which is objectionable in the manner I have stated. I repeat that it is the contractors who want it, and it is not called for or demanded by those who are in favor of an economical administration of the star-route service.

Mr. ATKINS. I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the original contractor shall not be released from the obligation of his bond.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman to accept that, Mr. Chairman. My object in offering this amendment is to break up the entire system of subletting contracts. I do not believe, sir, that when the contractor makes a bid for a contract and gives bond for the faithful performance of it that he should be allowed to sublet that contract to anybody, but that he should be required to conform to the obligations of his contract throughout the time for which it is made for carrying the mails.

One of the great difficulties in the way of the proper administration of this service and one of the broadest avenues to fraud in connection with it is this subletting of contracts.

Sir, I know a man who but a few years ago was an assistant dog-catcher in this city, who was kicked out of the Post-Office Department, kicked out of the contract office, because, as he said, he did not do the bidding that he was required to do; and he stated that he was compelled to resort to seeking the office of assistant dog-catcher in this city at $800 a year. But that man knew so much that finally he got to be a contractor and had five hundred and twenty-five contracts, and he sublet them, every one, and did not execute one single one himself.

Mr. HISCOCK. May I inquire of the gentleman if he knows of any more felicitous mode of enabling the contractors to sublet than the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN?]

Mr. ATKINS. But the amendment I offer is to break the system up. If the original contractor was not released from his bond, why, as a matter of course, he would not sublet his contract to any one but carry it out himself.

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit to the gentleman from Tennessee, my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, would it not be better to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and then, if he desires, offer an amendment restricting the power to sublet.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that I doubt our power first to take away the contract and give it to another and then to hold the original contractor liable on his bond. If we take the contract from him we must release him from the bond; or if we do not release him we cannot take the contract from him in a legal manner.

Mr. VALENTINE. The contractors under the present law when they sublet a contract are held under their official bond; and therefore I cannot see the force and effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. He has offered it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. Now, if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana becomes a law, then the Post-Office Department must first annul the contract of the original contractor before they can let it to the party he has sublet to. Therefore it would be ineffective altogether to put upon that amendment the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. You could not annul the contract of a contractor entirely, relet his contract to a sub-contractor, and at the same time hold him upon his official bond. I do not care how many laws this Congress may pass, that could not be done.

Now, a word as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. It provides, if I heard it read aright, that when a contractor sublets a contract at a sum less than the original contract the Postmaster-General may relet to the sub-contractor. Now, then, before the Post-Office Department can relet this contract they must annul the existing contract with the contractor, and that is just the loop-hole that every contractor is looking for who has a contract that he is desirous of getting rid of.

Mr. HUBBELL. I would ask the gentleman if he knows a better way of turning hell loose in the Department than by adopting that amendment.

Mr. VALENTINE. I do not; if that is the answer the gentleman wants.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do; put Brady back.

Mr. PAGE. Has the gentleman from Nebraska had any experience of the nature suggested by the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. VALENTINE. A little, since I have been a member of Congress.

Mr. ATKINS. If the gentleman from Nebraska will allow me, I will modify my amendment, and he can then speak to the modification. I offer what I send to the desk in amendment of what I heretofore offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, That the sub-contractor shall enter into a good and sufficient bond, and that the original contractor shall not be released from his contract till a good and sufficient bond has been made by the sub-contractor."

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that any point of order has been made on the last amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order has been made on it.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order may be considered as reserved.

Mr. MANNING. I move to strike out the last word.

It occurs to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is eminently proper and should receive the sanction of the committee. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] without deigning to give us reasons, or even to intimate one, tells us that it is in the interest of the mail contractors' "ring," so effective hitherto in sometimes overreaching the Postmaster-General and his subordinates, and at others in accomplishing their ends by collusion with post-office officials. If you can establish that, I take it no man on this floor who values his character for integrity or proper deportment can give it his countenance. I think the gentleman owes it to us and to the public service if he thinks it a fact that this law will work in the interest of the "ring" to demonstrate it. To my mind it appears that it will surely and effectively operate against the "ring;" that it will strike down the monopolies the "ring" has established; and that it is in the interest of economy and justice. By it the Government cannot be injured in any possible way.

The chief and sub contractors agree upon terms which are always smaller amounts than are stipulated for in the contracts when awarded to the original contractors. This is economy, provided the Government can save the difference.

Now, what just cause has the chief contractor to complain, as he retains for himself an amount which has not been earned either by the expenditure of a single dollar or a single hour of labor? They approach the sub-contractors always with the assurance that they can afford to do this work for the sum indicated, and this assurance is accepted, of course, before the contract is consummated, and in cases where the difference is considerable the demonstration is apparent that there has been either extravagance, carelessness, or corruption on the part of Government officials.

Mr. REAGAN. Do not the records show that many of the sub-contractors get more than the original contractors?

Mr. MAGINNIS. This amendment would not affect that class of contracts.

Mr. MANNING. I am not advised, as the gentleman from Texas is, that there are many sub-contracts of that class. But if there are many of them, this amendment does not refer to them at all.

The gentleman from New York says we invite a man of straw in the person of a sub-contractor to come to the front. How can that be? I submit to him, as the gentleman from Indiana did when he proposed the amendment, that he had not given much attention to the language of the amendment in reaching that conclusion. The entering into the contract with the sub-contractor by the Postmaster-General is the annulling of the original contract. The difficulty the gentleman from Texas has upon the legal proposition, I think, is not a real one.

Mr. REAGAN. Will you hold both contractors responsible?

Mr. MANNING. No, sir; it is a simultaneous matter. The entering into a contract by the Postmaster-General with the sub-contractor is a nullification of the original contract ipso facto. What is the difficulty, then? A moment's reflection would enable you to see that there is none. Where is there any cause of complaint either on the part of the original contractor or on the part of the sub-contractor, and where is there any possible injury to accrue to the Government itself?

This amendment is in the interest of economy, and in my opinion constitutes the strongest and most effective blow that has yet been attempted upon the "ring." It strikes down monopolies and secures fair dealing. And another important and judicious result attained is the relief afforded these gentlemen who now enjoy the benefits and privileges of a close corporation at your capital of that strong temptation, to which recent developments show they have so repeatedly yielded, to deal dishonestly with the Government. Who so unmindful of the notorious facts touching this matter as not to know that a few men have by the most disreputable and graceless methods secured thousands of contracts upon straw bonds? I assert only a historic truth when I declare that the men of straw appear generally as the bondsmen of original contractors, certainly much more frequently than as the bondsmen of sub-contractors. No elaboration of this statement is essential in the light of recent developments.

Every member of Congress in both branches and all the well-meaning people of the whole country should thank the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for laying the ax so effectively at the root of a great evil. His wise suggestion, if adopted, will save a vast amount of money to the public Treasury, and avert much scandal by the observance of the injunction of the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. The amendment as modified by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] meets with my most hearty concurrence. It strikes me that the suggestions which have been made, that the amendment so modified is the most effective method of reaching the corruption which has entered into the letting of postal contracts that has yet been devised, are fair and just, and reasonable.

I do not hesitate to say here that the men of straw are the men who make the original contracts with the Government, and that the bona fide contractors are the men who go out as sub-contractors and do the work. If the power and discretion are vested in the Postmaster-General, as this proposed modification of the existing law would vest them, then I will say that you can jump over the men who take these contracts merely for purposes of speculation, and make contracts for a fair consideration with the men who bona fide do the work.

It has been said that the present scheme works well. And why? Because you have honest men at the helm. The old scheme would have worked well with an honest man in charge. If the new scheme works well it is because it is honestly conducted.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that the limitation of 50 per cent. has worked very well. And why? Because an honest man was at the helm, not because stealings are out of the reach of dishonest men, if you should happen to have dishonest men as Postmaster-General and First and Second Assistant Postmasters-General.

Under the new system the chances are simply reduced 50 per cent. If under the old system the chances for stealing amounted to 500 per cent., under the existing law the chances would amount to just 250 per cent. And the reason why the matter is going along well now and under the recent Postmaster-General is because honest men have been in control, and they prevent this sort of corruption from entering into the contract.

One word more. My friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] suggests that this provision could not be made part of the contract. There is no reason in the world why it cannot be. An original contract is made, and a sub-contractor takes it for a less price, probably for one-half or two-thirds of the original contract. Now, if the Postmaster-General finds out that the contract is being carried out in good faith for one-half or two-thirds of what it was originally let for, all he has to do is to say to the sub-contractor, "Come here, and you can have this contract yourself, as soon as you give a good, sufficient bond."

And what will be the saving to the Government? The saving will be the difference between the price paid to the sub-contractor and the original contract price paid to the first contractor. And the chances for speculation will be taken away from the original contractor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon the pending amendment to the amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. MANNING. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I renew it for the purpose of addressing myself for a single moment to a suggestion made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] that this amendment is in the interest of a great ring. Now it does seem to me that there is no foundation for that statement.

Where does the money come from that holds that ring together, that supplies the lobby, that moves in the corridors of this House whenever the Post-Office appropriation bill is under consideration? It comes from the profits which they make on their contracts. They do not execute their contracts, but they make sufficient profits to pay their lobby, to make themselves sleek and fat out of the offal they get from the Treasury.

Now, if we make provision by law that when they relet their contracts at a less rate than is agreed to be paid to them, such contracts shall be made with the sub-contractors at the lower rate; we will then have cut off the supplies upon which they fatten, and will have broken up the mail-route ring and will no longer be troubled with their lobby. For that reason I hope the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to answer the question put to me by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MANNING,] and also by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] and to repeat what I have already said with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I believe that under the terms of that amendment if a contractor shall have entered into a contract which he desires to avoid, which is unremunerative to him, all he will have to do will be to enter into a contract with some sub-contractor, and if that contract with the sub-contractor is accepted by the Department, the original contractor will be relieved from his contract and the man of straw will be substituted in his place. I desire to say further, that with the amendment offered by my colleague upon the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] that objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is entirely obviated.

I believe that the amendment as originally offered by the gentleman from Indiana would have had precisely the effect which I stated; but with this proviso, that the original contractor shall not be relieved from his contract until a good and sufficient bond has been given by the sub-contractor, the proposition is not subject to the objection which I made. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CONVERSE and Mr. CANNON addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out the last two words.

Mr. GUNTER. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] yield for that motion?

Mr. CANNON. I will not give way at this time, because while the proposition as now modified is not so objectionable as in the first instance, I want to state that if you will turn to page 23 of the Postmaster-General's report you will find there are 10,000 of these star routes aggregating more than 232,000 miles in length, the transportation over them per annum being in round numbers 79,000,000 miles. Now this proposition as modified upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee is equivalent to saying that there shall be no subletting of contracts for any of that service.

Mr. VANCE. Is not that right?

Mr. CANNON. I do not give way now. I say this is equivalent, substantially, to declare that there shall be an original contractor for every one of these 10,000 routes.

Mr. VANCE. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. Hold on a minute. Let me state the proposition, so that the gentleman may get at it understandingly. He says it is right. I want to ask him whether or not he would vote for it if he knew that it would cost $15,000,000 to do the service under the amendment, instead of $7,000,000 under the present law. The gentleman says he would not. I do not say that the increase would be to that extent; but I say that in my opinion the cost would be very greatly increased.

If one is not competent to contract for more service than he can in person perform—and that is what this amendment means substantially—then we, to a very large extent, cut off competition, and the cutting off of competition increases the cost of the service, and increased cost of service means increased burdens upon the people. For one I am not ready to break up a ring by creating a larger and more expensive ring. Another objection to this amendment which is fatal, the law now permits sub-contracts. The present contracts for star service in the Pacific section, which section covers at least three-fourths in cost of all the star service, expires on the 30th of June next. The advertisement for a four-years contract in this section, commencing the 1st of July next, was made last fall, and the bids are in and opened and the service awarded—awarded under the present law, which permits subletting. Now, if this amendment becomes law, I submit that it avoids all these proposals.

The Second Assistant Postmaster-General informs me that the proposals are for full service, such as is needed in that growing country, and that the proposals are very reasonable. Notwithstanding the advance in the price of labor, stock, and material, they are for the four years to come as low as under existing contracts. We should not by our action render all these proposals void or voidable. During the adjournment I ask members to investigate this amendment, and I feel quite sure they will come to the same conclusion I have, that it is not safe to make these amendments in this hasty manner and without proper consideration by any committee of the House.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] give way that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] may offer a substitute to be pending?

Mr. CASWELL. I give way for that purpose.

Mr. BLAND. I offer as a substitute what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by star routes $7,245,000: Provided, That it shall not be lawful for any contractor hereafter to sublet his contract, but he shall be required to fulfill the same according to law.

Mr. CASWELL. I reserve points of order on that amendment. I now renew the motion that the committee rise.

The motion of Mr. CASWELL was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York, in reference to immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

STATE OF NEW YORK, ASSEMBLY CHAMBER,
Albany, February 14, 1882.

On motion of Mr. Brooks:

Resolved, (if the Senate concur,) That in the face of the recent decision of United States Justice Blatchford, that no tax can be collected in the form of head-money for the inspection of hundreds of thousands of immigrants landing from foreign ports in the harbor of New York, with the probability that the 460,000 landing there the past year may be increased by 50,000 in number during the present year, that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be most earnestly urged to press upon Congress to pass some law to protect the State from the care and expense which belongs to the unwise and unjust importation of persons who, in many cases, are paupers, criminals, lunatics afflicted with diseases and permanent physical and intellectual disability to secure their own support, either in this State or in the country at large.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and signed by the presiding officers of the two houses of the Legislature.

By order: CHARLES E. PATTERSON,
Speaker.

IN SENATE, February 15, 1882.

Concurred in without amendment.

By order: GEORGE G. HOSKINS,
President Senate.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORY.

Mr. LACEY, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 4198) to establish a postal savings depository as a branch of the Post-Office Department; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I rise to a privileged motion.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.]

Mr. HOUSE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. The House should not refuse to adjourn over in honor of the birthday of Washington.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. That is the motion I was going to make.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. HOUSE, there were—ayes 65, noes 56.

Mr. CAMP. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. CAMP. I move that the House adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. That is not in order!

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is always in order. No quorum having voted, the only motions in order are to adjourn and to have a call of the House.

Mr. PAGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent that the committee have authority to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE?]

Mr. DUNNELL. Business is out of order while the House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. The Committee on Commerce has asked it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope not.

Mr. DUNNELL. If the House is dividing how can the Chair entertain the motion to adjourn. If it is dividing it is on the motion to adjourn till Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The House was dividing on the motion to adjourn over, but there was no quorum, and then the motion to adjourn was in order.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent to submit some communications.

Mr. MILLS. There is no quorum, and how can that be done?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not in order to submit anything pending an adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 73.

Mr. CAMP. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAZELTON. Congress makes a law that Washington's birthday shall be observed, and now it is proposed by the House to violate that law. I am against its violation for every reason.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 92, not voting 135; as follows:

YEAS—65.

Mr. MCMILLIN with Mr. ORTH.
Mr. THOMAS with Mr. WILLIS.
Mr. HOOKER with Mr. RICE of Massachusetts.
Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York.

Mr. LORD. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired.

Mr. KNOTT. I am paired.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

GEORGE W. BANIKER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit some requests.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers relating to the claim of George W. Baniker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. W. A. WOOD, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HOUSE. I call for the regular order of business. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to adjourn over.

Mr. CAMP. I move to adjourn.

Mr. HOUSE. That has just been voted down.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn over takes precedence.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 937) to enable the Postmaster-General to delegate authority to sign warrants; and

An act (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HOUSE. I insist on the regular order, which is the motion to adjourn over till Thursday next.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 78, nays 28.

Mr. CAMP. No quorum.

Mr. PAGE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 70, nays 40, not voting 182; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. FINLEY with Mr. REED.

Mr. BAYNE with Mr. MARTIN.

On motion of Mr. CAMP, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CAMP. No quorum has voted. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOUSE and Mr. MILLS demanded the call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is first in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope I may be pardoned for saying to the House that there will be no call for a session on Saturday if we can have to-morrow for the further consideration of the Post-Office bill.

Mr. SPARKS. To-morrow will be Washington's birthday, not Saturday.

Mr. BRAGG. Is that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The motion of the gentleman from New York is that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 54.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. PEELLE. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the 22d of February has been declared a legal holiday in the District of Columbia——

Mr. CAMP. I demand the yeas and nays on the last vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. CAMP. I endeavored to get the attention of the Chair at the moment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PEELLE. I move that the House adjourn until Thursday at twelve o'clock.

Mr. CAMP. That motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. CAMP. The motion should be, that when the House adjourns it shall be to meet on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the same in effect.

Mr. CAMP. I submit that the gentleman cannot make a motion to adjourn to a particular time.

The SPEAKER. The particular time in this instance is the time fixed by the rule. Of course the Chair holds the effect of the motion to be, that when the House adjourns it be to meet again on Thursday.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a point of order. When the fact was developed that there was no quorum, as shown by the last roll-call, but two motions are in order; one to adjourn, the other for the call of the House. The motion to adjourn has been voted down. Now, I submit that the only motion in order is the call of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. Do I understand that the Chair recognizes the motion that the House do now adjourn until Thursday at twelve o'clock?

The SPEAKER. Not in that form.

Mr. SPARKS. The motion would be that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. Then there would necessarily be another motion to adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee for a call of the House was pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the rule in reference to the call of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I understand a motion has been made that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. That motion has been made.

Mr. HOUSE. Then I am willing to have a vote upon that motion if the other side is willing that a majority shall decide it.

Mr. CALKINS. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOUSE. Then I insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist upon the motion for a call of the House?

Mr. HOUSE. Yes, sir; I insist upon that motion.

The question being taken, there were ayes 39.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number has voted in the affirmative, and a call of the House is ordered.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn; there were—ayes 42, noes 55.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House has been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll and called the names of Mr. AIKEN and Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. ROBESON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOUSE. That motion is not in order now.

Mr. ROBESON. It is in order. Two names have been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is not in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. HOUSE. You cannot interrupt the roll-call by such a motion.

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, I can.

Mr. HAZELTON. I suggest that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the post-office bill. That would be better than our wasting the night in this way.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Clerk continued the call of the roll, and called several additional names.

Mr. ROBESON. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order until the call of the roll has been completed.

Mr. CALKINS. You can interrupt the call of the roll at any time, and move to dispense with the further calling of the roll.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call must proceed. At the close of the roll-call a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call would be in order.

Mr. CALKINS. Very well; but I think that is not right.

The Clerk resumed and completed the call of the roll. The following gentlemen did not answer to their names:

Aiken,	Dezendorf,	Le Fevre,	Scranton,
Allen,	Dibrell,	Lewis,	Shackelford,
Anderson,	Dingley,	Lindsey,	Shelley,
Armfield,	Dunn,	Lord,	Simonton,

Davidson,	Knott,	Ross,	Wood, Benjamin
Deering,	Lacey,	Russell,	Wood, Walter A.
De Motte,	Ladd,	Ryan,
Deuster,	Leedom,	Scoville,

Mr. CAMP. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOUSE. I do not think there is any objection on the part of any member of this House to come here on Saturday and work on that day; but we do want to observe the birthday of Washington to-morrow.

Mr. ROBESON. To-morrow the Departments will be closed and we cannot do any work at all in the Departments.

Mr. HOUSE. We want to keep the birthday of Washington. We do not want to go to the Departments to-morrow.

Mr. ROBESON. We want to work.

Mr. O'NEILL. Why did not gentlemen on the other side keep Washington's birthday during the last six years, when they had the majority?

Mr. SPARKS. At any rate we never filibustered against it.

Mr. CALKINS. We have not filibustered against it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is a motion to adjourn now in order.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to make a single statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have been a member of this House nearly eleven years, during which I have not been out of my seat for as many days. In the eleven years I have only two or three times voted to adjourn over. I do so now. I believe we had better adjourn over to-morrow and have our session on Saturday.

Mr. SPARKS. We are willing for that.

Mr. DUNNELL. A large majority of this House is for it, and it is my experience that it is folly in a matter of this sort to bunt against a decided majority.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to have unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to say that for the last six years, while the other side were in control of this House, they refused to adjourn over Washington's birthday. And I desire to say further that for the last two weeks of this session every dilatory motion which has been made has come from the other side.

I desire to say that to-morrow we can work here without interfering with our work in the Departments, because the Departments will be closed. But if we adjourn over to-morrow we will be expected to meet here on Saturday, on which day the Departments will be open and we can then do our Department work.

That is an appeal to sensible men. Now if you want to make dilatory motions, do it; we are here and we will meet you.

Mr. HOUSE. It seems to me that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] has committed something in the nature of a fraud on the House by getting permission to make a statement. Every one presumed that he intended to make a statement in the line of that made by the gentleman who preceded him. Nobody supposed that he was going to get up here and make a partisan speech upon this subject. It is not true that this House, while we had the majority, always refused to adjourn over Washington's birthday.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. HISCOCK to adjourn, and upon a division there were—ayes 40, noes 46.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HISCOCK. I call the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAZELTON. And in the mean time let us go on with the Post-Office appropriation bill, and not waste our time in this way.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 29 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 37, nays 58, not voting 197; as follows:

YEAS—37.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, with Mr. HAWK.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a statement in regard to the action of the last three Congresses upon adjournment over the 22d of February.

Mr. CAMP. I object.

Mr. KLOTZ. That is hardly fair, when that side charged this side with not adjourning over Washington's birthday.

Mr. CALKINS. Every one of us can read the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. While I am entirely aware——

Mr. ELLIS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not think you will object.

Mr. ELLIS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am going to make a motion.

Mr. VANCE. Let us hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move——

Mr. ELLIS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that when this House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday at twelve o'clock. Do I have the permission of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] to make that motion?

Mr. ELLIS. The "gentleman from Louisiana" withdraws his objection, and the gentleman from New York can do as he pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the motion is not now in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON. Nobody objects.

Mr. SPARKS. May I be allowed to say just this——

Many MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is there unanimous consent to that motion?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to entertaining the motion of the gentleman from New York, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HAZELTON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion of Mr. HISCOCK was then agreed to without a division.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at seven o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, protesting against the treatment of Jews in Russia, and invoking an appeal from the Government of the United States to the Russian Government for protection to the lives and property of these unfortunate people—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CANNON: The petitions of 54 citizens of Charleston, and of 80 citizens of Danville, Illinois, for the repeal of the tax on banks and the two-cent stamp on bank-checks—severally to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. S. S. COX: Memorial of Lawrence S. Brumidi, relating to the designs, sketches, and tracings for the frieze of the Capitol—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. DE MOTTE: The petition of A. L. Brown and others, citizens of White County, Indiana, praying for additional mail-routes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DOWD: The petition of John F. Hoke and others, citizens of Lincoln County, for an appropriation to build a post-office and court-house at Charlotte, North Carolina—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. C. B. FARWELL: Papers relating to the pension claim of Francis Joseph Ciolina—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GEORGE: Papers relating to the claim of the Delaware Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HAWK: The petition of 200 citizens of Morrison, and 40 citizens of Lanark, Illinois, for the repeal of the tax on banks and stamps on bank checks and drafts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers relating to the pension claim of Captain William

Young, Forty-sixth Illinois Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. G. W. HEWITT: The petition of John D. Wilson and 168 others, citizens of Winston County, Alabama, praying for an appropriation to relieve distress among the people of that county—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. A. S. HEWITT: Papers relating to the pension claim of Julia A. Stimers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: The petition of O. M. Peck and 29 others, glass-workers of Poughkeepsie, New York, for the rigid enforcement of the laws imposing duties on manufactured glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LEWIS: The petition of 200 citizens of Peoria, Illinois, for the repeal of the tax on banks and stamp on bank-checks—to the same committee.

By Mr. LINDSEY: Papers relating to the claim of John W. Polk—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MANNING: The petition of B. R. Smallwood, W. A. Jones, and others, citizens of Marshall County, Mississippi, for legislation regulating railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McCOID: Papers relating to the claim of Peter Fisher—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLANE: Memorial of the Maryland Historical Society, recommending the purchase of the papers of Benjamin Franklin, now offered for sale by Hy. Stevens, of London, England—to the Committee on the Library.

Also, the petition of Gabriel E. Manigault, relative to purchase by Congress of his bust of General Lafayette—to the same committee.

By Mr. MOREY: Papers relating to the claim of Jackson Riley—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MURCH: The petition of J. H. Vase and 28 others, citizens of Waldo County, Maine, for legislation regulating railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PETTIBONE: The petition of Eliza Rogers, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers relating to the pension claim of Catharine Barnes and of Nancy M. Jackson—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. PRESCOTT: Memorial proposing a bill to pay losses and one month's allowance to volunteer clerks in the Census Department—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. W. W. RICE: The petition of 160 citizens of Worcester, Massachusetts, for the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and two-cent stamps on bank-checks—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. D. C. SMITH: The petition of 40 citizens of Pekin, Illinois, for the repeal of the tax on banks and two-cent stamps on checks and drafts—to the same committee.

By Mr. SPARKS, (presented by request:) The petition of citizens of Centralia, Illinois, for the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and stamp tax on bank-checks—to the same committee.

By Mr. VALENTINE: The petition of 40 citizens of Fremont, Nebraska, for the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and the two-cent stamp on checks and drafts—to the same committee.

By Mr. VAN AERNAM: The resolutions of the Legislature of New York, asking for legislation to protect the State from the care and expense occasioned by the importation of criminals, paupers, and lunatics—to the same committee.

By Mr. GEORGE D. WISE: The petition of Pickrell & Brooks and of David Tennant and others, for relief—severally to the same committee.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 23, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask in behalf of the Committee on Finance leave for that Committee to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears none, and it is granted.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 6, 1882, a letter from the Light-House Board containing certain information in regard to the Pintsch lighted buoy in operation at the entrance of the harbor of New York during the past summer; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences from November 16, 1880, to the close of the year 1881, in conformity with the acts of incorporation; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Fort Wayne, members of the Indiana Bar Association, praying for the appointment of a second circuit judge for the seventh judicial circuit of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of Joseph Peterson and 84 others, citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of a bill to compel railroad corporations and their agents and all common carriers upon them to perform certain duties; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the memorial of Charles H. Dalton, treasurer of the Merrimac Manufacturing Company, and a great many others, who state that they represent industries which consume a million and a half bales of cotton per annum and employ over $200,000,000 of capital, and they desire to express their approval of the bill to appoint a commission to revise the tariff. I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of citizens of California, praying that Congress refrain from legislation affecting the rights of settlers upon the Moquelamos grant pending a decision in the premises by the Supreme Court of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of ministers of the Gospel, of California, praying for the passage of a law to prohibit the practice of polygamy within the limits of the United States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of various officers of the Grand Army of the Republic, praying Congress to pass a bill for the purpose of remunerating female nurses during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. I present resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of New Haven, Connecticut, relating to the signal service. I believe the rule is to have such resolutions read. If so, I desire to have these read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions can be read if the Senator chooses.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the reading of the resolutions.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF NEW HAVEN,
February 14, 1882.

At a meeting held this day it was unanimously

Resolved, That in our opinion the Signal Service has fully demonstrated its usefulness and importance, and we ask that its efficiency may be increased by its reorganization as a permanent bureau and by increased appropriations, to the end that a large number of stations may be established.

Resolved, That the secretary be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to each Senator and Representative from this State.

[SEAL.] HENRY PRESCOTT,
Secretary.

Mr. PLATT. I also present the petition of Professor Alexander C. Twining, of New Haven, praying for an extension of his patent relating to the manufacture of ice. The petitioner sets forth the value of his patent, and the difficulties and delay which he has heretofore encountered in obtaining an extension of it. He requests that the petition may be read and entered upon the Journal of the Senate; but as I understand the rules do not allow that to be done, I must content myself with a statement of the character of the petition. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Allen Wright and J. S. Standley, delegates of the Choctaw Nation, praying for legislation to carry out certain provisions of the treaties of 1866-'67; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM presented the petition of Angus McD. Shoemaker and other ex-Union soldiers of New York, praying for the passage of a bill granting pensions to the survivors of southern prisons; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROOME. I present resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland, and I ask that they may be read.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Joint resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland relative to the obstructions to the harbor of Annapolis, Maryland.

Whereas the Government of the United States has expended large sums of money in erecting buildings and enlarging the grounds of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis and in purchasing ground and erecting buildings for experimental purposes connected with the Navy at Fort Madison; and

Whereas it is desirable that the bars which cause an obstruction to United States and other vessels of large draught in entering the harbor of Annapolis should be removed or cut away, so as to admit said vessels with more facility and without danger of grounding on said bars, and also for the purpose of commerce; and

Whereas a reasonable expenditure of money for the purposes above mentioned would be, in the judgment of this General Assembly, both wisdom and economy: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested and urged to use all proper means in their power to induce Congress to make an appropriation to deepen the entrance to the harbor of Annapolis by cutting away said bars.

And be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions, that they may be laid before the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

GEORGE HAWKINS WILLIAMS,
President of the Senate.

OTIS KEILHOLTZ,
Speaker of the House of Delegates.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of Lieutenant L. A. Thibaut, late of the volunteer service, praying to be reinstated in his former rank, and that he be granted an honorable discharge; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of the temperance conference lately held at York, Pennsylvania, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages throughout our national domain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a memorial of the Memphis Cotton Exchange, setting forth the great danger to the harbor at Memphis by reason of a recent change in the current of the Mississippi River and asking an immediate appropriation in order that the harbor may be saved from very great, if not irreparable, injury. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 937) to enable the Postmaster-General to delegate authority to sign warrants; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 964) for the relief of Joseph C. Irwin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 692) for the relief of William L. Adams, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 675) for the relief of Thomas J. League, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 778) for the relief of Henry Fink, United States marshal for the eastern district of Wisconsin, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 449) for the relief of William B. Whiting, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 381) for the relief of the mates in the United States Navy, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 522) for the relief of Peter Targarona, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the petition of James H. Huckleberry, praying relief from paying a certain amount of money in default as mail contractor, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, to report it with sundry amendments and recommend its passage. I give notice that to-morrow at half past one I shall call up the bill.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 20) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hamilton Slawson, jr., submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 732) fixing the relative rank and pay of certain officers on the retired list of the Navy, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 620) for the relief of John B. Davis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1297) conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims against the Government of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Claims that a similar bill is before that committee; however, I shall not insist on such a reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the bill ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. A bill on the same subject was introduced by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and referred to the Committee on Claims, and it has been considered to a considerable extent by that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair both bills should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair is undoubtedly correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair recollects, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. EDMUNDS] gave way on that subject the other day. If he had not done so the Chair would have tested the sense of the Senate upon the reference; but the chairman of the committee, at the instance of the Senator from Wisconsin, agreed that that reference should be made.

Mr. BUTLER. If it should turn out that the Committee on Claims find that they may not be able to consider the bill, they can ask to be discharged from its consideration and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; but inasmuch as a similar bill is before that committee, I ask that this bill be also referred to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. HOAR. That subject has been referred by the Senate to the Committee on Claims several winters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has just referred the bill to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand that the Chair had referred it. I supposed the Senate did these things.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1298) for the relief of Stephen O'Connor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1299) to enable the Choctaw freedmen to become citizens of the Choctaw Nation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1300) to authorize the appointment of John W. Chickering to the rank of first lieutenant; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1301) granting an increase of pension to George Gans; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROOME asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1302) granting a pension to John W. Hayes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1303) to cheapen transportation on railways; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that that bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think it should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. It involves a change of the revenue laws.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1304) granting a pension to Sarah J. Bovell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1305) to provide for the payment of female nurses during the war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1306) to release and quit claim to any State, county, or municipality all equity and interest that the United States may have by reason of the neglect or refusal of any railroad company to pay costs of locating and selecting lands donated by act of Congress in and to lands sold and to be sold by States, counties, or municipalities for non-payment of taxes by any railroad company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1307) granting a pension to William H. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1308) for the relief of William H. Whiting; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LAPHAM. This bill is in behalf of a person who was put in the hold of the Alabama and kept in close confinement there until he was rendered a helpless cripple for life. He was offered at all times during his confinement his liberty if he would enter the confederate service, which he refused to do. He is now employed in the Treasury Department, but, as I have said, he is crippled for life. It seems to me entirely appropriate that cases like that should be provided for out of the balance of the Geneva award fund; and the design of the bill is to present the question. As the Judiciary Committee have had the question of the distribution of the Geneva award under consideration heretofore, I think a reference of the bill to that committee would be preferable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1309) to authorize the purchase of certain parcels of real estate for public use known as square numbered 459, or some other equally desirable location, in Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 42) granting to the State of Indiana the use of tents on the occasion of an encampment of State troops to be held in said State during the year 1882; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HARRISON. If it be the pleasure of the Senate, I should like to have the joint resolution considered at the present time.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length.

Mr. COCKRELL. That ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution, and I desire to call the immediate attention of the Senate to it.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations for the relief of the laboring classes in the districts overflowed by the Mississippi River; which was read the first time at length.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to have a telegram from the governor of Mississippi on the subject read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let the joint resolution be again read.

The joint resolution was read the second time.

Mr. GARLAND. Before the Senate can pass advisedly upon the propriety of considering the joint resolution, the telegram from the governor of Mississippi should be read as a matter of information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of that has just been asked for by the Senator from Mississippi. It will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY read as follows:

[Telegram.]

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, February 21, 1882.

Messrs. LAMAR and GEORGE,
United States Senators, Washington:

A meeting has just been held in my office by senators and representatives from river districts looking to the immediate relief of our suffering people from the flood. The destruction of property and stock is immense and starvation is imminent. The country overflowed and yet subject to go under comprises the best portion of our State. White and black must have immediate relief. I am requested by members from the Yazoo delta to implore you to urge Government aid, and, if possible, obtain necessary orders for rations at once. Get our delegation in the House of Representatives to join in your efforts. A resolution of the two houses will be forwarded you to-morrow and an appropriation made by the Legislature for relief. Answer and designate the place where rations can be obtained, if at all. Memphis could supply quickest. We need substantial assistance from the Government. The supplies will be disbursed by the most discreet committee that can be selected.

ROBERT LOWRY, Governor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to be indulged in making a remark or two explanatory of the magnitude of the disaster referred to in the joint resolution.

The district overflowed from the breaking of the levee embraces all the Mississippi delta between Memphis and Vicksburgh, about one hundred and fifty miles in length and about forty miles in breadth. All of it is either now under water or will be in a short time. I desire also to state for the information of the Senate, that four-fifths of the population which inhabit that district is composed of colored laborers, who have not the means of support during the time when this overflow will necessarily interrupt labor.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the estimated number of laborers who have been rendered destitute by this inundation?

Mr. GEORGE. They inhabit a district about one hundred and fifty miles long by about forty wide. I suppose there must be from fifty to seventy-five thousand inhabitants in that district.

Mr. TELLER. What proportion of them will be rendered destitute?

Mr. GEORGE. Four-fifths. I desire also to state for the information of Senators who are not familiar with the length or duration of an overflow in the Mississippi bottoms, that it is not an affair of a day or a week. The overflows in that section of the Mississippi bottoms generally continue from four to six weeks before there is a subsidence of the waters; and during all that time there is a total suspension of all labor; the water gets all over the whole country.

I have confined my statement to the destitution in Mississippi. There are contiguous districts on the western bank of the Mississippi River in the State of Arkansas that suffer from the same overflow. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] will make a statement upon that subject.

I shall ask to have the joint resolution referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, in the hope that that committee may act upon it with promptness, as the matter will not admit of delay.

Mr. GARLAND. The information that the Senator from Mississippi gives in reference to his own State applies exactly to the State of Arkansas which is in front of the overflowed Mississippi River. The intelligence that I receive from that portion of the State of Arkansas, through telegrams, letters, and newspapers, represents the destruction there as widespread, and as absolutely appalling and unprecedented. The overflow has taken barns and granaries, and has swept away the last stock the farmers and planters of that country owned and had to live upon.

I am not prepared in my own mind to say just exactly what relief or what measure of relief Congress can or should afford, but certainly there is now a just demand for relief, if it is in the power of Congress to grant it. I hope the joint resolution will be referred to the committee indicated by the Senator from Mississippi, and that that committee may see proper to give it early consideration, and report some measure for the relief of those suffering people.

Mr. HAMPTON. I just came into the Senate when the joint resolution was sent to the Clerk's desk and read, and as I am very familiar with that section of country, having been there a great deal, I wish to make a statement in regard to it.

The area of land which will be overflowed if the river rises as high as it has done formerly, will cover the richest portion of the Mississippi Valley on the Arkansas side and on the Mississippi side. I am more familiar with it on the Mississippi side than on the Arkansas side; but it will cover the most productive and finest cotton-growing territory in the whole State. I have known the river to be at that point sometimes nearly one hundred and fifty miles wide, for it covers from the Yazoo hills on the one side to the Arkansas bluffs on the other, and in that whole section of country if the river is as high as these dispatches say it is there will hardly be any land at all above overflow. There are only a few spots in that great Mississippi bottom which are above overflow, and the destruction not only of stock but of the incoming crop will be so great that I have no hesitation in saying the dispatches from the governor of Mississippi give but a faint idea of the destitution and starvation that will follow there.

My friend from Mississippi thinks that there are 75,000 people in this area covered. I think he has underestimated the number very much.

Mr. GEORGE. I spoke of the Mississippi side.

Mr. HAMPTON. On the Mississippi side I think the numbers would be very much larger than that. Nearly the whole of those people are colored people; they rent the land; and the loss will fall upon them. They have made no provision at all for immediate sustenance, and unless some aid can be given to them and given promptly, I have no question that there will be starvation and infinite suffering in that whole country.

Mr. ALLISON. I am in favor of the general purpose of the joint resolution, and I think it ought to be acted upon speedily; but it seems to me that the joint resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs rather than to the committee suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. That reference ought to be made in order that the committee may consult with the Secretary of War. If rations are to be issued, they must probably be transported from the places where they now are to places convenient for distribution; so that it will require rapid consultation with the Army officers and the people who are to distribute the rations. It seems to me that the whole matter should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, in order that we may have a complete and speedy report from the Secretary of War on this subject. That is the only method of relief. We have applied that relief, I think, in one or two instances hitherto. If these people are to be relieved by the United States Government, it can only be done through the Secretary of War, and not through the intervention of the State authorities; and I think very likely we shall find that this relief must extend not only to the Mississippi River as described by the Senator from Mississippi, but also to several of the tributaries of the Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no preference as to which committee the joint resolution shall be referred, but I suggested the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, as my friend from Arkansas indicated that as the most proper committee; but if the Senator from Iowa desires it to be referred to the Military Committee I have no objections.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no desire about it, the Senator will understand; but the Senator must see that the first thing to do is to consult with the Secretary of War and the military officers.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Then I will modify the motion, and move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. With leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, I suggest.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; with leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and with a request that they act on it very promptly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first motion being withdrawn, it is moved that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with leave to said committee to sit during the sessions of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be so referred, and the leave is granted.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 980) to provide a reserve fund for the redemption of United States notes, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION TO CAPITOL ON HOLIDAYS.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the proper officers of the Capitol to keep its doors open to the public on national holidays.

Mr. President, I cannot say that I am a great reformer, but I do think that the hand of reform is necessary in this case. I do not propose to make a speech, but wish simply to draw the attention of the Senate and the public to this matter. I think that it is not a right thing to do to have the doors of the Capitol closed to the American public on the 4th of July and the 22d of February, as I have known it to be done. People coming here from abroad make it a point, many times, to come here on the 4th of July, but I have known hundreds of intelligent, thoughtful citizens who were excluded from this building, under what law I know not, but in consequence of some rule existing here. I think that on those days any American citizen who desires to survey this great structure, and the works of art and the statuary within it, ought to have the right to do so.

I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Florida whether the session of the Senate and the House is not a very great attraction for the American people when they visit Washington? They like to see the bodies in session; and if we compel the large body of employés who take care of the Capitol to give up their holiday in order that the people may see the brick and stone, should the Senator not give up his holiday and remain here in session that he may be seen when they come into the galleries?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not think they would want to look on us on those days, as they have abundant opportunity to see us during the sittings of the Senate and the House at other times.

Mr. HOAR. They could see the Capitol at the same time.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Many people happen to be here on those days who are not here on others, and I think they ought to be admitted to the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRINTED AGRICULTURAL MATTER.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the justice and propriety of so amending existing postal laws as to admit all printed matter issued by State boards of agriculture, and all State reports on statistics and geology, and all the printed proceedings of State fairs to the privileges of the United States mails at the same rates of postage as printed matter issued by newspaper publishers; and that said committee be authorized to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to send to the committee, with the resolution, a letter from the agricultural State board of Indiana on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be received and referred to the committee.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rise——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of one has arrived and the Anthony rule is absolute.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business ends at one o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution, to which there will be no objection, I presume, as it is for reference.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think the Senate had better proceed under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will not receive the resolution if there be any objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I agree with the Chair, but I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand the Senator to object to a resolution for reference?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. At this time I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar will be called under the Anthony rule. The point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration was No. 51 in the order of business. There were several cases passed over without prejudice. Any one of these will be called up at request.

Mr. McPHERSON. I call up the bill (S. No. 12) to establish and equalize the grades and regulate appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps.

Mr. INGALLS. I object to the consideration of that bill under the Anthony rule.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will then, notwithstanding the objection, ask for a vote of the Senate to take it up and consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey calls up a bill which has been passed over without prejudice under the Anthony rule. To the consideration of the bill objection is made. The Senator from New Jersey now, notwithstanding the objection, moves that the bill be considered.

Mr. McPHERSON. Before the question is put I should like to make a statement respecting the bill I have called up. This bill passed the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate at the last session unanimously, and the like committee of the House of Representatives, and has passed the Senate committee at this session unanimously, and I am also informed the like committee of the House. I do not intend to take up any time in discussing the measure. The reading of the report will tell the whole story. I should like to have the bill considered.

Mr. INGALLS. The Anthony rule was adopted for the purpose of securing the consideration of bills upon the Calendar reported by committees to which there was no objection. The bill called up by the Senator from New Jersey is one of very great importance, proposing the reorganization of one entire branch of the public service, and I submit to that Senator whether it is wise and in accordance with the spirit that procured the adoption of that rule to ask that this bill be taken up when it is impossible that it should be discussed and properly considered without the consumption of the entire remainder of the period that is devoted to the consideration of bills on the Calendar for this morning.

Mr. McPHERSON. We shall have just as much time to consider it this morning as we shall any other day. It can be made the unfinished business for to-morrow morning, and we can keep at it until it is disposed of. It will occupy just so much time of the Senate in its discussion and determination whenever taken up as now; and it being next on the Calendar and entitled to its place, and having been passed two or three times, I ask for its consideration now.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand the purpose and the value of the Anthony rule to be to dispose of matters that we reach on the Calendar from committees to which there is no objection in this body. I do not understand the object of that rule to be to take up this little point of precious time by discussion. I have reported a bill to this body myself within five or six of being reached, in reference to the construction of a library building. I would not feel myself at liberty to ask the Senate to consider that in the morning hour, to take up all the time which is so precious to Senators who have bills here that they desire to have passed and to which there is no objection. The same principle which governs me ought, I think, to govern the Senator from New Jersey. I do not think that the time set aside until half past one o'clock ought to be taken up on any subject that requires speech-making in this body. There is so much that can be done to which there is no objection that I think we ought to adhere to that construction of the rule.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey is out of order. He can speak but once, and not over five minutes.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand that the Anthony rule is that a vote may not be taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; but the Anthony rule is that each Senator shall be entitled to speak but once and for five minutes only. The Senator has spoken already.

Mr. McPHERSON. I hope by unanimous consent I may be permitted to say one word further. If it is objected to by any Senator I certainly do not wish to press the bill.

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On taking up the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I give notice, then, that immediately after the conclusion of the pending business, which is the bill to retire General Grant, I shall ask for the consideration of this bill.

Several SENATORS. Go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

A. SIDNEY TEBBS.

The bill (S. No. 296) for the relief of Dr. A. Sidney Tebbs was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to relieve Dr. A. Sidney Tebbs, of Leesburgh, Virginia, from the operation of section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. JACKSON. I should like to inquire why the Order of Business No. 28 is passed, being the bill (S. No. 111) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All prior to No. 51 on the Order of Business have been passed over without prejudice. The Chair proceeds with the docket from No. 51, but any Senator can call up any of the bills which have been passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JACKSON. If there is no objection I should like to call up the case.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill cannot pass in the morning hour. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill No. 296 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If there is a report accompanying that bill I want to have it read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAMPTON January 11, 1882:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Dr. A. Sidney Tebbs, beg leave to report that Dr. Tebbs has been an applicant for appointment in the Army for several years past, but, by reason of the restriction contained in section 1218, Revised Statutes, against the appointment of persons who were in the confederate service, his application cannot be considered. It appears that he entered the confederate service as a private at the age of fifteen, and that he is a native of Virginia. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill without amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator reporting that case explain the matter to the Senate? I do not know the merits of the case.

Mr. HAMPTON. There is no further explanation than is contained in the report. This young gentleman made an application some years ago for appointment in the Army, and he was debarred from the fact that he had been in the confederate service, which he entered, as the report states, at the age of fifteen, and where he served as a private. He simply wants the restriction removed so that his application can be considered. The bill does not appoint him to anything, and I will say that this identical bill passed the Senate last year unanimously.

Mr. INGALLS. May we have the section of the Revised Statutes read?

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 1218. No person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, or of either of the States in insurrection during the late rebellion, shall be appointed to any position in the Army of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. There may be a question whether that section of the statutes ought not to be repealed; but unless it is repealed no bills like that upon the Calendar ought to be passed upon the attention of the Senate. Either all who are subject to the disability imposed by this section ought to be eligible, or none ought to be eligible. I understand there are no special reasons that can be urged in favor of the beneficiary of this bill that would not apply to many others who are similarly situated. I am opposed to decorating any one individual, with the consent of Congress, for such favors. I should hope that the Committee on Military Affairs would consider the propriety of repealing that section of the statutes. My present impressions are that it would be wise and patriotic and statesmanlike to repeal it; but I am opposed, while that section stands, to making invidious distinctions and discriminations in favor of one person that is practically a recognition of disability on the part of all others similarly situated.

Mr. HAMPTON. I concur with the Senator from Kansas, that there would be eminent propriety in repealing this section of the statutes, but at the same time I do not see why any one who applies to Congress to have his disabilities removed should not have a proper consideration by the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. This is not an application for the removal of disabilities.

Mr. HAMPTON. Certainly it is.

Mr. INGALLS. It is an application for a special recognition and for the conferring of a particular favor by act of Congress in behalf of one individual that is refused to the rest.

Mr. HAMPTON. It is simply this. He had made application for appointment as a surgeon, as I understand, in the Army of the United States. He has been debarred, from the fact that he was a private in the confederate army. He asks now simply that this disability may be removed, this bar to his application being considered. It does not give him the right of appointment; I do not know that he will get it; but it seems to me that under the circumstances there is no reason why this bill should not be acted upon favorably.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A short report, which has been read. It can be read again.

The Acting Secretary again read the report.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that this young man left his home in New York of his own accord and went down to the Southern States without even a pretense of following his State out of the Union.

Mr. HAMPTON. We cannot hear the Senator over here.

Mr. CONGER. If I remember this case, which has been considered in the other branch of Congress, I understand that this young man left his home in New York and went to the South, not following his State, as it was often said one was bound to do by some rule, but he went and joined the confederate army from the State of New York of his own choice without any compulsion of any description. It is one of the cases where he threw his fortunes and his services into the confederate army from a State in the North. Repenting of that rash act and valorous effort of his boyhood, he now wishes to go into the Army of the United States. I do not know from my recollection of the case anything in it that could appeal to me for removing the disability.

Mr. HAMPTON. If the Senator will allow me a moment——

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask the Senator from Michigan a question, because I could not hear very distinctly what he said? Do I understand the Senator from Michigan to say that the party in question had gone from the North into the South?

Mr. CONGER. I say that that is my recollection, from some facts which I heard in connection with it at another time and in another branch of Congress; and if this is the same case that I refer to, and I should like to be advised in regard to that, I should have very serious objection to making an exception in favor of this man.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am not about to discuss the principle involved in this proposed legislation, although I can support this bill because I think these discriminations should be wiped out in one way or another; but I rose for the purpose of correcting the impression that the Senator from Michigan is laboring under, and I know he will be glad to have it corrected. I am informed on the very best authority that he is mistaken about this gentleman ever having been a citizen of the North. He was born and raised in Virginia.

Mr. HAMPTON. I was just about to call attention to the fact——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate give unanimous consent to the Senator from South Carolina to proceed? ["Go on!"]

Mr. HAMPTON. I rose simply to answer the question. I know nothing about this gentleman except simply the statement contained in the report that he was a native of Virginia and that he entered the confederate service at fifteen years of age. I do not think he has ever been at the North. I have never seen the gentleman more than once or twice, but I think the Senator is mistaken in supposing this is the case he refers to.

Mr. GARLAND. I agree fully with what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] said, if I understand him properly, that it was high time that these discriminations should be removed from the statute-book. Something over a year ago there was a similar case presented from the State of Maryland in behalf of a young gentleman whose name I now forget.

Mr. HOAR. James Monroe Heiskell.

Mr. GARLAND. Pending that bill I offered an amendment similar to the one I am going to propose to this bill, so as to let Mr. Heiskell and Mr. Tebbs and all other gentlemen in this condition have free access, if anybody chooses to appoint them, to these offices, that there shall be no bar, no obstruction in the way. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I intended to say just a word in favor of the original bill; but if this amendment is to be pressed I should desire its reference to the Military Committee for full consideration, as that raises an entirely different question.

As to the party named in the bill, he was young, a mere boy of fifteen, when he entered the confederate service. I was perfectly willing in committee, and I am now, to remove any objection to his being employed as a surgeon in the Army, or even to his getting an appointment. This bill does not recommend him for appointment; it does nothing but take this bar out of the way, and then if he can get the appointment he is qualified. To that I am willing to agree; but as for a bill covering the whole subject, that had better be referred for further consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Has the amendment been read from the desk?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet. It will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to make an objection to the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest its reference to the Military Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado objects to the further consideration of the bill, and it will go over.

Mr. HAMPTON. The substitute, or the bill?

Mr. TELLER. The whole bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Why not refer it to the committee?

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest, as this substitute presents an entirely new question and one very important, that it had better be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to refer the bill and amendment to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair will entertain the motion if there be no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

MILITARY BARRACKS AT SAVANNAH.

The bill (S. No. 667) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell the military barracks, and the lands upon which they are located, in the city of Savannah, Georgia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire whether the matter has been submitted to the War Department and whether any opinion has been expressed?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This bill seems to deviate from a principle which has ever been observed in bills of this kind. I do not think that public property ought to be disposed of at the discretion of any man or officer. I do think there is but one way in which property of this kind can be properly disposed of, and that is at public sale under such restrictions as Congress may think proper to impose, because while one officer may guard the public interests in every way, you establish a precedent by which others may come in and claim the right to dispose of it at private sale. Under this bill this whole property can be disposed of in a private way, which contravenes a principle that has ever governed the disposition of this kind of property.

Mr. HAMPTON. In response to the question of the Senator from Minnesota, I will state that this bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and we asked the Secretary of War and the General of the Army whether it was advisable to sell these barracks. Their answers are on file in the Senate; and I thought they would have been printed with the bill, recommending the sale. The Secretary of War and the General of the Army said we had no further use for Oglethorpe Barracks and recommended the sale, and in accordance with that the committee made a unanimous report in favor of the adoption of the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then the communications had better be read so that we can hear them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communications are on file in the office, but have been sent for. They have not been printed.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the close of the bill:

Provided, That said property shall be appraised by a board of Army officers, and shall not be sold at less than its appraised value.

The rule, I believe, that has been applied usually in the sale of military reservations, especially where they are in old-settled portions of the country, and are supposed thereby to possess exceptional value, has been to have them appraised under the direction of the Secretary of War by a board of Army officers, and not to have them sold at less than the appraised value, and I see no reason why that rule should be departed from.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to have the communications from the officers read, that we may hear what they have said.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 10, 1882.

SIR: Referring to my letter of the 9th instant, relative to the sale of Oglethorpe barracks, Savannah, Georgia, as contemplated by Senate bill 667, I have the honor to transmit herewith reports from the General of the Army and the Chief of Engineers containing their views upon the subject.

There seems to be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Besides the fact, reported by said officers, that the barracks are no longer needed for military purposes, a further reason why this property should be disposed of is that the control and care of the same causes considerable annoyance and some expense to the Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WADE HAMPTON,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, U. S. Senate.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1882.

SIR: In answer to your inquiry as contained in the papers submitted with a copy of Senate bill No. 667, first session, Forty-seventh Congress, I have the honor to report that the barracks in the city of Savannah, Georgia, known as Oglethorpe barracks, are no longer required for military occupation, and therefore should be sold.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

Hon. R. T. LINCOLN, Secretary of War.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1882.

SIR: In response to your indorsement upon a letter from Senator Wade Hampton, from the Committee on Military Affairs, dated the 9th instant, respecting the sale of Oglethorpe barracks, Savannah, Georgia, I have the honor to report that the barracks are not necessary for the purposes of this Department, and no reason is known to me why they should not be sold, as proposed in Senate bill No. 667, current session.

Doubts have been expressed as to the right of the United States to sell the property, under its title from the city of Savannah. The opinion of the Judge-Advocate General was obtained thereon, and also the concurrent opinion of the Attorney-General, that the title to the property, as conveyed by deed from the city of Savannah to the United States, on the 5th of November, 1833, is a "fee simple without conditions."

Senator HAMPTON's letter is returned herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers, Brigadier and Brevet Major General.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN, Secretary of War.

Mr. BROWN. The Oglethorpe barracks in the city of Savannah are located almost in the very center of the city. The city is built up all around them. In case of a fire there the property would be subject to a great deal of damage, and as the Secretary of War, the General of the Army, and the Chief Engineer all state that there is no further use for the barracks for military occupation, they certainly ought to be sold. It is a mere question, I apprehend, therefore, about the mode of sale. Having the fullest confidence in the Secretary of War, in introducing the bill I left the mode of sale to his discretion. I have no objection, however, to any amendment changing the mode, if it is thought proper by the Senate not to leave that discretion with the Secretary of War; but I think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas would not be probably judicious. A board of Army officers sent to Savannah to examine this property and fix a price on it would not be so well informed on that subject as people living in Savannah who know the value of real estate in that city.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the area of the property?

Mr. BROWN. I am not able to inform the Senator, but it is probably half an ordinary square in the city.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it very valuable?

Mr. BROWN. A valuable piece of property. I understand there is a company which would like to purchase it to put a large hotel on it. I would suggest that instead of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas there be an amendment that the property be put up, after being advertised for a certain length of time, and sold to the highest bidder.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the probable value of it?

Mr. BROWN. I am not able to answer. I should suppose it was worth $40,000 or $50,000; but that is mere opinion, without being able myself to tell what is the value. I will state, however, that a board of Army officers might make a mistake, and put a value on it that it would not bring either at public or private sale. It would not be a proper precedent to follow in this case, if that has been the course. I have no objection, though, to a public sale, and I am perfectly willing to leave it to the Secretary of War to sell at public or private sale as he may think best for the interest of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. With the consent of the Senate, I will modify my amendment so as to incorporate the words "and shall be sold at public auction at not less than the appraised value." I am not tenacious about this method of appraisement, but it is the usual one which has been enforced. While it may be true that citizens of Savannah may possess a better knowledge of the value of this property than Army officers, at the same time the Army officers may inquire of them, and it is incongruous to have the Secretary of War employ civilians for that purpose. If the property can be sold at public sale, and at not less than its appraised value, certainly all the purposes of the Government in regard to realization from the sale will be accomplished.

Mr. BROWN. My objection to that is that a value may be put upon the property which it will be impossible to get at any public sale. It seems to me it is a fair mode of disposing of property to let there be, say, thirty days' advertisement in the newspapers, and then put it up; let the auctioneer cry it off and knock it down to the highest bidder. If you fix an arbitrary value that it cannot bring, then it stands as now for sale, and cannot be sold until there is a change in the value of the property or another act of Congress is passed. If we put it up at public sale we ought to do as all others do, permit it to be knocked down to the highest bidder.

Mr. CONGER. I offer the following amendment to be added to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

Mr. CONGER. I will offer this as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas:

Provided, That this property shall be platted in accordance with the adjoining streets of the city, and the lots shall be appraised by a board of three Army officers and be sold at public auction at not less than the appraised value, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

That has been the usual method of disposing of property within cities for a number of years past, so disposing of it that all shall have an opportunity to purchase a lot at public sale. It is better for the Government, and better for the citizens who may desire to purchase. It has been done in many cases in other States within the last few years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to the detail of that amendment, nor to it as a substitute for my amendment, although I understand under the rule a substitute for an amendment cannot be offered. But the practical question is, which the Senator from Georgia can undoubtedly answer, whether a survey prior to the sale is essential or not.

Mr. BROWN. Not at all.

Mr. PLUMB. If it is not essential, of course it ought not to be ordered; and if a survey is not essential the amendment of the Senator from Michigan accomplishes the only purpose I intended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has been reached, and unless by unanimous consent further proceedings under the Anthony rule cannot be continued.

Mr. ANTHONY. Our poor Calendar has been crowded out every morning for the last week or ten days, and I ask the Senator who has charge of the bill which is the unfinished business to allow the Calendar to run on until two o'clock under the rule.

Mr. BROWN. I trust this bill will be disposed of.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not the slightest objection so that the matter which is the special order shall come up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the proceedings under the Anthony rule will not terminate until two o'clock.

Mr. LOGAN. While I am up I desire to say a word. I have kept as silent as possible, because it is very annoying to me to stand up in my condition. In reference to a board of appraisement, I think it is proper that it should be done, and I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Georgia, who thinks it is not necessary, that it sometimes occurs that where the Government—for nearly everybody thinks it is all right to take anything the Government has; I do not speak of this instance, but generally speaking—has no appraisement the property of the Government goes for almost nothing. There is no disposition on the part of persons appointed to appraise such property to put too high a price on it. Where the Government has the right to sell and desires to sell, it is no particular advantage to the Government to get a higher price than the thing is worth. It does not enrich the Government, but it does prevent combinations from getting property for almost nothing. I do not think it would interfere at all with the sale of this property to have such a board appointed, and I think it a very proper thing. I think it always ought to be the rule in the sale of all Government property. Any land in a State belonging to the Government that is to be disposed of ought to be appraised, and then held by the Government if that appraisement is not paid. If this property at Savannah is valuable property, as doubtless it is, a fair appraisement will give it a fair sale, and persons who want it can purchase it, and there will be no disposition to give it an unfair appraisement. So I hope the Senate will adopt either the amendment or the substitute, it is immaterial which, because one is about as broad as the other. I think that is the proper thing to be done.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The main object in all dispositions of public property is to secure to the Government the best possible price that it will bring. Where a property is extensive, lying within the limits of a city, I have known it to be divided up into small parcels as provided for by the amendment of the Senator from Michigan; but I have known property to be sold without such a survey. This is all a matter of discretion with the disposing power. If it is thought the property will bring a larger sum to the Government by dividing it into small parcels so as to place its subdivisions at the command of people of small means, it may be wise to adopt that amendment. If it is thought, in view of its situation and the purposes for which it can be employed, that it will bring as round a sum if bought entirely by one individual, it is sold in bulk. Indeed, I think in many cases the dividing up might operate to depreciate the value of the property. A person desiring a large property for a hotel, as suggested by my friend from Georgia, would not want to go into competition with every little bidder who might want thirty feet to erect a cabin upon. This is a mere matter of detail, which I suppose the Senator from Georgia ought to be better able to judge of than any one else in view of his familiarity with the situation of the property.

Mr. BROWN. I simply want to say that I have no doubt this property will bring a higher price sold as a whole than it will if it is cut up into small lots. I think the only prospect of a liberal price is from the company that desire to erect a hotel upon it, and if a small lot is bid off by some one else they would then cease to bid and it would all have to be sold in small lots. It is in a portion of the city, in the residence part, where it will not bring as much in small lots as it would if it was in the part of the city where stores and business houses are. I am entirely satisfied that we shall get less for it if surveyed and sold in small lots. Therefore, I prefer that the Senator from Michigan should not press his amendment. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas if he will make this addition to it: if the officers appraise it at a higher price than it will bring after being advertised for public sale, after being held for twelve months it shall be again advertised and offered for sale; otherwise it may never be sold if parties did not on the day of sale offer as much as it was appraised at. I should like to have it sold and see if any one would bid as much as the amount at which the Army officers may appraise the property.

Mr. PLUMB. The only point about the appraisement when you have a public sale is that it prevents the possibility of combinations, whereby the Government might be totally at the mercy of local bidders. The Senator from Georgia has intimated, himself, as much by saying that probably no one except a certain company would care to purchase the property.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Permit me to ask a question.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Would it not accomplish the same purpose if the Secretary of War were given authority to reject all bids by which, in his judgment, a fair price was not offered? That is sometimes done instead of an appraisement.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is well to guard the rights of the public by some provision of that kind. Sometimes it is provided by appraisement, and sometimes it is left to the head of the Department within whose jurisdiction the property lies to reject all bids if in his judgment the property has not brought a fair price.

Mr. PLUMB. But the Secretary of War would have no basis on which to form a judgment except such as he might receive through a board of appraisers. I think it would be depositing with the Secretary of War not merely a very large power, but a power he would not care to exercise. It would be better to have an appraisement by a board of officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. Does the Senator from Kansas accept the modification?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWN. I accept that amendment. We will do the best we can with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN MITCHELL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 128) for the relief of Warren Mitchell.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is adversely reported. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Anthony rule still in operation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is until two o'clock, being extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Warren Mitchell case, which perhaps could not be disposed of in this time, may be disposed of by the Senate without going to the foot of the Calendar. I suggest that it stand for consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. BECK. I prefer that, so that we have it disposed of one way or the other by the Senate. It will not take long, and if it holds its place to-morrow morning it will be better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An adverse report is regarded as an objection.

Mr. INGALLS. I feel authorized to say that that bill cannot be disposed of in the morning hour if it is seriously pressed by those who have it in charge. I hope it may not be allowed to stand on the Calendar with that understanding.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me to make a suggestion, that bill was adversely reported.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. So that there cannot be technically anybody having it in charge in the ordinary sense. My own impression is that on reading the adverse report of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON,] which is a very clear and able one, it will so strike the Senate that they will be able to dispose of the bill without long delay.

Mr. INGALLS. The Supreme Court have passed on the case, and this is an attempt to reverse that decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been passed over.

MARY E. AMBRESTER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 144) granting a pension to Mary E. Ambrester; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Ambrester, widow of Jerome Ambrester, late a private in Company G, First Maryland Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. LOGAN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 201) for the relief of John S. Logan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is reported adversely. It will be passed over.

CAROLINE MOTT.

The bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott, late of Alburgh, Vermont, deceased, $2,707.92, being the amount found due and allowed to Danford Mott in his lifetime by the Court of Claims for expenses incurred in defending a suit brought against him for acts done as an officer of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, January 11, 1882:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott, have considered the same and submit the following report thereon:

Danford Mott, the husband of the present claimant, was the deputy collector of customs for the district of Vermont on the 7th of November, 1838, and for some time prior and subsequent thereto. On the day last named and prior to that time civil commotions, commonly called the patriot war, existed in Canada. These commotions had arrayed a portion of the people of the province in arms against the government, and citizens of the United States along the Canadian frontier sympathized strongly with the insurgents and furnished them aid in men and munitions of war. Congress, by act of March 10, 1838, prohibited the interference of the people of the United States in the civil war in Canada, and both the President of the United States and the governor of Vermont issued proclamations, respectively, enjoining upon the citizens of the United States obedience to the law.

A vessel called the General McComb, belonging to one De Clancey Stoughton, and laden with arms for the insurgents in Canada, was seized at Rouse's Point, on Lake Champlain, by the officers of the United States Army stationed at that point, and the arms taken out of the vessel. The vessel itself was moored near the landing in charge of the Government troops, and during the night a violent gale of wind cast it ashore and wrecked it. Danford Mott, husband of the claimant, in his capacity of deputy collector for the district of Vermont, at the request of the officers of the United States Army, and in pursuance of his official duty, had to some extent participated in the seizure of the vessel. For this, Stoughton, the owner of the vessel, sued him in the State court of Vermont, and a long and bitterly contested lawsuit ensued. The suit began in 1839, and ended in 1856. It was taken to the supreme court of the State four times, and there were ten trials by jury in the inferior court. The several decisions of the supreme court in the case are reported in the thirteenth, fifteenth, and twenty-fifth Vermont Reports.

The popular feeling was much inflamed against Mott, and a law in aid of the prosecution was enacted by the Legislature of Vermont. The suit, however, finally resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendant, Mott, the husband of the present claimant. In defending this suit for seventeen years in the inferior and superior courts of the State of Vermont, Mott employed two lawyers, Charles Adams, of Burlington, and H. R. Beardsley, of Saint Albans. Upon their application, the district attorneys of the United States in office during the pendency of the litigation, by direction of the proper department, rendered their professional assistance. The Government, also, upon the application of Mott, ordered certain Army officers cognizant of the facts attending the seizure of the vessel to attend the trial and give evidence. Upon the termination of the suit, Mott, by his petition, duly verified, made a claim upon the Government in the Court of Claims for indemnity for his expenses in defending the suit. In such petition he claimed the amount of costs taxed in his favor, and for which he recovered judgment in the State court, but which he had been unable to collect by reason of the insolvency of De Clancey Stoughton, the plaintiff. He claims, also, the amount of fees paid his counsel. A full bill of particulars of these several matters was filed with his petition in the Court of Claims. The aggregate amount of his claim was $2,829.92. Of this sum $1,505.28 was for counsel fees, and the remaining $1,324.64 for costs recovered in the State court, expenditures, and personal services in and about the court.

In 1860 the case was tried in the Court of Claims, Daniel Ratcliffe, assistant solicitor, appearing for the United States. At that time the Court of Claims had not authority to render a judgment. It could simply find the amount the claimant was entitled to recover, and report such amount to Congress for its action. Upon the trial of the case in the Court of Claims, on the 2d of April, 1860, Judge Hughes of that court delivered the opinion. The proceedings in the case are set forth at length in volume 5 of the Reports of the Court of Claims, first session, Thirty-sixth Congress. The court found that the claimant, Danford Mott, was entitled to recover of the United States the sum of $2,707.92. A bill in accordance with this finding was reported from the Court of Claims to the House of Representatives May 2, 1860, and by order of the House of Representatives committed to the Committee of the Whole House and ordered to be printed. Danford Mott died soon after that time. The war of 1861 coming on, nothing further was done with the claim at that time. The claimant, Caroline Mott, is the widow of Danford Mott, and has been duly appointed administratrix of his estate by the proper court in the State of Vermont.

The ground on which the Court of Claims found in favor of Mott was that of an implied contract on the part of the Government to protect and indemnify their officers and servants while acting in the proper discharge of their duties as officers of the Government. The Court of Claims, after full and elaborate hearing, having found in favor of Mott, your committee would be disposed to recommend the payment of the claim upon the authority of the finding of that court alone, but after a careful examination of the case we are satisfied that the court was fully warranted upon the facts and the law in finding as it did.

The bill provides for the payment of interest on the amount found due the claimant by the Court of Claims from the date of such allowance. The rule of the Government is, not to pay interest unless there is an express agreement to that effect. There was no such agreement in this case.

The committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out so much thereof as provides for the payment of interest, and when so amended, that it do pass.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendment to strike out the last clause, as follows:

And also, there shall be paid the interest on said sum from the time of the allowance thereof by the Court of Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. Interest is stricken out.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The committee recommended that amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF MEMBERS AND EMPLOYÉS.

The bill (S. No. 841) to provide for the payment of the salaries and compensation of members of the Houses of Congress and their officers and employés in certain contingencies was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides whenever any appropriation made for the payment of the salaries of Senators, Members, and Delegates in Congress, or the officers and employés of both or either of the Houses thereof, or for the expenses of the same, or any committees thereof, cannot be lawfully disbursed by or through the officers specially charged with such disbursements, such disbursements may be made for the purposes named in the appropriations by the Treasurer of the United States, who shall take proper vouchers therefor and charge such disbursements against such appropriations; and the accounts therefor are to be audited and passed or rejected, as the law may require, in the same manner that similar accounts are or may be required by law to be audited and passed or rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill is intended to guard against a contingency like that which arose in consequence of the death of the Secretary of the Senate during the recess of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY RECORD OF WICKLIFFE COOPER.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel, United States Army.

Mr. INGALLS. That had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the joint resolution passed over without prejudice? It was reported by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. SEWELL.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It went over under objection; it was not passed without prejudice.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator from Kansas, who interposed the objection, to let it go without prejudice, as the Senator from New Jersey is absent sick.

Mr. INGALLS. That is entirely agreeable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the joint resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library.

Mr. VOORHEES. It will be hardly possible to consider this bill during the morning hour, and I ask that it be passed over without prejudice for the present, and at some future day, very soon, I shall ask the Senate to consider it at a more opportune time than in the morning hour. Let it be passed over now without any prejudice to its being taken up at any time hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

GEORGE G. SNYDER.

The bill (S. No. 42) for the relief of George G. Snyder, was considered as in Committe of the Whole.

The preamble recites that by the fifteenth section of an act of Congress approved September 9, 1850, entitled "An act to establish a Territorial government for Utah," it was provided "that when the lands in the said Territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the Government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, sections 16 and 36 in each township in said Territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said Territory and in the States and Territories hereafter to be erected out of them;" that George G. Snyder did, in 1869, settle upon an unsurveyed tract of land in that Territory, upon which he has since resided and made valuable improvements, which tract, when surveyed, was found to be the east half of the northwest quarter and west half of the northeast quarter of section 16, township 2 south, range 4 east; and that those tracts are not subject to entry under the homestead or other laws owing to the reservation created by the organic act of the Territory. The bill therefore proposes to authorize George G. Snyder to enter the east half of northwest quarter and west half of northeast quarter of section 16, township 2 south, range 4 east, Utah Territory, as a homestead, under the provisions of the homestead law; and upon showing full compliance with the provisions of that law he shall be entitled to have and receive a patent therefor, and thereupon other lands in equal amount in lieu thereof shall be selected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the uses and purposes expressed in section 15 of the act of Congress approved September 9, 1850.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

INDIAN TRADERS.

The bill (S. No. 114) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read:

Any person other than an Indian of the full blood who shall attempt to reside in the Indian country, or on any Indian reservation, as a trader, or to introduce goods, or to trade therein, without such license, shall forfeit all merchandise offered for sale to the Indians or found in his possession, and shall moreover be liable to a penalty of $500.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is none.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill was prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and transmitted to the Senate by the President. A reference to the Revised Statutes will show in a moment what the bill proposes to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the form of a proviso, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to any person residing among or trading with the Choctawa, Cherokees, Chickasaws, Creeks, or Seminoles, commonly called the five civilized tribes, residing in said Indian country, and belonging to the Union Agency therein: And provided further, That no white person shall be employed as a clerk by any Indian trader, except such as trade with said five civilized tribes, unless first licensed so to do by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under and in conformity to regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. The title ought to be amended by the addition of the words "in relation to Indian traders." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of two o'clock having arrived, to which the morning hour was extended, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order, which is the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 59.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 59) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army, the question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD. As that bill is short I ask that its text be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. By way of amendment I offer the following: I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment of the committee which must be disposed of before the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert. After the bill is perfected that amendment will be in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read for information.

Mr. BAYARD. Perhaps the Senate had better pass on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the amendment of the committee be passed upon.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be read for information.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter there shall be paid to every President of the United States who shall have served or may hereafter serve in said office, and who shall have retired from the same, a sum annually during his life equal to one-quarter part of the annual salary paid him while in said office: Provided, however, That said sum shall not be paid to any President while holding said office by any re-election thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending committee amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the bill the Committee on Military Affairs propose to add:

Grade of General, to be placed on the retired list with pay accordingly. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware now moves an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That hereafter there shall be paid to every President of the United States who shall have served or may hereafter serve in said office, and who shall have retired from the same, a sum annually during his life equal to one-quarter part of the annual salary paid him while in said office: Provided, however, That said sum shall not be paid to any President while holding said office by any re-election thereto.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, this bill upon its face presents that which it would seem ungracious for any American to oppose. It seems to me now that there is no need for additional recognition of the eminent military services of General Grant. They are already recognized, not denied, but everywhere accepted, approved by the American people. Still I am not disposed to interpose objections to further demonstrations of respect, honorable to their recipient, entirely so to those who offer them; but this is a law-making body. This bill proposes in its terms to suspend "for this purpose only" a general law of the United States. Now, what is that law? As early as 1861 the policy was adopted of allowing officers of the Army who had served well and faithfully for a long time, who had been disabled by wounds or disease, from active service to be provided with an honorable and fairly remunerative retirement. It was a wise, beneficent act. It has been followed by amendments. It was intended for a class of military officers and for that class only—officers in the Army of the United States and none others. By section 1258 of the Revised Statutes the number of these beneficiaries honorably to be retired is limited to three hundred. I understand that since the enactment of that law another hundred has been added to the list by some amendment to an appropriation bill which has not as yet found its way into the reprint of the Revised Statutes. So that there is now a maximum of four hundred officers of the Army who may be upon this list, although by the terms of the law "any less number to be allowed thereon may be fixed by the President at his discretion."

This general law for the retirement of officers who have seen long service or have been disabled, not only is a relief to them, but it is a relief for their juniors in rank and service who in a time of profound peace have but two avenues by which they are to escape from a prolonged and painful retention in their former rank. The death of a superior officer will create a vacancy; the placing of a superior officer upon the retired list will create a vacancy, for section 1257 provides:

When any officer in the line of promotion is retired from active service, the next officer in rank shall be promoted to his place, according to the established rules of the service; and the same rule of promotion shall be applied, successively, to the vacancies consequent upon such retirement.

Therefore two benefits are accomplished by placing an officer upon the retired list. He enjoys the repose that long and faithful service has won for him, and his junior in rank has a way opened to his legal and regular advancement "according to the established rules of the service." Now it is proposed by an instance of especial personal favor to invade those rules, to place in the way of just promotion one more obstacle taken from civil life for this purpose. As I said before——

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BAYARD. Pardon me. Let me state my own case, and then I will hear my friend with great pleasure.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to discuss it at all.

Mr. BAYARD. I am taking the text of the law and discussing it. I do not propose to argue this case upon the question of personal merit. I would be second to none in a fair and generous acknowledgment of all that is due to the eminent individual named in this bill. He needs from me no praise. He has it to-day in abundance unquestioned and I doubt not thoroughly deserved. But I do deny the justice or the wise policy of invading the well-established rules of the service and bringing from civil life any individual, however distinguished, at the cost of many other members of the military service who in obscurity from the public observation but not the less in faithful and dutiful endeavor of their duty are performing and have performed well and steadily their duty during all the time the proposed recipient of this special favor has been enjoying other honors and profits and the ease and emoluments of civil life and leisurely and luxurious amusement.

I hold in my hand a letter, received by me the other day from an officer of the United States Army on the frontier. His is but one case and I will read his own statement:

I was appointed to West Point in 1855. I graduated in 1860 (the course was then five years.) I was appointed a brevet second lieutenant in the Fourth Infantry, and the next year promoted to the Eighth Infantry. I was appointed a captain in June, 1864, since which time I have been in that rank, seventeen years and seven months; there are at present twenty-nine captains on the list above me, two captains only were promoted to majorities last year. At that rate of promotion I would not be a major for fourteen years.

That is seventeen and fourteen—nearly thirty-two years for this officer in the grade of captain.

I would state that I was in the field during the entire late war, I was wounded twice and three times brevetted for gallantry in action, as the records of the War Department will show. Since the war I have served on the frontier, most of the time in command of posts. When I left Arizona three years ago with my regiment I was in command of Fort Apache, (the scene of the recent Indian difficulties,) the largest post in the Department of Arizona, (a lieutenant-colonel's command,) and if anything can be more hopeless than my case is now with reference to promotion I would like to know what it is. I would also state that there are one hundred and five captains of infantry who have served over fifteen years as captains.

That is enough. He refers to other cases. In the bill before us is a proposition to put one other and obstructive step between that man and his very slow and well-deserved promotion.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator right there allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, though I would rather get through my own statement of the case first.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to interrupt the argument of the Senator, but I desire to know what he means by this being something between this man and promotion? I want to understand what the Senator means by that.

Mr. BAYARD. I mean to say this, that if the retired list be filled either by the decision of the President or by reaching the maximum prescribed by law, there can be no promotion except for vacancies caused by death.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator certainly ought to understand that there is no such thing as promotion on the retired list. The promotion is on the active list.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not misunderstand myself or the Senator either; but I am aware of this: that whenever an officer is placed on the retired list the opportunity for promotion occurs upon the regular and active list of the Army. He is retired from active service and there is a rise in the grade so much. Each man put on the retired list gives the man below him on the active list a step in rank.

Mr. LOGAN. I will only say that the passage of this bill will not affect the retired list; it will not reduce it a particle. This bill provides that all laws which would prohibit this are repealed for this express purpose; it does not add to or take from the retired list at all. This is a special act providing for a repeal for this purpose; so that it does not affect the retired list.

Mr. BAYARD. Then all I say is this act will not go into effect. There is but one retired list. What is that? The list known to the law. Of what does it consist? Of a certain number of officers and no more. Now I say if you fill that list by appointments from civil life, you do stop the most probable avenue for promotion of officers now on the active list who may be under the rank of the officer retired. You can have but so many on it. Therefore you do just to that extent prevent the advancement of men of a lower rank than the officer whom you choose to put on the retired list. If you fill the list with persons from civil life, you will cut off the most rapid method of promotion known to our present law, as I understand the facts to be.

But, Mr. President, that is a question affecting the policy of this special act, which I think a work of injustice. It is special legislation; it is an invasion of established and general law; it is an act of favoritism; it is destroying that equality which is equity in the advancement of men by promoting them by seniority of service; and for that reason I think it is objectionable. But now I will state to the Senate why I have offered a substitute.

Long before this bill was introduced by the Senator from Illinois, it is well known to the country that propositions were made to relieve the supposed pecuniary necessities of the distinguished citizen to whom this special bill relates, by individual and voluntary subscription. Some of his friends did me the honor and favor to ask my judgment upon that subject. I gave my opinion frankly, and because it was asked, and said that I should prefer as an American, and I could not doubt that the individual in question would himself personally prefer, that any emolument which reached him should be devoid of the slightest suggestion of personal beneficence or gratuity, that therefore there should be in a regular and befitting manner decent and proper provision made to prevent any inconvenience to an individual to whom the public had incurred so great a debt, and that I, for one, was willing to frame and bring into the Senate and support by my vote and by my speech, a bill that should give to any man who had held the office of Chief Magistrate of the American people, such a retiring pension during his life as should secure to him that pecuniary income essential to personal independence. I not only considered it a matter of justice to the individual, of fair return to him, but I considered it then and do now as a matter of protection to the American people. Anything that tends to give a man executing the high trust of public power, pecuniary independence which means so much of independence of every nature, is certainly to be desired. He holds the balance of great power in his hands; he constitutes in his own person and within his sole discretion an independent branch of this Government. His powers are great indeed. They may often be required to be exercised in the face of fierce and violent opposition, of adverse and unjust criticism, in the face of misunderstanding and, possibly, may subject him to temporary obloquy most painful and most unjust and which may not pass away until long after he has been removed from this scene of action. Therefore it is that I would not wish to see any man who has held and fearlessly exercised such power compelled to go back into the personal struggles of daily life and compete for his livelihood among the great mass of his fellow-citizens. It may be that the very integrity and independence of his course may have led him to court the disfavor of power, of wealth, of those who control the gifts of society, and I would, if it were in my power, place him beyond the reach of the displeasure of any man or any party in this country.

Nay, sir, there is something further. Eminence in political station brings with it many disadvantages. Its very social attraction compels a pecuniary expenditure which many men are unable to meet. I do not propose indelicately to examine or to refer to the individual condition of the various citizens who have reached this high station or none of those who could at present be affected by it. I only know that in the past we have had some very sad illustrations of men retiring from the Presidency to die in pecuniary embarrassment and insolvency. The very honor and honesty and rigid performance of their great duties, the very fact that they were debarred from those opportunities of personal gain left free to almost every other citizen, had kept them poor, and their poverty was a badge of honor to them. But it behooves the American people if they would rescue republics from that proverbial stigma of ingratitude which they do so easily, and which, in my judgment, they would be wise to do, they will see to it that while he lives any man who has served them with clean hands in this high office shall not be exposed to inconveniences and sufferings and privations that are the attendants of poverty and which would be all the more painful to him because he has been made conspicuous by his office and because those effects of poverty which a man may more easily conceal in private life he will feel it all the more difficult to conceal from curious and probably unfriendly eyes.

Therefore it is that I consider that this proposition now offered by me is a matter of justice to retiring Presidents. I consider it a matter of protection to the American people. I hold it to be a matter of decency and propriety. We have adopted this idea in regard to our judicial system in order to render our judges still more secure in the exercise of that independence of fear or favor so essential to honest judgment. We not only have provided that their salaries shall be for life and shall not be diminished during their term, but by a beneficent provision for the last twelve years we have given to each judge who reaches the age of seventy, after ten years' service, his full pay for the residue of his life. Why should not this be adopted in regard to ex-Presidents?

In 1877 General Grant retired from the Presidency. At that time he was the only ex-President alive. Millard Fillmore had died in 1873. There was no ex-President alive in this country from 1873 until General Grant retired in 1877. To-day there are two. The list never can be long; but whether long or short, and wholly without regard to the supposed merits or demerits of the individual, I respectfully submit to the Senate that it is wise to say to a man who is to exercise in his own person and solely in his own discretion the entire powers of a separate branch of this Government, "There awaits you certainly at the end of your term a competent provision against poverty and pecuniary embarrassment." Can it be denied that such a prospect would fortify a man against improper influences and strengthen him in an independent and virtuous course of conduct?

The amount proposed by this amendment is modest enough. It gives but one-fourth of the annual pay at present prescribed by law. It is about the same for the ex-President that it is for the retiring Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court. And, sir, I can only say that it is to my mind a more respectful, and I cannot but believe it would be a more welcome manner, of providing for and of paying respect to the distinguished individual mentioned in the special act proposed by the Senator from Illinois, than to place him upon the retired list of a branch of the service from which he deliberately resigned some thirteen years ago. It was not the expiration of a term; it was not the act of God; it was the voluntary act of the individual choosing deliberately the paths of civil life and party elevation. It was by his own act; and therefore it is that I believe it wiser; I believe it is preferable, viewed from any point, that we should now take this action by general law to make provision for the officials of the highest grade known to our Constitution, instead of by special act overthrowing the established rules of the Army, depriving those who have remained in it of their legitimate expectations of promotion, and enacting a special law for personal reasons which does invade unjustly a general law meant for an entirely different class—the regular officers of the United States Army.

I do not know what the pleasure of the Senate may be in regard to my proposition of pensioning ex-Presidents. It will embrace General Grant in its provisions. I believe there is but one other who will be affected by it at present. The measure was brought into the Senate during the life-time of the late President Garfield, and I may say that I knew enough of his affairs to make me feel anxious that he should not have upon his retirement from what I then hoped would be his full term of office, the specter of poverty awaiting him at its close.

I believe this measure proposed by me is founded upon a sound, wise public policy. I believe it is the proper mode of dealing with the subject now before the Senate, that it should be effected by general and not by special laws. There is something invidious in special legislation. You grant to one, and withhold from another; you discriminate as between your citizens; and yet proclaim that the foundation of a republic and one of its greatest claims to honor is equality before the law. That is violated in the proposition of the Senator from Illinois and I submit to him and to the rest of my associates in this Chamber that the measure I propose to substitute for his, accomplishing all in the way of generous and fair pecuniary provision, an implication of respect and gratitude is just as strong in the general bill as it would be in a special act.

I do not care to detain the Senate longer. I found this suggestion of mine met by a portion of the public press as having a sinister intent. Intent, after all, is very easily imputed and a public man must learn to disregard imputations of intent. I can only say that before this bill to place General Grant on the retired list of the Army was mentioned, before it ever saw daylight, I had committed myself freely and in writing to the measure which I now propose and which I trust may meet the favor of the Senate. It was not for him alone; it was not for any other individual; it had a better and broader basis of action than mere personal reward or recognition; it was based on what I consider a sound public policy, which should both influence and protect men charged with the execution of the trust of power, to execute it in a high, pure, and independent spirit, for their own honor and as a measure of safety to the American people.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask whether there is not a constitutional question involved in this subject. The Senator will remember the phraseology of the Constitution in regard to the compensation of the President. He spoke of the enlargement of the salary of the judges. There is no prohibition——

Mr. BAYARD. The diminution, not the enlargement.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No diminution of the salaries of judges can take place; they may be increased; but the Constitution with respect to the salary of the President goes a little further and provides that it shall neither be diminished nor increased during his term of office. The suggestion I make is that the thought of the framers of the Constitution in fixing a limitation at both ends may have been that the amount allowed during the term was to be a full compensation for his services as President during his term. In the case of the judges, however, they left Congress at liberty to increase their salaries, but they did not leave Congress at liberty to increase the salary of the President during the term of his office. They intended that he should have a fixed sum which should neither be increased nor diminished during the term of his public service. This language I suppose was not accidental. I merely draw the Senator's attention to the difference in the phraseology.

Mr. BAYARD. I can see nothing in this phraseology that calls upon me to look into the Constitution on this point. There is neither diminution nor enlargement in the salary of the President by this measure. It simply provides for a person who has been President a sum much smaller, that one-fourth of the salary to which he was entitled as President shall be continued during his life. It is not an increase or diminution, nor does it come to him during the term. It is a prolongation of an allowance.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I was very glad the other day to hear it announced from both sides of the Senate that this was not a political question. It is a question about which there are, however, very decided differences of opinion as they have been expressed upon this floor. I do not agree with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in the policy of pensioning all persons who have held the position of President of the United States. I think we are carrying the principle of pensioning civilians a little too far. The fact that a man has occupied at a salary of $10,000 a year a position on the Supreme Bench for a great many years, which he ardently sought, and which he would never retire from as long as he was able to hold it, is not a very strong reason why he should have a pension of $10,000 a year for the rest of his life. Nor do I know why a distinction should be drawn between a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, who has devoted his life to his duties on the bench, and a judge of the supreme court of a State, who has devoted faithfully and laboriously the better part of his life to his duties as a supreme judge. In each case they take the office because they desire it. They get, in the case of the judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, a competent salary, and there are not very strong reasons, I think, for a pension in such a case.

Now, it is proposed to extend this principle further and to embrace every person who has held the office of President of the United States. No matter what his age may be, whether he was nominated by an accident, or how he got into the office, or how he conducted himself, or how long we have to pay him the pension, he must have $12,500 a year for the remainder of his life after he retires from the Presidency. We are about to establish the principle of pensioning the widows of all deceased Presidents. I suppose the next step will be to pension members of the Cabinet and their widows. If it is said that a gentleman who has held the exalted position of a member of the Cabinet ought to be pensioned the remainder of his life when he retires, why not pension a Senator who has been here for a very long time, as my friend from Delaware has; or if he has remained here as long a time as my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] he would have a still stronger claim. It may be said that he had spent all the best days of his life in the public service, and he ought to have a pension. I do not see where the stopping place is. I think the whole matter of civil pensions, or pensions to persons in civil life, is of very questionable policy.

It is not so, however, in the case of the military. When a country is at war, no matter whether it be a civil war or a foreign war, the great body of the soldiery who go in and do the fighting take their lives in their hands and risk them in defense of their country for a mere nominal compensation during the period, and they and the generals and other officers who command them, who also take their lives in their hands and go into the field, have a very different claim upon the people to pensions from the claim set up by a civilian. I am, therefore, very well content to see liberal pensions granted to officers and soldiers who have rendered distinguished service to the country, when I am not willing to see it done in the case of officers in civil life.

It has been the usage of all great nations which have had great wars to render distinguished honors to the heroes of those wars. The judgment of mankind has approved it. Whether you call it hero-worship or whatever you may call it, the people of all civilized nations and of all savage nations do it. I do not profess to be entirely free from that principle which is sometimes called hero-worship. I do admire and entertain the very highest respect for the man who has shown himself a hero in war, because he exhibits high qualities that are worthy to be admired.

If we confederates had succeeded in the late civil war and it had been my fortune to-day to have stood in a confederate congress, that government having been established, and if the question had come before that congress whether we should place Robert E. Lee or Joseph E. Johnston upon the retired list, had they occupied just the position that General Grant occupies to-day, I should not have hesitated one moment to vote that distinction to either with the attendant emoluments. Why? Because they were grand leaders; they were brave and magnanimous; they were powerful on the field; they were heroes; and because I should have held that they had rendered distinguished services to their country. In that case the bounds of the confederacy would have been the boundary of my country and they would have been the heroes of my country. The confederates failed, however, and instead of the supposed case, I stand to-day as one of the representatives of a State in this Union in the Congress of the United States, and we having failed, and the Union having been restored, and we having returned to our allegiance to that Union, as I stand to-day, the heroes on the Union side become the heroes of my country, and it is my duty here to vote the same tribute and the same honor to them that I would have voted, in the case supposed, to Lee or Johnston, had the confederacy been established.

Therefore, I shall vote in this case for the pending measure. Last year I voted against a resolution to place General Grant upon the Army roll because, as I understood it then, it was very doubtful if the measure had passed whether he might not have been assigned to active duty and whether there might not have arisen conflicts between him and the present General of the Army as to who should hold that position. General Grant having retired and gone into politics for the time, and having been honored by the people of the United States with two elections to the Presidency, I would not vote to place him back upon the Army list where he could return to active command and interfere with the present General of the Army; I think it would be unjust to do it. But this proposition comes distinctly before us in the shape of placing him on the retired list. In other words, it is asked by his friends that we do him the honor to put him back on the list of the Army, where he so much distinguished himself and where he rendered such important service, and retire him with the common honors and the common pay that an officer of his rank thus retired receives. That meets my cordial assent. I believe it is proper to do it.

It has been said, however, that General Grant is at present a man of means; that he is not needing this salary. I do not know how that is, nor do I care. But I would ask those who make that objection if the widow of the late lamented President is not a lady of means. I am glad she is. The people of the United States did themselves honor in conferring upon her by private subscription the means to make her independent of pecuniary want. But will Senators refuse to vote a pension to Mrs. Garfield because she has means and because she is not in pecuniary want? I presume not.

It will be said probably that that falls within a rule. How long has that rule been established? Mrs. Lincoln has a pension; but there has been no rule heretofore that I am aware of to pension all the widows of deceased Presidents. If we make that rule now Mrs. Garfield will come within it. If we do not make it, the presumption is that the pension will be voted to her anyway. It cannot be said that it will be done because she needs the money, but there will be other reasons that Senators and the people represented by Senators will assign for that act of liberality or of justice, or whatever you may call it, to the widow of the late President.

Therefore, the question whether General Grant has means ought not, in my opinion, to enter into this discussion. I would retire him because he forms an exception to general rules. I do not believe in making too many exceptions, and there is some point in the argument of the Senator from Delaware that you should not retire General Grant because it might possibly displace some captain who could not be retired if the full legal number has been retired before his case is reached. That contingency, however, it seems to me, is remote. It is not at all probable that the fact that we place General Grant to-day upon the retired list and permit him to draw from the Treasury of the United States the three-quarters pay that a retired officer is entitled to will ever interfere with the retirement of a major, or a captain, or any other person in the Army. It is not at all probable that it will, but if it should I would still say that there are reasons in General Grant's case that do not exist in the case of a captain, or major, or other officer of the Army.

I know some persons have discussed doubtingly whether General Grant was a great military commander. Usually the best test in a case of that character is to look at the success of the commander. From Donelsonville to Appomattox victory usually perched upon his standards when he commanded. I thought it unfortunate at the time for it was against my side. He had the honor of commanding, and ably commanding the Federal Army at the time when the immortal Lee surrendered to him—a shattered army, it is true, but one of the bravest and best that ever was upon this planet. The man to whom Robert E. Lee tendered his sword in surrender is entitled to my respect and the respect of southern men as a military chieftain and hero. I will accord to him all the honor that I can to any military hero; and I do not dishonor the confederate cause when I do it.

I think it is a mistake to-day for the late confederates to vote against this measure. I know some of them will do it as honestly as I vote for it. I do not question motives, but I honestly think it is bad policy, and I think it is better not to do it; therefore I shall vote the other way.

It has been said, however, that the salary is one of considerable amount; that the people are already taxed very heavily, and that we ought to be very cautious how we continue to put on burdens. There are many places where that admonition can properly be made, where thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands are drawn from the Treasury for objects much less worthy, and we hear but little about them. So far as the Southern people are concerned I do not think they will feel the mere pittance of taxation that will fall to their share in paying the salary of General Grant in retirement.

It is said we have made sacrifices already, and a great many of them. So we have; but the people who could sacrifice as much as we did in defeat, and do it with as much apparent cheerfulness, can at least add as the crowning point this little additional sacrifice.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask my friend, the Senator from Georgia, one question in connection with his opinion as to the duty of the ex-confederates on this floor?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask him if he does not think that it would have been a very reasonable exercise of magnanimity on the part of a Republican Senate to have removed the disabilities of the young man who applied here this morning to have his disabilities removed?

Mr. BROWN. I will answer my friend with great cheerfulness. I think it a proper exercise of magnanimity to remove the disabilities of everybody who is under disability who will ask for it, as the rest of us asked for it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether the progress of that case, as reported by the committee, was not interrupted by an amendment from the other side of the Chamber, offered by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] involving the repeal of a general statute?

Mr. BROWN. That is my recollection of it, sir. Otherwise I think on a vote the relief would have been granted. I thought I saw that in the countenances of Republican Senators.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota and the Senater from Georgia if it would not be a very graceful piece of magnanimity on the part of the Republican Senate to remove the disabilities of all those people contemplated by the substitute? When they are talking about magnanimity, it is a two-edged sword, Mr. President.
